I find here and there persons who give a tithe, or tenth, of their income to the Lord. I think I may say of each one, that I know that they are religious men and prosperous in temporal affairs. Such liberality indicates the prosperity of Zion all along the line. May their numbers be a thousand times as many as they are! We have had many refreshing seasons at our quarterly meetings. We feel much encouraged.

Centenary is doing well. There is a gracious revival and influence among the students. It is a good and safe place to educate the boys.

Fraternally, C. M'DONALD.

JACKSON, La., March 5, 1889.

COMMON SENSE IN RELIGION.—How much contentment and true happiness is missed by the true lack of common sense manifested by the majority of people in their every-day living. It is a rare thing to find a person, who is earnest and sensible, and who does not feel compelled to do as others do, who has the moral courage to depart from the rules and conventionalisms of society, and to face boldly and with true dignity the false judgments and even ridicule of those who suspect him to be ignorant of the same, because he does not conform to them strictly enough to meet their approbation.

What people say and what people think are often more weighty considerations in deciding upon one's manner of living than his own interests, absurd as this may seem when one reflects upon it. That this is true of many Christians as well as of people of the world, is greatly to be deplored, and it is time that more of the simplicity and common sense of the religion of Christ were made manifest in our homes, in society and in the church.—From "Here and There a Leaf."

Sunday-School Lesson.

LESSON XII.—March 24.

BLIND BARTIMEUS.

Mark x, 41l-52.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Thou Son of David, have mercy on me.—Mark x. 48.

TIME.—A. D. 29. Shortly before the crucifixion. It is uncertain whether the visit to the house of Zaccheus took place immediately before or immediately after the events of the lesson.

PARALLEL PASSAGES.—Matt. xx, 29-34; Luke xviii, 35-43; xix, 1.

46. They came to Jericho—Jericho was a Levitical city, and hence the residence of a great many priests; its position as the center of an exceptionally productive district, and also of the import and export trade between the two sides of the Jordan, made it, also, a city of publicans. It had much the same place in Southern Palestine as Capernaum—the center of the trade between the seacoast and the northern interior, as far as Damascus—held in Galilee. The transit to and fro of so much wealth brought with it proportionate work and harvest for the farmers of the revenue. A great number of people—"And a great crowd," literally. Followed nigh. This crowd was probably composed of people going up to keep the Passover, and had been swollen by continual accessions from the towns and neighborhoods through which they passed. Blind Bartimeus—Notice the order of the words in the original, according to the highest critical authorities: The son of Timæus, Bartimeus, a blind beggar, sat by the way-side. It would seem that Bartimeus was well known at Jericho and afterward among Christians. This may explain why Mark and Luke speak of only one blind man, while Matthew speaks of two. Blindness is sperially frequent in the East. While in northern Europe there is only one blind in a thousand, in Egypt there is one in every hundred; indeed, very few persons there have their eyes quite healthy. The great changes of temperature at different times of the day, especially between day and night, cause inflammation of the eyes, as well as of other parts, both in Palestine and on the Lower Nile; while neglect and stupid prejudice, refusing or slighting remedies in the earliar stages, lead to blindness in many cases that otherwise might have been easily cured. Sat by the highway side begging—This had blind Bartimeus sat for years, and this was he sitting to-day. Evening was already approaching. The laborers would soon be returning from the fields, also those whom the cool of the day had tempted out for a walk. He would still wait a little while.

47. When he heard—St. Luke says, hearing the multitude, he asked what it meant. Sight is love's sense, not faith's sense. "Faith comes of hearing," saith the apostle, not by seeing. Jesus of Nazareth—The great prophet of Nazareth, the miracle-worker, whose name had become familiar to the sick and afflicted of Palestine. He was familiarly, and also contemptuously, known as the Nazarene; inhabitant of Nazareth. To the sufferers throughout the land that name would have a special interest. Its report would have a rapid circulation among the sons and daughters of affliction. They would somehow know more about him, and have more inclination for faith in him, than anybody else. He began to cry out . . . Jesus, thou Son of David That is, Messiah, or Christ. This was the name by which the Messiah was commonly known. He was the illustrious descendant of David, in whom the promises especially centered. It was a Jewish belief that one of the evidences of the Messiah would be his power to open the eyes of the blind; it was claimed, perhaps, from such passages as Isaiah xxix. 18; xlii, 7, and was certainly confirmed by the cures of the blind which Christ had already wrought, both in Galilee and in Judea. Have mercy on me—An acknowledgement of misery, unworthiness, and helplessness, as well as of strong confidence in Christ's ability and willingness to help him. The emphasis naturally falls on the word "me;" for Barthmeus, hearing "that it was Jesus," and knowing his own disadvantage from his blindness in the crowd, fears he may be overlooked.

48. Many charged him . . . his peace—Not because he called Jesus the Son of David, but because he presumed to intrude a private grief upon the King of Israel, when, as they supposed, he was going in triumph to Jerusalem to assume his throne and deliver the nation. Cried the more a great deal—Jesus was passing by—would soon be past—might never pass that way again. It was a short opportunity; it seemed likely it would be the only one.

49. Jesus stood still—Above the respectful clamor of the multitude the voice of earnest prayer reached the ear of Jesus. To this cry of his "Jesus stood still" arrested, as ever, by the cry of need. Commanded him to be called—Let the guilty, the empty, the tempted, the hungry, the naked, he of good comfort, for he calls them to be pardoned, to be supplied, to be succored, to be filled, to be clothed, to have all that done for them which their case calls for. They call—Then the obsequious throng alter their tone, and say to Bartimeus, who is so much the more prominent in the narrative that two of the Synoptists do not even mention his companion at all—"Be of good cheer; rise, he calleth thee."

50. Casting away his garment—That is, his outer garment; the one that was thrown loosely over him. He threw it off, full of joy at the prospect of being healed, and that he might run without impediment to Jesus. Came to Jesus—The blind man runs to Jesus without seeing him; so must we hasten to him in faith, though we see him not. He applies to the right spirit. He has no promise to trust in, but what he has heard calls up faith. He comes in faith. He comes earnestly. He comes defying opposition and hinderance. He casts away his garment in haste. Earnestness, coupled with confidence in Jesus—these are the feelings with which he comes.

51. What will thou The Lord's question . . . is, in part, an expression of his readiness to aid, a comment in act upon his own words, spoken a little while before, "The Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister," is, in part, intended to call out into still livelier exercise the faith and expectation of the petitioner. Lord, that I might receive my sight—Rabboni, that I may look up, or receive sight. Mark in the original gives the very word which Bartimeus uttered, the Aramaic word, Rabboni, which means my Master, or Lord, being more reverential than the usual rabbi.

52. Go thy way—Implying that his request was granted. Other blind men had called him the Son of David, but he had studied charged them not to make him known. No such charge is given to Bartimeus. He is permitted to follow him and glorify God as loudly, as amply, as he can. Thy faith hath made thee whole—The faith of this man was great; because, being blind, he could not see the miracles which Jesus did. "Faith came" to him "by hearing." He believed on the testimony and report of others; and so he inherited, in a manner, the promise of the Lord his Savior. Followed Jesus—Heretofore his blindness had confined him to one place; now, with the freedom of sight, he follows Jesus on his journey with the multitude to Jerusalem. Luke tells us that he followed, "glorifying God," and all the people seeing it "gave praise to God." They who are thus restored to sight should follow Jesus. They should follow him wherever he leads; they should follow him always; they should follow none else but him. He that can give sight to the blind can not lead us astray. He that can shed light in the beginning of our faith can enlighten our goings through all our pilgrimage, and down through the dark valley of the shadow of death.

Missionary.

Romanism in Brazil.

At the annual meeting of the missionaries of the Woman's Board of Missions in Brazil, this paper was ordered to be prepared, was read and unanimously adopted, with the accompanying resolution:

Resolved, That the paper presented by Miss Bruce be recorded with the signature of each member of the mission, and that Mrs. McGavock be requested to send copies of the same to the editors of all our church papers, asking a place in their columns.

In view of the great apathy apparent throughout the body of the evangelical church toward mission work in papal lands, and the dawning interest here and there expressed in the question, "Shall the church of Rome be regarded as an ally in evangelical work?" we desire to place upon record, clearly and unequivocally, our position on this vital question.

We declare as our earnest conviction, after years of observation and experience of the practical workings and influence of Romanism, that it is anti-Christ, and should be opposed upon the same broad grounds and with the same uncompromising determination with which the less subtle and not more real idolatries of India and China are attacked.

Out of the much that might be offered in support of our position thus declared, we present the following:

1. The Bible is accepted as the standard of doctrine and rule of action by which obedience must be measured. The Church of Rome, while claiming the Bible as the foundation of its faith also, effectually shuts out its people from the knowledge of its contents.

2. Not content with the errors that would naturally flow from absolute ignorance of the revealed will of God, it mutilates the Decalogue, omitting in its Catechism the Second Commandment, and dividing the tenth so as to complete the number.

3. The Scriptures wrested and the Commandment suppressed, it gives itself to the teachings and practice of an unreasoned idolatry, multiplying images of things in heaven and things in earth, bowing down and serving them. Witness the famous image of "Bom Jesu da Lapa" worshiped by its votaries not as an image of the Deity, but as God himself. Witness the image of Mary in a church in the city of Santos, upon whose altar is inscribed the exhortation: "Come ye, and worship the Queen of Heaven." Witness the whole land divided in its allegiance between the multitude of idols—one image often presiding over one part of a river and another over another part, one "Virgin" being invoked in one class of danger, and the protection of another sought in another class—whose altars are heaped with offerings that are often the bribes for indulgence in sin.

4. It denies the efficacy of the atonement by Christ, and tramples upon his love, turning from the "one Mediator between God and Man" to the mediation of Mary and the Saints, exalting the Virgin as "mother of God" and "Queen of Heaven" above the Savior and the Holy Spirit. To such extent is this worship held by the priests and accepted by the people that the Holy Trinity has been publicly declared to be "Father, Mother, and Son," and worship of saints is supported by such authority as that of a published pamphlet by the Bishop of Bahia, in which are cited the instances of Cornelius offering worship to Peter (Acts x. 25), and of St. John prostrating himself before the angel (Rev. xxii), care being taken to suppress the context, "See thou do it not." . . . Worship God!"

5. The Master himself has declared, "By their fruits ye shall know them." We see on every hand the fruits of Romanism—falseness, vice, ignorance, superstition, idolatry, blasphemy, and all uncleanness, common alike to priests and people.

We maintain that any one of these errors is sufficient to convict the church that upholds it of apostasy, and that all these and more Romedoes teach and practice, by whatever refined casuistry she may endeavor to refute the charge, and we stand in our place to protest against her as an instrument of darkness for the propagation of error, as a mystery of iniquity, as a blasphemer against the Holy Ghost, and one of the subtlest and most dangerous of all the foes to the pure religion of Christ and the evangelization of the world.

Christ's Estimate of the New Testament.

There are those who, while professing devotion to Christ, the Lord, cast more or less discredit on portions of the Old Testament (and they claim that even some of the most important injunctions of the New are not now binding). Let us consider what Christ thought of the Old Testament, and how he treated it. Never did he manifest the least doubt of any part of it, nor that it was the work of those who claimed to write it. From nearly every book in it—notably from Jonah—he quoted. Who better than he can judge of the Holy Scriptures? In the synagogues he read the Book, saying, "In the volume of the Book it is written of me."

He went through the Book, expounding it to the two who walked sorrowfully to Emmaus. Ah! to have heard that exposition of the things in all the Scriptures concerning himself!

The learned Lnussen says, "All the course of the Son of man attests thus that no human teacher thought more respectfully of the sacred volume than he. This Book is the rule of his life. . . . The least word of this Book possesses, in his view, an authority more permanent than the heavens and the earth. When he seeks to convince the Sadducees and Pharisees, now he proves the resurrection to them by . . . Exodus; now the true doctrine of marriage by . . . Genesis; now his own divinity by . . . Psalms cx." He exclaims, "And the Scriptures can not be broken."

When he begins his ministry, he already knows the Scriptures without having studied them. "Probably he had studied them ever since he began to read." When he contends with Satan he three times strikes him with "the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God." He says to Satan three times, "It is written." Yea, and Satan never attempts to gainsay it. He, too, knows what is the inspired Word. "Finishing his ministry upon the cross, again he repeats the 22d Psalm; and when he resumes it after the resurrection, he is still engaged in explaining the Scriptures; beginning at Moses and all the prophets and Psalms, he quotes, as from God, Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, Deuteronomy, Samuel, Kings, Jonah, Daniel, Isaiah, Hosea, Jeremiah, and the Psalms."

We see, then, how our Lord regarded the canon of the Old Testament. This was his science on this point, his sacred criticism; to receive all the Holy Scriptures of the Jews. "Did he ever reproach the Jews for having altered the Scriptures? Never. He reproached them for constantly resisting the Scriptures, never for altering them. They were left to commit every crime but that. They rejected God, committed abominations with their infamous gods, and made their children pass through the fire; but never were they guilty of the crime so easily committed, of changing the Scriptures, and introducing into them false books."

And this because God would not allow it. It is the sole explanation of the miraculous fact, for the Book was their condemnation.—Augusta Moore in the Evangelist.

Encouraging Evidence.

In matters relating to Compound Oxygen to which we call attention so frequently, you are asked simply to judge by evidence. Other affairs of practical existence, which proceed on this basis have no difficulty i the way of adjustment, no more do our claims for Compound Oxygen.

We are helped over obstacle by such impetus as the following afford:

PRINCE'S BAY, N. Y., April 1, 1887.

"My wife had neuralgia going from head to heart, sick all the time night and day for several years. Used two home treatments of Compound Oxygen and in less than three months she was fully relieved."

J. W. ANDROVAT.

BEWLEYVILLE, Ky., November 21, 1886.

"I write to inform you of my health and good feeling towards you as helpers of the afflicted. I have not had a severe cold since I have been under the Compound Oxygen treatment.

LARKIN, W. Va., July 31, 1888

I must say your Compound Oxygen has done me much good. You may use my name in any way you wish.

REV. T. F. HOLT.

We publish a brochure of 200 pages regarding the effect of Compound Oxygen on invalids suffering from consumption, asthma, bronchitis, dyspepsia, catarrh, hay fever, headache, debility, rheumatism, neuralgia; all chronic and nervous disorders. It will be sent, free of charge, to any one addressing DRS. STARKEY & PALEN, 1529 Arch St., Phila., Pa.; or 311 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal.

Religion in its purity is not so much a pursuit as a temper; or rather it is a temper, leading to the pursuit of all that is high and holy. Its foundation is faith; its action, works; its temper, holiness; its aim, obedience to God in improvement of self, and benevolence to men. Edwards.

Peculiar

To itself in many important particulars, Hood's Sarsaparilla is different from and superior to any other medicine.

Peculiar in combination, proportion and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the full curative value of the best known remedies of the vegetable kingdom.

Peculiar in its medicinal merit, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures hitherto unknown.

Peculiar in strength and economy—Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "100 doses one dollar." Medicines in larger and smaller bottles require larger doses, and do not produce as good results as Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Peculiar in its "good name at home"—there is more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell, where it is made, than of all other blood purifiers.

Peculiar in its phenomenal record of sales abroad, no other preparation has ever attained such popularity in so short a time. Do not be induced to take any other preparation. Be sure to get

THURSDAY, MARCH 14, 1889.

A note from Bro. Harp, at Keachie, informs us that Rev. George M. Liverman, a superannuate of the Louisiana Conference, died in Meridian, Texas, Sunday, March 3. A good man is gone home.

Briefs.

Among the duties of the preacher laid down in the Discipline, we find this: "To see that all the people of his charge be duly supplied with our books and periodicals." That is your duty, brethren. Do you keep trying to do it?

The Pennsylvania railroad has taken the initiative towards giving its employees rest on the Lord's day. The rule went into effect on Saturday, the ninth instant. From ten o'clock, Saturday evening, to seven o'clock, the next evening, no slow freight will be moved. This is to give the men a chance to have Sunday as a day of rest. This rule will discontinue seventy trains on the Sabbath on the Pittsburgh division alone, and between New York and Pittsburgh over three hundred. It is estimated that this regulation will give about twenty-four hundred men a Sabbath of rest. The same arrangement has been made for the Pan Handle, and, no doubt, will be for the Fort Wayne.

"The plays of Shakespeare and the English Bible," says one of the present English critics of to-day, "are, and ever will be, the twin monuments, not merely of their own period, but of the perfection of English: the complete expressions of the literary capacity of the language." This renders the editing of the Scriptures for any purpose whatever an incomparably difficult task. The scholar who makes changes in the Authorized Version may satisfy his soul with having got nearer the Hebrew; but the reader must rest his soul in such patience as he can command at seeing him go further with each change from good English.

The above, from Book News, reminds us of what Mr. Spurgeon said about the revisers of the New Testament: "The revisers appear to be fine Greek scholars, but they don't know good English."

Father McGlynn says:

Those public schools that make it possible for every child of the people to be educated, to enter into communion with the great minds of the ages, to read intelligently the history of his country, are truly the palladium of our liberty.

Referring to the establishment of parochial schools in the Catholic Church by one McMasters, he said:

He was a convert to the Catholic Church from some other church, and, with the zeal characteristic of proselytes, he set out to reform things in the Catholic Church in this country. He thought the public schools were all wrong, and clubbed Bishops and priests into getting up parochial schools. And that man, more than any other who has ever afflicted this country, helped to establish the parochial schools. If there were no public schools, there would be exceedingly few parochial schools.

Notice.

MR. EDITOR: In the Louisiana Conference Minutes, just published, there is no record of the missionary money contributed by the Carondelet Street Ladies Missionary Society. They feel troubled at the omission; hence I state in their behalf that they sent this year to our mission in Mexico over one hundred and fifty dollars.

B. CARRADINE.

The Law for the Tongue.

In that beautiful description which the wise man has given us of a good wife, not the least among the praises bestowed upon her is this: "In her tongue is the law of kindness." The rule by which the talk is governed, the law by which the tongue is controlled, the line which hedges in the conversation on all sides, is kindness. The design of the gospel is to control every part of man, and it has a special rule or law for every part by which every part shall be controlled. This shows the adaptedness of the gospel to enrich the happiness and to augment the pleasures of life. Where each of these laws is allowed to exert its full force, the person so operated upon realizes more real pleasure in living than if only one or two of them exerted an influence. The law for the control of the tongue—for the guidance of the conversation—is the law of kindness. Now, kindness is that "temper which delights in contributing to the happiness of others." When this law controls the tongue, the conversation becomes a literal and a liberal contribution to the stock of other people's happiness. This law, governing and guiding the tongue, does more for the happiness of man, adds more to the general bulk of the world's peace, than the mighty deeds of heroes or the schemes of statesmen. The exercise of this law is quiet and unobtrusive. Kindness never makes a noise. It is not a thing that babbles. It does not recommend itself by blowing trumpets. It falls as gently and as brightly as the rays of the sun, and acts as powerfully. The sun-rays make no noise, though they come down with inconceivable rapidity. In nature there is not a more powerful thing than a sunbeam, and yet there is not a thing that works more gently. Quiet power is the highest type of power. This law of kindness is as quiet in its operations as the law of light, and just as powerful. A kind word will melt its way into the depths of a heart of stone. No resistance can avail to stop its progress. It turns away wrath. It dissipates clouds of melancholy. It pours into the gloomy soul floods of beautiful light. The apostolic precept, "Be kind to one another," touches a chord of the human soul, and evokes therefrom a most delightful music. There is no purer pleasure, no sweeter peace, no calmer joy this side of heaven than that which is produced by the practice of this law of kindness. It works both ways. While it flashes a pure light upon the pathway of others, it sends a deep peace down into the heart of the man who exercises it.

Kindness is not generally made up of grand actions. It shows itself in all its beauty and glory in what we are pleased to call "the little things" of life. But by a few strokes of its quiet power it transforms these "little things" into the "greatest of all." Great actions make life a wonder to look at—kindness makes it the most beautiful picture outside of the kingdom of beauty. Now, if this law of kindness is specially adapted to human nature, and if the keeping of it develops a quiet power for the accomplishment of good which nothing can successfully resist, and if the practice of it enlarges the domain of happiness by removing the limits which selfishness has set up, then why do we so often hear sharp, cutting, stinging words from those who profess to be governed by gospel law? Why are some followers of the meek One as snappish as wild wolves? Why do they sometimes carry the thunder-cloud on their brows and the fierce lightning-flash in their eyes and the sharp sword in their tongue? How unlike him whom they profess to follow! How unlike him who had "the tongue of the learned, that he should know how to speak a word in season to the weary!" Oh, how appropriate is the prayer of David: "Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth; keep the door of my lips." How calm and peaceful would our world be if men would persistently practice this gospel precept: "Be kind to one another!" The quiet, sunny days of paradise would beautify the earth with their brightness again, and man would walk upon its surface, always breathing the sweet-scented perfumes that float from the flowers which religion plants along the waysides of life.

Statistics of Divorce.

We have received "A Report on the Statistics of and Laws Relating to Marriage and Divorce in the United States from 1867 to 1886, inclusive." This report is by Carroll D. Wright, Commissioner of Labor, and is dated, Washington, February 25, 1889.

The Commissioner says: "The facts on which this report is based were collected, as a rule, by personal investigation by agents of the department." The statistical tables show a sad state of things in regard to the marital relation. In 1867 there were granted in all the States and Territories 9,937 divorces, and every year recorded an increase, till in 1886 there were 25,535; an increase in twenty years of 156 per cent. In the same period the population increased 60 per cent. The total number of divorces for the twenty years is 328,716. In the number of divorces by States, Illinois shows the largest—36,072; and South Carolina the smallest—163. The rate per cent. of increase in 1886 over 1867 is a curious study. The State of Maine shows the smallest increase—8 per cent.; and Dakota the largest, being nearly 18,000 per cent. In Delaware it is 64; Indiana, 51; Massachusetts, 77; Nevada, 19; New York, 30; Vermont, 17; Wisconsin, 72; Utah, 35; Connecticut, 16; Maine, 8. In Mississippi it is 928; Alabama, 748; North Carolina, 676; Florida, 625; Louisiana, 496; Arkansas, 433; Texas, 1,357; West Virginia, 201; Tennessee, 179; Georgia, 156. The largest rate per cent. of increase shows itself in the West. In Dakota it is 17,800; in Colorado, 11,175; Nebraska, 4,260; New Mexico, 3,900; Kansas, 975. The average rate per cent. of increase in 1886 over 1867, by groups, is as follows: Eastern States, 55; Middle States, 143; Southern States, 495; Western States, 1,139; Territories, 3,285. The rate for the whole country is 156 per cent.

Comparing the years 1870 and 1880, the number of divorces in all the country increased from 10,962 to 19,663, while the population increased from 38,558,371 to 50,155,783. In 1870 there were 664 married couples to one divorce, but in 1880 there were only 479 married couples to one divorce. The table which shows the causes for divorce exhibits some curious things also. For example: 12,411 divorces were granted to the wives of drunken husbands, and 1,432 to husbands of drunken wives. On account of desertion, 75,119 were granted to wives, and 51,438 to husbands. For cruelty, 45,419 were granted to wives, and 6,101 to husbands. For adultery, 29,480 were granted to wives, and 38,156 to husbands. In 1870 the number of married couples in the whole country was estimated at 7,281,031; the number of divorces was 10,962. In 1880 the number of married couples was put down at 9,428,885, and the divorces were 19,663. This shows that while the population and the number of married couples increased about 30 per cent., the number of divorces increased about 80 per cent. in that period. Only four States and one Territory show more married couples to one divorce in 1880 than in 1870. These are Connecticut, New York, Utah, Vermont and Wyoming.

These figures show that there are two things needed in this boasted land of ours. One is a juster appreciation of the sacredness of the marriage bond; the other is a uniform law on this subject for the whole country.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

The Committee on Books and Periodicals in the North Mississippi Conference, at the last session, said this:

As the recognized organ of this Conference, we heartily commend the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE to our people. We congratulate ourselves upon securing that brave, pure, strong layman, J. G. Grant, as publisher of the ADVOCATE. Its circulation in our bounds is only 847, which is simply unpardonable. The publisher generously promises to give $2,000 to the Conference fund of the patronizing Conferences at the close of this year, provided the circulation reaches 10,000; the money to be divided according to the number of new subscribers from each Conference. Let us do our full duty in this matter, and secure for this sacred fund this amount of money. The prospects are brightening. With the scholarly Dr. Carter as editor, and the magnanimous Grant as publisher, it will be a paper of which we should feel proud. We promise greater zeal in its behalf in the future.

We call the attention of the brethren of North Mississippi to the promise made in the last sentence of the above report.

The Committee of the Mississippi Conference, on the same subject, reported as follows:

The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, our own very valuable and much-appreciated organ, has an increase of patronage, with an outlook far more encouraging than ever in all its history. It ought to be in the home of every Methodist family in the territory embraced in the Mississippi Conference. Its columns are filled with valuable matter on all subjects pertaining to the interests of the church, and is a most powerful auxiliary to the pastor. It is ably edited by Dr. Carter, while its enterprising and enthusiastic publisher, J. G. Grant, who captured the hearts of this entire body, proposes to enlarge and improve it as soon as possible; and says so soon as the three patronizing Conferences increase the list of subscribers to ten thousand, he will give $2,000, to be distributed pro rata between the three Conferences. In view of this fact, we urge every member of this Conference to make a diligent and earnest effort in his charge the ensuing year for a large and handsome list of subscribers.

Let the Mississippi brethren remember that securing subscribers is like securing sinners—you must keep at it with unflagging zeal and persistence.

The Committee of the Louisiana Conference spake on this wise:

In regard to our Conference organ, the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, we feel assured that it has entered upon a new life and a more remarkable career than it has ever before known. With J. G. Grant as publisher, and Dr. Carter as editor, we feel confident of great and gracious results in the future.

We say now, that the brethren have begun the work for enlarging the sphere of the ADVOCATE'S operations in good hope for success, and the results are already beginning to appear in the office. The names of new subscribers are coming in daily from all parts of the country. One of our youngest ministers sent in, one day last week, fifteen new names. Nobody has ever yet been able to gauge the measure of a Methodist preacher's success when he sets himself earnestly to work. We would just like to see our brethren all over our territory determine to show the church what they can do on this important line of church work. If everyone will do his best, you will hear a song from our widows and orphans next Christmas that will make you think "heaven has come down to earth."

English Methodism.

In the following short extract from a correspondent of Zion's Herald our pastors will find some food for thought on some points vital to our own connection. No need to point them out. You will see them.

The Wesleyan Calendar gives the following figures, which will be interesting to Methodists everywhere. There are in Great Britain 505,186 church members and 1,982 ministers; in Ireland, 25,951 members and 234 ministers. Membership is more carefully regulated by British than by American Methodists. The quarterly visitation of the classes, and "renewal of tickets" by the minister, mean a revision of the church-roll every three months. There is no place for perpetual absentees; there are no members counted who have left the locality and are residing in distant parts. Non-attendance at the class meeting, neglect of the means of grace, indifference to the interest and funds of the church, if continued through a few months, soon result in the withholding by the minister of the "quarterly ticket," and the lapsed member is counted in the column headed, "Ceased to Meet in Class," and no longer included in the sum total of the membership of the church.

The French Conference reports 1,541 members and 29 ministers; South Africa, 38,529 members and 166 ministers; West Indies, 48,659 members and 87 ministers; Australasian Conferences, 80,632 members and 600 ministers; and foreign missions 37,176 members and 358 ministers. This makes the total for the "old body," the Wesleyan wing of the Methodist Church, 737,644 members and 3,456 ministers. The aggregate for all sections of Methodism throughout the world is stated at, ministers and church members, 5,636,210.

Good Giving.

The Wesleyans of England appear to be good givers, and, therefore, are worthy of imitation by the givers on this side of the water. A correspondent of Zion's Herald writes thus of their beneficence for the year 1888:

Methodists have always been generous. They all give, and they are always giving. Here are figures of the funds contributed by Wesleyans in the United Kingdom, put into dollars for your more easy reading. Foreign missions, $659,335; home missions, $176,540—together $1 60 per member; auxiliary fund (Preachers' Aid), $128,375; children's fund (from which an annual grant of $31 50, generally supplemented by the circuits, is made to each child of a minister for fifteen years), $144,845; schools fund, for the education of preachers' children, granting $60 a year for six years (or more than an equivalent, in board and education, at the schools for the sons and daughters of the clergy), $108,290; colleges for students for the ministry, $55,800; church building and relief (grants in aid), $44,645. The whole amount expended during 1888 on church building, enlargements, improvements and liquidation of debt, was $2,047,085; education fund (normal colleges for teachers), $32,525; extension fund, $7,910. This makes a grand total of Christian beneficence, amounting to $3,405,350, or $6 74 for each church member. All this in addition to salaries of preachers, rent and furniture of parsonages—and every married Wesleyan minister has a well-furnished home—cost of Sunday-schools and local charities. The gross assessment made upon itself by British Christianity of the Methodist type can not be less than ten dollars per capita per annum.

It is said that women have acquired the right to vote on school questions in fifteen States, on municipal matters in one, and on the liquor traffic in two.

Our Business Manager.

The ADVOCATE and publisher are to be congratulated upon securing the services of Rev. D. L. Mitchel as business manager. Bro. Mitchel comes to the ADVOCATE with considerable experience in this line, together with an extensive acquaintance throughout the country from his position as first secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association, of this city, and more recently secretary of the Chamber of Commerce.

Bro. Mitchel is a member of Carondelet Street Church, a local deacon, and is one of our most aggressive workers in the cause of Christ. He brings to the ADVOCATE experience, energy, industry and ability, and will do his share in bringing the ADVOCATE to the front.

Notes.

In his letter to the Ruston Convention ex-Gov. McEnery had this sentence:

Nine times as many people attain the age of one hundred in Louisiana as in New York, and fifteen times as many as in Maine.

For the benefit of the young men who read our paper, we clip this from Zion's Herald:

Thomas A. Edison and John Ericsson, both inventors, the one forty-two years of age, the other just double that age, were thus contrasted in a recent lecture by the author of "How to Get Strong:" "Edison never takes any exercise, and breathes comparatively little fresh air. Ericsson has a gymnasium fitted up in his house, and takes regular exercise every day. Edison is almost totally deaf, is pale of face, and stoops. Ericsson has all his organs in their early perfection, is ruddy of face, and straight as an arrow. Only recently, in a trial of strength, he outstripped two young men in their twenties."

The New York Christian Advocate has this very sensible note:

A pastor who will draw is in great demand. The pernicious custom of looking to the pastor alone to attract the people and hold them has been the ruin of some churches. The pastor can not fill the house. He will do well if he fills the pulpit. The church members must fill the pews. This they can do by being present at every service, and by inviting others, and by treating strangers in such a way that they will desire to return, and by praying and laboring for the conversion of souls. If none are drawn to the church except those whom the minister draws, there will be few remaining when he is gone. It is far more important to have a drawing church than a drawing pastor.

We sometimes read in the papers of a "dead line," which when a man crosses he is lost to the work of the world. The following, however, shows that it takes some men a long time to cross it.

The New York Sun, in an editorial congratulating Mr. Sidney Bartlett on the celebration of his ninetieth birthday, calls attention to some venerable New Yorkers: "Look, for example, at David Dudley Field, the jurist, who, though almost eighty-five, is still in legal practice. Look at Wilson G. Hunt, the merchant, on the verge of eighty-four, and yet hale and hearty. Look at Rev. Dr. Thomas E. Vermilye, who enters his eighty-seventh year this month, still full of the qualities that gave him his high rank in the pulpit. Look at Professor Robert W. Weir, the artist, who, in his eighty-seventh year, keeps his brush and palette ready for service."

The St. Louis Advocate says:

In the warfare against sin there is no place for conservatism. Its occupation is gone; it fights no battles, wins no victories—a patched-up compromise, alien to both parties, is its master diplomacy. Conservatism knows no world, is very respectful to the devil, and apologizes for the flesh. The conservative swims with the current. The radical faces both wind and current. Conservatism is fond of the dew which comes in the night, and noiselessly. Radicalism rejoices in the fury and rush of the tornado. Conservatism, like the kitten, seeks the hearth, its enervating warmth. Radicalism, like the lion, seeks its prey and stalks defiantly abroad. Conservatism gloves its hands, and its strokes are not felt. Radicalism strikes its trip hammer blows, and molds the heated iron and heats the cold.

It is evident that Mark Guy Pearse, the eminent Wesleyan, believes as strongly in hand-shaking as our own Dr. Matthews, of St. Louis. Hear him:

The greatest human power in the church is hearty hand-shaking. We could better spare a little Hebrew or Greek, or some of the mysteries of mental philosophy if we could only recover the lost art of hand-shaking. Elocution is useful; the management of the voice counts for much, but the action of the hands is quite as important. Can we find a professor of this lost art who can visit our colleges? No church is so dependent upon its sociability as Methodism. Happily we have no prestige and fashion to hold us together—for which let us thank God. We can not make any great boast of intellectualism—in itself not much to boast of, since St. Paul feared that it would kill the gospel. We have no distinct creed which separates us from all other churches. Our life is in our sociability. Hearty hand-shaking is our strength.

Personal and Otherwise.

Last week we made the serious mistake of reporting the death of Thomas J. Bradnax, of Bastrop, La., when we should have reported the death of Thomas H. Dalton.

A brother preacher writes: "I have been here nine weeks and have received $45; expenses, $160. Assessment not made yet." Reader, is that your circuit?

There is a bill before the Massachusetts Legislature providing for the establishment of a hospital for inebriates.

Our friend and correspondent, Dr. W. B. Chapman, of Hannibal, Mo., is to conduct a Missionary Institute at the next session of the Missouri Chautauqua Assembly at Pertle Springs, Warrensburg, Mo., in July. Dr. Chapman is capable of doing just that work.

The Nashville Advocate, last week, had this personal. It will grieve many.

Our readers will be pained to learn that Bishop A. W. Wilson has had a return of his old malady, and has suffered from it luteasely while on his homeward voyage returning from his official visit to China and Japan.

Zion's Herald says: "Hon. James G. Blaine, in intellectual acumen has no peer except it be William E. Gladstone." That is "a possible exaggeration!"

Dr. Howard Crosby is authority for the statement that one of the captains of police in New York City made $70,000 in one year by his carefulness in leaving lawbreakers alone.

Religious fanaticism is certainly not a very reasonable thing, but is not irreligious fanaticism about as absurd as anything can be?

We are thankful to those brethren who send us the church news. That is what we want. Mind you, "news;" not "gossip." Church gossip is the most miserable affair, especially when we read over five or six closely written pages.

The Central Methodist, published, last week, a symposium on our Doctrinal Standards. The writers are E. Ufloss, J. H. Riggin, G. G. Smith, W. C. Brown, W. S. Black, R. G. Porter, J. M. Boland, B. F. Orr. Only two of these seem to agree! So the question is not settled yet.

When we urged the brethren to give us items of church news we had no idea of waking up so many church boundings." They are good and interesting to the parties concerned, but we doubt if they are interesting to the majority of the readers of the ADVOCATE. Verbum sap.

Dr. Murrah, of Whitworth College, was to see us last Saturday. The doctor seems to be in excellent health. His look touching agrees with him. Whitworth now has 18 Instructors, 300 pupils, of which 162 board in the College. Everything is moving on in good style. Now that our Mississippi brethren are stirred up on the college question, would it not be a safe and wise investment—for some liberal Methodist brother or sister to donate a greater building to Whitworth? It needs just that to round out its symmetry.

There is a rumor that one of our war ships was fired into by a German ironclad and sunk in the Samoan waters. This looks like a speck of war. If we should engage in that business with Germany, it will, at least, put a quietus on home troubles for a time.

We much regret to learn that Dr. Palmer, of this city, has been in feeble health for some time, and unable to fill his pulpit regularly. Dr. Palmer is a great and valuable man among us, and we trust that he will soon be able to resume his usual work.

Postal Card Reports.

A prominent Baptist of Louisiana, writes, under date of March 9: "Although I am no Methodist, nor the son of a Methodist, I regard the ADVOCATE as one of the most valuable papers that enters my home. Its weekly visits are hailed with delight by every member of the family. I do not see how any Methodist family can afford to be without the ADVOCATE. Your position on the Sunday law question ought to commend the paper to every Christian heart in the land. I read a great many papers, both religious and secular, including my own church paper (Baptist), but I find in none of them that strong appeal to the great heart of Christianity, on this Sunday question, that I find in the ADVOCATE."

Rev. M. L. White writes of Vance circuit, Mississippi Conference: "My circuit is moving on very well. The people are responding very well to the different claims; the ladies are making an effort to furnish the parsonage better, and, I believe, will succeed. Our first quarterly Conference has been held; the stewards made a very good assessment for my support. I believe every dollar will be paid. I am doing all I can for the ADVOCATE."

Notice.

To the Members of the Mississippi and the North Mississippi Conferences—

DEAR BRETHREN: In obedience to instructions given by the Joint Committee of your Conferences, I will send to each of you several copies of the appeal recently issued in behalf of our college enterprise. Please distribute these where they are most likely to accomplish good. Moreover, brethren, is it asking too much of you to request that you supplement the circular with your own ardent advocacy of the cause? Such an opportunity comes but once in a lifetime. It is surely not unreasonable to ask of the seventy-five thousand Methodists in Mississippi that they contribute as much as one man is willing to contribute. Only sixty-six and two-thirds cents per capita is required. Is not this a mere bagatelle? Under such circumstances, will not failure be disgraceful? Brethren, we must not fail. But let it be borne in mind that success can not be achieved without effort. Bishop Galloway will make a canvass of the State, and will, doubtless, create much enthusiasm in the cause; but the Bishop is not ubiquitous, and he can spare only a brief period of time for this work. If this effort is to succeed, we must all put forth our very best exertions. We must not delude ourselves with the hope that two or three wealthy men are going to come forward with the required amount. The bulk of this $50,000 will have to be raised in small sums; and it will not be raised unless you, brethren of the ministry, lend your aid. Talk up the college everywhere. Do your utmost to enlist the sympathies and the co-operation of all our people, rich and poor, learned and unlearned. Get contributions of all sizes: large ones, if you can; small ones, if you must. Particulars as to endowment notes will be furnished in due time.

W. C. BLACK,
Chairman Ex. Com.

The money sent the editor to assist in purchasing an organ for China has been turned over to Mrs. J. B. Chatfield, to help out the "missionary outfit," the organ having been purchased by other parties. C. W. CARTER.

New Orleans District Conference.

The New Orleans District Conference will convene in this city at Felicity Street Church, on Thursday, March 21, at half-past nine A. M. The recording stewards will please see that the Quarterly Conference records are sent up for examination.

The Louisiana Lottery Company Sermon.

The sermon by Rev. B. Carradine, D. D., on "The Louisiana Lottery Company Examined and Exposed," which is being published at this office, is not all a money-making scheme for anybody, but the sermon was written from notes at the suggestion of friends, with the humble hope that its publication would do good and glorify God.

Correction.

MR. EDITOR: Will you oblige me by printing in the ADVOCATE the following corrections of the Minutes of the Mississippi Conference, Meadville circuit, Vicksburg district. The report of the secretary is, in the main, correct, but I notice two mistakes that ought to be corrected in justice to my circuit and to myself. I am not astonished at a statistical secretary making mistakes. I am only astonished that they make so few mistakes. The Minutes report us having been paid "For education, $50 50." The amount paid was $5 50, and it was thus reported. The Minutes report for "Other objects, $139 30." My report was for "Other objects, $289 90."

H. BRADFORD.

A Correction.

I find in the published Minutes of our late Conference, an error in the report of the Oak Ridge Circuit. The Minutes report for "Other church property," "$26," whereas I reported, "No other church property;" but reported, "Money expended for churches and parsonage, $260."

I wish this correction made that our people may have credit for all they have done. Respectfully,

T. S. RANDLE.

Literary Notes.

Canon Rawlinson's new volume on Phœnicia will be the next volume in the "Story of the Nation" Series, published by Messrs. Putnam's Sons.

Mr. Philip Bailey has been preparing a new edition of "Festus," with, as usual, additions, which is to be issued in the spring. May 1 is the jubilee of "Festus." Few authors have lived to see the fiftieth anniversary of the appearance of their masterpieces, and few poems have had so much effect on the generation which first had the privilege of reading them as "Festus."

Professor Maspero, who is well known to all students of Egyptology, is making rapid progress with his "History of Ancient Egypt." It is to be abundantly illustrated, and, of course, will contain the latest knowledge on the subject.

Professor T. F. Mahaffy, of Trinity College, Dublin, author of "A Manual of Greek Literature," "The Art of Conversation," etc., will visit the United States the coming summer as the guest of the Chautauqua Assembly. He will pass two weeks in August at Chautauqua, delivering a course of lectures. He may possibly also lecture at other places.

Anson D. F. Randolph & Co. will publish immediately: Life of Samuel Wilberforce, Bishop of Oxford and Winchester, by his son, Reginald Wilberforce. Revised from the original work, with additions. The Spirit of Christ, by Andrew Murray. Two new volumes in the Men of the Bible Series: Daniel, by H. Dean. Jeremiah, by Canon T. K. Cheyne. The Biblical Illustrator, Galatians, edited by Rev. J. S. Exell. The Pulpit Commentary, II. Samuel. Thomas Hard, Priest, by Barton Lee. The Counter-Reformation, by Adolphus William Ward. Epochs of Church History Series.

It will be a matter of much interest to many American men and women to learn that Miss Amelia B. Edwards, the eminent critic, author, archeologist and (especially) authority on Egyptology, is disposed to visit this country next year. Miss Edwards will lecture in various cities; should she make the proposed trip, appearing thus professionally under the auspices of various distinguished societies.

The complete works of Lord Macaulay, together with his Sir George Trevelyan's "Life and Letters" of the historian, in five volumes, for $3! That is the latest outcome of the cheap literature movement in England. Fifty thousand copies have been taken by the trade. Longmans are the enterprising firm who have published this boon to students.

The authorized Life of Miss Alcott will be published in about a month; that of Mrs. Stowe at nearly the same time.

The Provost and Dean of the University of Pennsylvania last year requested the Rev. George Dana Boardman, D. D., to deliver before the students "a series of Sunday afternoon addresses on religious topics." He acceded to the request, and, "believing the Ten Commandments to be the foundation stones of authoritative morality of true society," he selected them for the theme of his lectures. The American Baptist Publication Society has made arrangements by which they hope to be able to issue the lectures in a handsome volume early in March.

That tired feeling, so subtle and yet so overpowering, is entirely overcome by Hood's Sarsaparilla, which tones and strengthens the system and gives a good appetite. Be sure to get Hood's Sarsaparilla. "100 Doses One Dollar" is true only of this peculiar medicine.

Three Reasonable Requests.

1. Let every subscriber carefully read this issue of the ADVOCATE, and then show the paper to some neighbor who does not take it, and ask him to subscribe.

2. Let every minister arrange for a complete canvass of his circuit, so that every family of every Methodist congregation may have the paper offered to them. Where the minister can not do this personally, let him appoint some suitable person to do it.

3. Let the benefit and duty of subscribing for our church paper be mentioned in every congregation, and all reasonable efforts put forth to obtain new subscribers, and secure the renewal of old ones.

No one is more anxious to have copy right than the printer.

Tea and coffee are well termed "luxuries of the grocer kind."

Next to your subscription the greatest favor you can extend the ADVOCATE, in a business point, is to mention the paper in writing to advertisers.

The complaint against the usurer is that he takes too much interest in his business.

A LESSON IN CONTENTMENT.

Three little flies in the room, on a pane;
Three little flies just outside, in the rain.

Said the three little flies, as they hummed on the pane,
To the three little flies who were out in the rain:
"Don't you wish you were here on this side of the pane,
Instead of out there in the cold and the rain?
And then we must tell you there's dinner a-cooking,
Though really and truly, we haven't been looking."

Said the three little flies outside in the rain
To the three little flies inside on the pane:
"We think it's much nicer out here in the rain
Than shut up where you are, inside on the pane;
And then there's more fun than the boys have at ball
In dodging the raindrops as fast as they fall."

And now I am sure that my lesson is plain:
Whenever you feel there is cause to complain
Remember the three little flies on the pane
And the three little flies just outside in the rain.
—St. Nicholas.

Letter from Aunt Loretta.

Dear Nieces and Nephews: I was just now wondering if any of you had found any more of those beautiful Bible promises. Jesus himself told his disciples to "search the Scriptures." If we do that, we will surely find something that will do us good if we do not find the particular thing or verse that we are searching for. Some of you little ones may think that it is a hard thing to do, because the Bible is such a big book and has such hard words and strange names. That is a mere fancy. I am often struck with the simplicity of some parts of the Bible. Any child can understand it if their friends would help them a little.

Some of you may have heard of the "Oxford League." It was a league that John and Charles Wesley and some other young men made up among themselves to keep from doing wrong. The power and influence of that famous league is felt in the world yet. How would all the little cousins like to belong to a league that would help you to be good and do good? Suppose we call it the Bible League. All who join it must read, at least, one verse every day in the Bible, and more if they can. If they find anything that strikes them as something new, let them speak of it to others and ask a question about it. If the children of two or three families would meet once a week to study the Sunday-school lesson, and then have a Bible League exercise, that would be very edifying. Each member could recite a verse or more, ask a question or explain some subject that had been given out before. Recitations and historical facts or questions would be in order also. A circle like that would be a great help to all Sunday-school scholars.

This is but a suggestion. Some one might take up the idea, and enlarge upon it anyway that seemed to promise the greatest good to all who would join in the exercises.

Some of the oldest of the cousins have read or heard of the "days of chivalry;" but the little ones will have to ask papa or mamma what that big word means. I hope all my little nephews know enough about it to be gallant and polite to all the girls; but they need not put on a helmet and take a sword and fight about them as the knights of old did in the days of chivalry. They carried it to such excess that it became ridiculous, and a Spanish author wrote a book and made so much fun of it that it was almost killed out. Some deeds of chivalry were very worthy of praise. The first one mentioned in all history was recorded in the Bible. Now get your Bibles and find who it was that did the first chivalric deed. God bless you all!

AUNT LORETTA.

MR. EDITOR: I must write and tell you about our last meeting here. It was very nice, and a good collection was taken up for Bro. Godfrey, Sunday night. I think it was $10. Now, was that not a good collection for a small place like this? Bro. Godfrey preached a splendid sermon, Sunday morning; the text was Revelation, xiv, 13—"And I heard a voice from heaven, saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." It was a funeral of a lady who died last fall. His daughter, Miss Lulu Godfrey, was with him. Did you ever see her, Mr. Editor? Bro. Godfrey preached another good sermon at night, and there was a big crowd out to hear him. The Sunday-school is flourishing here! Oh, we have a splendid Bible class, and nearly everybody that belongs to it has a perfect lesson every Sunday. It is so nice. The two missionary societies are on a "boom," too. Our little society, The Lily of the Valley, met last Friday and we had such an interesting time. The Woman's Missionary Society met last Sunday; they have a very nice missionary society, too. There were five additions to the church this time and four baptisms. Bro. Godfrey married a couple last Sunday evening. I will ask some questions: Who was the first man to move away from idol worshipers? Who was Cain? Whom does Jesus say we must worship? I will answer Mary S. Hodges' question: The shortest chapter in the Bible is Psalms cxvii. I am afraid this will go in the waste-basket. Your niece,

JENNIE FAULKNER.

MR. EDITOR: Were you ever six years old? I am. Mamma said I might have a birthday party. So I invited George and Lois Welsh, Alma, Benton and Archie Crawford, Eddie and Robbie Hood, Richard Welsh and my little buddie, Lanier, and some more that didn't come. That was February 8. The boys took it turn about riding on the velocipede; the girls, they played with dolls, and behaved very well for girls. Then we heard the dinner-bell, and we were soon at our places at the table. There was not any room for the big folks, so they had to wait. We just had a grand dinner and a jolly time. After that it rained, and grandma said we could have a sack race in the hall; so she put each one of the boys in a big sack, and told us to run out on the portico. Away we started, and down we tumbled, over and over, all in a pile, and my big dog Caspar pulled at the sack and barked at us. Then we had other plays. Then they all went home but Alma; she staid all night. I go to Sunday-school; have been going ever since I was six weeks old, and like it better now than I did then. I can spell in three letters, and my mamma teaches me every day. I study "Our Little People" and the Bible verses. Grandma wrote this. I told her what to say, though. God bless you, Mr. Editor, and all the cousins.

CLARENCE CROCKETT.
PEARL RIVER, Louisiana.

A little girl of four years was very much pleased with a new "gossamer" which her mamma had just bought for her. It unfortunately chanced to be a very dry season, and she was impatient for the rain to come that she might wear her new rain cloak. One night her nurse was kneeling by the bedside, to have a few last words after she had been tucked snugly in her little bed; and she said, "Katy, do you know that is just the way mamma kneels down by the bed when she wants to ask Jesus for anything, and she most always gets what she asks for; but," she went on, "I think Jesus is the slowest man about rain I ever saw in all my life. Yesterday I took my gossamer on my arm, and walked up and down the street all the afternoon, and it never rained a drop."—Wide Awake.

Little George Brown had been listening intently for some time to his elder sister Jessie's at-home recitation in mental arithmetic. All at once his face gleamed with brightness; he thought he had grasped the mathematical problems. "Mamma, mamma," he said with a great show of enthusiasm. "What is it, George?" "If you had six apples, and I should give you six more, how much is twice two?"

Shortly after family worship, which had been conducted by the venerable John Wesley, Dr. Wilson said to him: "My wife was so delighted with your prayer that she has been looking in the prayer book for it, but can not find it; I wish you would point it out to me." "My dear brother," said Wesley, "I can not, because that prayer came down from heaven, and I sent it up there again."—History of Methodism in Ireland.

Household.

Your Boy.

You do not know what is in him. Bear with him; be patient; wait. Feed him; clothe him; love him. He is a boy; and most boys are bad. You think him so light-hearted, and fear he is light-headed as well. Remember he calls you father. When he played in your lap, you fondly hoped he would some day be a great and useful man. Now that he has grown larger, and his young blood drives him into gleeful sport, and makes him impatient of serious things—rattling, playful, thoughtless—you almost despair. But don't be snappish and snarlish, and make him feel you are disappointed in him. He is your boy and you are to live with him. He bears your name, and is to send it down on the stream of time. He inherits your fortune and fame, and is to transmit them to generations to come.

It may be difficult to govern him; but be patient. He may seem averse to everything useful and good; but wait. No one can tell what is in a boy. He may surprise you some day. Hope. Let him grow. While his body grows larger and stronger, his mental and moral nature may expand and improve.

Educate your boy. You may think money spent in that way is money spent in vain. There is nothing in him; he has no pride, no ambition. You don't know. No one can tell what there is in a boy. Besides, there may be an unkindled spark, an unfanned flame, a smouldering fire, a latent energy, which the teacher's aid may stir, the association with books may arouse, develop and direct, and thus start your boy a-going with such energy and determination that no power on earth could stop him short of the topmost round in the ladder of fame.

If you can not educate him, let him educate himself. That will make him strong, a giant with whom none dare interfere. Such are the best men in the world. The greatest benefactors of the race have stooped their shoulders to bear burdens, have carried hands hardened with rough labor, have endured the fatigue of toil. Many such are in our minds now. Labor conquers all things. The old Roman was right. We see it in a thousand instances. Labor makes the man. No boy ever came to be a man, the noblest work of God, without labor. This is God's great law; there is a divine philosophy in it. Let your boy work; if he will not work, make him work. There is no progress, no development, no outcome, no true manhood without it. We must work.

Father, be kind to your boy. We know what a mother will do. Thank God! A mother's love, a mother's prayers follow us still; and the memory of her anxious tears shall never fade out during the succession of years.

Finally, but not least, pray for your boy. God hears prayer. Do the best you can; commit all you can not do to God, and hope. Never despair, for no one knows what is in a boy.—Exchange.

PHYSICAL PURITY.—No one has yet estimated the amount of villainy that may be pent up in a loaf of bread, or imprisoned in a pepper-box. A sagacious parent discovered cow's milk to be a better means of managing refractory boys than cow's hide, substituting the kind creature's maternal fluid for herself as well as her hide; and it may be that a vast deal more of the rascality of older persons, than any one it aware of, is born of the rare roasts and bloody steaks which constitute the staple diet of the average American.

The much-talked-of millenium will be introduced by the preaching of a crusade against "those fleshly lusts which war against the soul," of which one of the most baneful, because it is fundamental, is the lust of appetite, the gratification of instincts which are depraved, whereby all other evil appetites and morbid instincts are excited and exaggerated, to the detriment of those finer qualities of mind and heart which are the real distinction between man, the masterpiece of the Great Artist, and the "beasts that perish."—Good Health.

"My daughter, twelve years of age, has suffered for the past year from General Debility.

A few weeks since, we began to give her Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Her health has greatly improved."—Mrs. Harriet H. Battles, South Chelmsford, Mass.

"About a year ago I began using Ayer's Sarsaparilla as a remedy for debility and neuralgia resulting from malarial exposure in the army. I was in a very bad condition, but six bottles of the Sarsaparilla, with occasional doses of Ayer's Pills, have greatly improved my health. I am now able to work, and feel that I cannot say too much for your excellent remedies."—F. A. Pinkham, South Mohmens, Me.

"My daughter, sixteen years old, is using Ayer's Sarsaparilla with good effect."—Rev. S. J. Graham, United Brethren Church, Buckhannon, W. Va.

"I suffered from

with lame back and headache, and have been much benefited by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I am now 80 years of age, and am satisfied that my present health and prolonged life are due to the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla."—Lucy Moffitt, Killingly, Conn.

Mrs. Ann H. Farnsworth, a lady 71 years old, So. Woodstock, Vt., writes: "After several weeks' suffering from nervous prostration, I procured a bottle of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and before I had taken half of it my usual health returned."

MASON & HAMLIN
The cabinet organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of these instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.
Mason & Hamlin offer, as demonstration of their unequalled excellence, their organs, the fact at all of the ORGANS $22 TO $900. great World's Exhibitions, since that of Paris, 1867, in competition with best makers of all countries, they have invariably taken the highest honors. One hundred styles, from $22 to $900 or more. Illustrated catalogues free.
Mason & Hamlin do not hesitate to make the extraordinary claim for their pianos, that they are superior to all others. They recognize the PIANOS high excellence achieved in GRAND & UPRIGHT by other leading makers in the art of piano building, but claim superiority. This they attribute solely to a remarkable improvement introduced by them in the year 1882, and now known as the "MASON & HAMLIN PIANO STRINGER," by the use of which is secured the greatest possible purity and refinement of tone, together with greatly increased capacity for staying in tune, and other important advantages.
A circular, containing testimonials from three hundred purchasers, musicians, and tuners, sent together with descriptive catalogue, to any applicant.
Pianos and organs sold for cash or easy payments, also rented.

BATTE—Bro. WILLIAM B. BATTE died at the residence of Mrs. Mollie Wilson, near Brandon, Miss., February 7, 1889, being in his thirty-fourth year. He was born in Rankin county, Miss., September 24, 1855. He engaged in business at Brandon, and in the fall of 1881 he moved to Texas, where he remained until the fall of 1885. About ten years before his death his lungs became diseased, and this finally terminated in consumption, which ended his life. His sufferings at times were quite severe, but he bore them patiently. In the fall of 1888 he came back to Mississippi, feeling assured that he could not likely live long. The undersigned visited him during his last and found him sensible of his critical condition, and, seemingly, not in the least alarmed, being strong in the faith.

He joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in the spring of 1882. Before he joined the church he was regarded as a very moral man, and after towards he became very pious. A short time before he died he said: "I ought to be the chief aim of every one to do all the good that he can; that if he gained heaven, life was a glorious triumph; but if he lost heaven, it was a failure." It was his desire to be able to do much for the cause of Christ. He was very happy while living, and the last words he uttered were, "Blessed Jesus." May God abundantly bless his loved ones who survive him and strengthen them to say, "He can not come back to us, but we will go to Him, God being our Comforter." "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord." (Rev. xiv. 13.)

ISAAC L. PEEBLES.

SMITH—These few lines are sacred to the memory of Mrs. ELIZABETH Smith. Born on December 10, 1810, she passed from earth December 20, 1888. "This is a long time for earth—there are many days; for their strength labor and sorrow, until we fly away." She lived this good woman, to see the generations of her descendants, and looked upon them all with the holy Christian eyes. Strongly and fully she lived, and peacefully she ceased to breathe. Children were all about her, tenderly ministering to her every wants, and they were faithful in their attention to this quiet, gentle mother, whose sands of life, for awhile, were running low. They seemed to feel that the gilding sands were grains of gold, and love and careful ness softened their footsteps round her bed. At the home of her son and daughter, Bro. Crisler and wife, she left her influence lingers, marked by the excellent lives of those she left, several of whom are residents in the community. Happy are the dead that die in the Lord. H.

SPROLE—Died, at his home on Pearl river, La., December 18, 1888, Mr. HUGG SPROLE, aged seventy-three years, a native of Philadelphia, Pa., and a resident of Louisiana for forty-six years.

ANNIE H. SPROLE.

Philadelphia and Camden, N. J., papers please copy.

FELDER—On the morning of February 15, 1889, God sent his holy angels to hear away on their snowy pinions the sweet spirit of Miss KATIE M. FELDER. The deceased was born February 3, 1869, in Pike county, Miss., near Topisaw Camp Grounds, and after an illness of many months, attended with many pangs and much suffering, departed this life in peace, shouting, "Hallelujah! glory to God!" Was converted when about twelve or thirteen years of age, and from that period of her life proved a devout and noble Christian. The law of love seemed to have been written on her heart, joy and peace on her countenance, and in all things she strove to do the will of her Master.

It was my good pleasure to visit her during the last days of her sufferings, to sing, pray and talk to her of the far-away home of the soul. She appeared all the while perfectly submissive to the will of God—in fact, she was; for on one occasion, while speaking to her of submission to his will, she said: "I am not afraid to die. I am perfectly reconciled to the will of God." At one time she held herself in readiness to go as a missionary to Mexico, with Bro. and Sister Weems; but God, in his all-wise providence, for some reason we know not, called her away just as she was blooming into sweet Christian womanhood; and just here, with what peculiar emphasis are the words of our Lord brought to bear upon our minds: "What I do thou knowest not now: but thou shalt know hereafter." Yes, a loving child of God has gone from our midst, and now stands waiting and watching for her loved ones at the beautiful gate.

She leaves many friends and dear ones, to whom we extend a heartfelt sympathy. May God help them to realize that their loss is her gain, and may they, too, ever be noble followers of that blessed Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world! Is the prayer of her pastor,

J. M. COWAN.

ESTES—At her residence, in Brandon, Miss., February 10, 1889, Miss SARAH A. ESTES died, being in her sixty-seventh year. She was born in Baldwin county, Ga., 1822, and when she was four years old her father moved to Crawford county, where he lived until she was fourteen years old, and thence he moved to Marion county. In 1844 she came with her parents to Brandon, Miss., where she resided until her death. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, about the year 1848, and lived a faithful member of the same ever since. In 1882 she was seized with pulmonary consumption, which terminated her earthly career. Her sufferings ever and anon were quite excruciating. She was almost a confirmed invalid for four years, and towards her last she could scarcely get any rest at all, even at night. Prior to her consumptive attack she was very stout and healthy.

Few, if any, who had more sympathy for the sick and afflicted than she. She was noted for her kindness and attention to the sick. Days and nights were spent by her in administering to the sick and afflicted. The writer of this visited her a few times during the last of her illness, and found her strong in faith and fully resigned to the will of God. A short while before her expiration she said to her sister, "I am not afraid to die." She has a sister and a number of other relatives who survive her. May God bless and comfort them, and keep them impressed that "all things work together for good to those who love God." (Rom. viii. 28.)

ISAAC L. PEEBLES.

HOPKINS—The subject of this notice, PAUL O. HOPKINS, son of C. L. and D. E. Ellis Hopkins, was born in Smith county, Miss., December 17, 1864; was superintending business for Mr. James M. Jones, in Smith county, Miss. On December 21, 1888, he received a stab in his neck, inflicted by J. M. Jones with a knife, while he (Jones) was intoxicated. This wound resulted in the death of P. O. Hopkins on December 25, 1888.

Oh! this sad, catastrophe is another warning against the use of intoxicants. Bro. Paul was a good young man, a kind and dutiful son, brother, and true friend. He was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in his eighteenth year. Said he was ready for the solemn change. He was twenty-four years and eight days old when he hid us adieu for all time. But we'll meet again in the sweet by-and-by.

R. A. SIBLEY.

BADON—At Covington, La., February 7, 1889, at seven A. M., RUTH ISANELLE, daughter of Henry Badon and M. J. Gauley, aged eighteen years, two months and twelve days.

For two years she was a victim of that dread disease, consumption. During her last days her sufferings were intense; but, thanks be to God! her faith and trust in the Lord Jesus Christ were greater. She was conscious to the last, and, calling her loved ones around her, she said: "I am not afraid to die; I am going to Jesus; meet me in heaven." A slight twitching of the facial muscles, and the weary frame was at rest. As the soul left the body, it seemed as though God had imprinted a kiss of peace, for she lay as if asleep, with a smile on her lips. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord!"

L. W. WOOD.

Every man, however humble his station or feeble his power, exercises some influence on those who are about him for good or evil.—Prof. A. Sedgwick.

What is sweeter than roses
That bloom in the beauty of June?
Or the stately and fragrant lilies
Whose bells ring a summer tune?
Ah, sweeter the rose blowing
On the cheeks of those we love,
And the lily of health that's glowing
The cheeks of red rose above.

But how soon the lily and the rose wither in the faces of our American women. Why is it? Simply because so many of them are the victims of weaknesses, irregularities and functional derangements incidental to the sex. If they would use Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription all these beauty and health-destroying ailments might be warded off, and we would hear less about women "growing old before their time."

To regulate the stomach, liver and bowels, Dr. Pierce's Pellets excel. One a dose.

Scientific.

The Chemistry of an Egg-Shell.

The shell proper of an egg is made up mostly of earthy materials. The proportions vary according to the food of the bird, but ninety to ninety-seven per cent. is carbonate of lime. The remainder is composed of from two to five per cent. of animal matter and from one to five per cent. of phosphate of lime and magnesia. Now, Mr. P. L. Simmonds asks, "Where does the hen procure the carbonate of lime with which to form the shell?" If we confine fowls in a room, and feed them with any of the cereal grains, excluding all sand, dust or earthy matter, they will go on for a time and lay eggs, each one having a perfect shell, made up of the same calcareous elements. Vanquelin shut up a hen for ten days, and fed her exclusively upon oats, of which she consumed 7,474 grains in weight. During this time four eggs were laid, the shells of which weighed nearly 409 grains; of this amount 276 grains were carbonate of lime, 17¾ grains phosphate of lime, and 10 grains gluten. But there is only a little carbonate of lime in oats, and whence could this 409 grains of the rocky material have been derived? The answer to this question opens up some of the most curious and wonderful facts connected with animal chemistry. The body of a bird, like that of a man, is but a piece of chemical apparatus, made capable of transforming hard and fixed substances into others of a very unlike nature. In oats there is contained phosphate of lime, with an abundance of silica, and the stomach and assimilating organs of the bird are made capable of decomposing the lime-salt and forming with the silica a silicate of lime. This new body is itself made to undergo decomposition, and the base is combined with carbonic acid, forming carbonate of lime. The carbonic acid is probably derived from the atmosphere, or more directly, perhaps, from the blood. These chemical changes among hard inorganic bodies are certainly wonderful when we reflect that they are brought about in the delicate organs of a comparatively feeble bird, under the influence of animal heat and the vital forces. They embrace a series of decomposing and recomposing operations which it is difficult to imitate in the laboratory.—Popular Science.

A NEW TELEPHONE.—The Lowth telephone is a new, and in some respects, remarkable instrument, by which speech is transmitted, without making use of sound waves as in the Bell and other forms of electrical telephones. In the Lowth telephone the transmission is effected by means of an electrical plug, which is placed against the neck of the operator, near the vocal organs. The vibrations of the neck produced by the act of speaking, shake or move the plug, thereby giving rise to corresponding electrical undulations which pass over the wire to a receiver at the opposite end of the wire, and are there heard by the listener. A receiver and plug are both combined in one instrument. The instrument is held to the ear, with the plug resting against the throat. The operator speaks, and the voice is heard at the other end of the line, with the utmost clearness.—Scientific American.

THE BRAKEMAN'S LINGO MUST GO.—Dr. George H. Kirwan, of Wilkesbarre, has invented a station indicator to be used in the cars, which is an ingenious piece of electrical mechanism, and which has had a very satisfactory test. The apparatus occupies a prominent place in the front end of the car, over the door, and after one station is passed it drops a white card with the name of the next station in large letters. Passengers are notified of this change in the announcement by the ringing of an electric bell. If adopted, it will relieve the brakeman from calling out the name of the next station, and thus save the razzle-dazzled passengers from much annoyance, who are not able to interpret their periodical shouts. The machine had a practical test on a local train between Wilkesbarre and Mount Pleasant a few days ago, and the railroad men who were experimenting declare it is a grand success.—City Item.

Nature.

HOW BEAUTIFULLY systematic is Nature in everything she does. In the animate and inanimate world all is perfect system. System is the secret of Nature's success. So it is with the human body. Boy—Mother, since I have been using Wolff's Acme Blacking my shoes wear longer than ever before and I never get my feet wet, but I do not think they look as smooth as when I first used it.

Mother—Indeed, my son, I am sorry you are so careless. You forgot that even a good thing is only good when properly used. You have not even looked at the directions, for they are yet around the neck of the bottle. Now you must read them, and they will get you out of your trouble. Your father and I keep our shoes in elegant order by its use. I use it about once a month and papa about once a week.

Wolff's ACME Blacking

Is wonderful; preserving and Waterproofing any leather; giving it a deep, rich black lustre which lasts a week. Don't use oftener. Do not confound ACME Blacking with any other. Sold by Shoe Stores, Grocers, Druggists, &c. Try it on your Harness.

CHEAPEST FURNITURE HOUSE IN NEW ORLEANS

J. G. GRANT

50 and 52 Baronne Street,

OFFERS THE FOLLOWING SUGGESTIONS:

THERE are two ways to make money. One is to earn it; the other is to save it. There are two ways of saving money. When you save a dollar by putting it in the bank you do well, but when you save a dollar by shrewd purchasing you do better. The first is saving; the second is in reality earning. So there are two ways of earning money—by labor and by wise purchasing.

LET ME SAY A WORD ABOUT PURCHASING:

The FIRST THING to learn in order to become a successful purchaser is that price means nothing until you have seen the goods. The fact that Bedroom Suits, for instance, cost $100 in one store and $65 in another tells you nothing. The $100 suit may be worth $125, while the $65 suit may not be worth carrying away. It is only when you have compared the goods as well as the prices that you are in a position to judge of what is cheap and what is not. Goods may be too cheap sometimes. Prices don't always tell the whole story. Either know the goods or know the dealer. If he has a reputation for liberality and straightforward dealing, people soon find it out. When you learn that he is carrying a larger and better stock, and that his trade is increasing rapidly, both in the city and the adjoining states, why it means something. It means that his business methods have been approved, that people have discovered his liberal ways and taken advantage of them, and it points you the direction for your next purchase.

The SECOND PRECEPT in successful purchasing is that the best is always cheapest in the end. Many people who have never visited my warerooms have the idea that only cheap goods are sold because I do not put on much outside style and occupy a showy and very high priced store, but one visit will prove that this is a great mistake. Remember that there is a big difference between CHEAP GOODS and GOODS CHEAP. Go elsewhere for cheap goods, but come here for goods cheap. The man who sells cheap goods sells his customers at the same time. I am not in that line of business. The public are beginning to understand the difference, and my trade proves it very clearly. A word to the wise is sufficient. Call and see how cheap fashionable furniture of the best quality can be sold.

Centenary College

JACKSON, LA.

Jackson, La., is near Ethel, on the Valley R. R., 113 miles north of New Orleans. The location is beautiful and healthful, the buildings are elegant and ample, and the Faculty is complete and able. The sale of intoxicating drinks is forbidden by law within five miles of the College. Its endowment fund is being rapidly increased, and the college is expected to enter upon a new career of prosperity.

Special attention will be given to the health, morals and biblical instruction of the students.

For terms, Catalogue, or other information apply to Prof. G. H. Wiley Jackson, La., or to W. L. C. Hunnicutt, President.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Ex-President and Mrs. Cleveland arrived in New York City, on March 6. Mr. Cleveland will practice law in that city.

President Harrison signed the commissions of all the members of his Cabinet on the sixth instant, and they were formerly inducted into office during the day.

Three leading breweries in Rochester, N. Y., were sold last week to an English syndicate. The price is said to have been $3,500,000.

Isaac V. Williams, the venerable millionaire philanthropist of Philadelphia, is dead.

Several earthquake shocks were felt in many sections of Pennsylvania on March 8. No damage reported.

A most disastrous fire occurred in Louisville, Ky., on the eighth. Over $200,000 worth of property was destroyed.

White Caps are reported to be in the vicinity of San Antonio, Texas, and within the past week several reputable citizens have received warning and threatening epistles.

The Pythians' Castle Hall in this city was dedicated on March 9. After the dedication of the hall had been completed, Hon. A. E. Read, grand vice-chancellor, of Baton Rouge, delivered an address.

President Harrison has filled three second-class positions by sending nominations to the Senate for ministers to Spain, Japan and Switzerland.

In the North Carolina Legislature, special provision was made for more fully pensioning Confederate veterans and needy widows, a tax of 3 cents on each $100 worth of property and 9 cents on the poll being levied for the purpose.

By the will of Isaac V. Williams, of Philadelphia, the Mechanical School received a fund of $2,500,000.

John Ericsson, the inventor, is dead.

A thirty-foot boiler exploded in Cleveland, O., on March 11, killing two persons and injuring eleven.

FOREIGN.

King Milan, of Servia, abdicated the throne last week in favor of his son, thirteen years old, who will begin to reign under the title of Alexander I. A regency has been appointed, and a new cabinet formed.

The Boersen Zeitung says that the United States had proposed to refer that portion of the Samoan question concerning Germany and the United States alone to arbitration. Germany is not averse to this, but adheres to the opinion that the conference to be continued in Berlin should settle the question involving Germany, Great Britain and the United States.

A dispatch from Rome to the London Daily News says that President Harrison's Cabinet fully satisfies the Vatican and that the information has reached the propaganda that under Mr. Harrison's administration the relations between the United States and the holy see will be of a most cordial character.

The British vessel Eldorado, 270 tons burden, has passed through the Panama Canal from Aspinwall to Chagres, a distance of fifteen miles. This is the first foreign vessel that has passed through the canal from one port to another.

Advices from Berne say that the damage done by the recent snowstorm is enormous. Thousands of splendid firs were destroyed and several old inns and bridges ruined.

A dispatch from Roumania says that the ex-president of the Chamber of Deputies has received a letter, in which it is threatened to blow up the Chamber with dynamite. The police are reported as being vigilant to thwart any such attempt.

The House of Commons, by a vote of 112 to 79, rejected Mr. Bradlaugh's motion to expunge from the records the particulars of his expulsion from the House in 1880.

While a party of students in Zurich were at work making bombs, an explosion took place, killing one and wounding several others. Many arrests were made.

A thaw and heavy rain have caused serious floods in the midlands in the west of England. Numerous fatalities are reported.

French Ambassador Herbette gave a dinner in honor of Emperor William. This was the first of its kind since 1883, and was a success. The Emperor said he was happy to give a mark of sympathy to France and its representative.

During the progress of a riot in Chin Kiang, China, recently, many foreign buildings were burned; among them the British consulate, the British marshal's house, the Baptist Church and the houses of two missionaries—a Rev. Mr. Hinnex and a Rev. Mr. Bryant. The United States consulate and the Methodist Chapel were not burned.

A party of 107 American pilgrims has arrived at Genoa, from Marseilles.

The Salvation Army has been prohibited by the authorities from carrying on its work in Berlin.

A landlord and his sister were ambushed and fired upon in county Clare (Ireland) on March 10. Both are in a critical condition.

Sixteen torpedo boats, intended for the German navy, are now in process of construction.

The Blood

is the source of health; therefore, to keep well, purify the blood by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla. This medicine is peculiarly designed to act upon the blood, and through that upon all the organs and tissues of the body. It has a specific action, also, upon the secretions and excretions, and assists nature to expel from the system scrofula, humors, impure particles, and effete matter through the lungs, liver, bowels, kidneys and skin. It effectually aids weak, impaired and debilitated organs. A trial will convince you that it does possess peculiar curative powers.

THOS. C. HERNDON, Manager.

NEW ORLEANS, March 8, 1889.

Compared with last week: Legal tenders, increase, $575,700; Loans, increase, $265,400; deposits, increase, $387,800; banks and bankers, increase, $230,200; exchange, increase, $811,200.

Col. James Andrews, civil engineer, formerly Gen Eads' chief assistant, and now at the head of the Tehauntepec Railway scheme, says, in reference to this project, recently when in Mexico he asked for certain changes in the concessions, which the government of that country had already made to the Atlantic and Pacific Railway Company. European capitalists, who are largely interested in this company, say that if those changes are made, they would at once put capital into the enterprise that would assure its immediate start and rapid completion.

Col. E. L. Corthell, who is now in New Orleans, stated in an interview published in the Times-Democrat that the Mexican government recently amended the concession which had been granted to Capt. James B. Eads for a ship railway across the Ithmus of Tehauntepec by guaranteeing 5 per cent. interest on $60,000,000, the estimated cost of the railway: that is; they have agreed to make up any deficit in the earnings to this extent, so that if the ship railway does not earn 5 per cent. on $60,000,000, the government will make it up. The promoters of the railway are soon to hold a very important meeting in regard to it, and the expectation is that the work of construction will commence within a very short time.

Col. Andrews, speaking about the failure of the De Losseps Panama Canal Company, said: "I believe that the canal will be built, but that it will not be maintained or operated. It would be much better to complete it than to start work on the Nicaragua Canal. The Nicaragua would be 170 miles long, while the Panama is fifty miles. The old Panama Company failed for $350,000,000, but I believe that under the reorganization it could be finished for $150,000,000. In my opinion no such canal would ever be able to pay a dividend. The tolls would have to be so high that vessels would go around the Horn. Ship railways can be built for one-third less than ship canals and are more feasible and practicable. Canals are subjected to great danger from earthquakes and floods and the locks are continually out of order. The rainfall in the region of the Panama averages from twelve to fourteen feet per year. The locks on the Panama Canal are from sixty to 100 feet high and it is a question whether they will be able to withstand the heavy floods."

The total taxable wealth of twelve Southern States (real estate, personality, railroads, etc.), for 1888, is $3,681,746,945. These figures are far ahead of any previously given. The taxable wealth of Alabama has increased in the past eight years 68 per cent.; Arkansas, 77; Florida, 211; Georgia, 42; Kentucky, 50; Louisiana, 20; Mississippi, 26; North Carolina, 30; South Carolina 26; Tennessee, 44; Virginia, 18, and Texas, 118. The increase in the taxable wealth, of the above-named States amounts to $1,204,176,664.

The loss record in the United States for the month of January, 1889, shows that there were 639 fires, on which the losses amounted to $7,054,666 41, with insurance of $4,148,637.

From Most Rev. Bishop Ryan, of Philadelphia.

I can testify to the efficacy of J. & C. Maguire's Cundurango, it having been my favorite medicine for several years past. I believe it to be the best Anti-Bilious Cathartic and Corrector of Liver, Blood and Kidney derangements that can be taken, and its general use in families would no doubt avert attacks of sickness.

P. J. RYAN.

Railroad and Industrial Notes.

The gross earnings of the Texas and Pacific railroad for the year ending 1888 from freight, passengers, mail and express service, amounts to $6,374,386 29; the operating expenses, which were 77.30 per cent., and taxes amounting to $5,071,669 27; net income from operation of road and other resources was $1,433,653 21.

At the annual meeting held at New York, March 6, the following directors were elected for the ensuing year:

Messrs. Jay Gould, Samuel Sloan, John T. Terry, Henry G. Marquand, Samuel Thomas, George J. Gould, Thomas J. Eckert, Russell Sage, C. M. McGhee, C. E. Saterlee and A. L. Hopkins, all of New York; Isaac J. Wistar and J. N. Hutchinson, of Philadelphia; E. B. Wheelock, New Orleans; M. H. Smith, of Louisville; S. H. H. Clarke, of St. Louis, and John C. Brown, of Texas.

The new directors of this board are; Messrs John T. Terry, Henry G. Marquand and T. J. Eckert, representing the Missouri Pacific; Samuel Thomas, also president of East Tennessee, Milton H. Smith, vice president of the Louisville and Nashville, and E. B. Wheelock.

One year ago the number of electric light plants in the country was estimated at 4000; to-day they are said to number 5747. One year since the number of arc lights was 175,000; to-day there are 219,924; and the incandescent lamps have increased from 1,750,000 to 2,504,490. During the year, the increase of capital invested in electric light plants has amounted to $09,397,734.

Buckingham's Dye for the Whiskers is easy of application, and never fails to color the beard brown or black as may be desired. Try it.

Emerson said that only about six of the twenty-five thousand books published each year are really worth reading.

The clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policy-holders.

The Episcopal Diocese of New York has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and The Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

CHEAPEST FURNITURE HOUSE IN NEW ORLEANS.—This is the heading of the advertisement of Mr. J. G. Grant's, 50 and 52 Baronne street, New Orleans. Now, we would suggest to our readers to peruse it carefully, and they will be astonished at the low prices which Mr. Grant is selling furniture for. As this gentleman is thoroughly reliable, and guarantees the smallest article that leaves his store, we feel satisfied that those who may try him once will have further dealings with him. There is no store of this character in the South that keeps a larger or finer assortment than his, and as his expenses are less than others in the same line, he has informed us that he can sell lower. Try him.—N. O. Weekly Picayune, January 24.

The Equitable Life—A Wonderful Success.

We call special attention to the Statement of the Equitable Life Assurance Society, to be found in another column. This is the Society's twenty-ninth annual report. When it was organized, in 1859, the business of life insurance was conducted along lines that afforded but limited privileges to the insured, and in many cases worked grave injustice to the patrons of insurance companies. The officers of the Equitable were quick to see the necessity for reforms. They recognized the fact that policy-holders had rights to be regarded as well as the policy-maker, and they addressed themselves earnestly to the work of reform. The result is seen in the revolution which has taken place in the conduct of the business within the past twenty years.

The Statement published to-day shows that policies were issued during the past year for an amount exceeding One Hundred and Fifty Millions of Dollars, bringing the aggregate of Outstanding Assurance to the enormous sum of Five Hundred and Fifty Millions, and the Surplus to Twenty Millions. In New Business, Outstanding Assurance, Surplus and many other particulars which go to make a company deserving of public patronage, the Equitable stands among the leading insurance companies of the world.

Mr. R. P. Lake, of Grenada, who possesses an extensive acquaintance in Mississippi, has been appointed general agent of this company in that State.

The second edition of "Dr. Black's great book, "Christian Womanhood," is now out. It should be on the centre-table of every lady in the land. It stands at the top in its line. Solid, sound, Christ-like in its declarations. It still sells almost with the rapidity of the light and trashy novelettes of the news-stand. Any young lady will do good by helping to put it in circulation. See ad.

IrIEE.

BY MARIA TAYLOE-PIPKIN.

And what is life, at dawn so fair?
A breath afloat upon the air;
God's boon to be just what we make it;
A harp sweet-strung unless we break it;
A thing of joy, if taken rightly,
O'er which God's smile o'er falleth brightly;
A time we all may call our own
(Though none should live for self alone)
In which to build, with half-veiled eyes,
A ladder reaching to the skies,
With Christ our sure foundation-stone,
Covered with blood that will atone
For ev'ry shopeless round we make,
For ev'ry faltering step we take,
If we but do our very best,
And, ever trustful, leave the rest,
With child-like faith, to His dear love,
Knowing he'll hold the end above,
E'en whilst he reaches down His hand
To steady us, until we stand
Beside Him in the "better land,"
Close on to Jordan's storm-beat strand.

China Notes.

BY YOUNG J. ALLEN, D. D.

When the United States Congress assed the Chinese Exclusion Bill, he government, it would seem, had me fears as to how it might be re-arded in China; hence for the past wo months, or more, the admiral's agship and some two or three other rge men-of-war have been conspicu-us objects in our harbor. Every-hing here, however, and hereabouts as perfectly quiet, until, a remarka-le coincidence, the very day the last ip took its departure, there sudden-y on the lightning's wing came a ispatch announcing he first port on the Yang-tsz, about 50 miles above Shanghai. The de-ails are not all in yet; but from some f the victims, members of the South-rn Baptist Mission, we learn that the oreign Police Station, the English onsulate and the Baptist mission resi-ence and church have all been de-troyed, the consulate and mission remises having been fired and burned to the ground. The origin of the rouble is yet unknown, though it is aid to have been provoked by a for-gn policeman ill-using a Chinese on he street. It is said that the United tates Consulate was also looted and, erhaps, other foreigners have also uffered in a similar manner. The opulation of the city is said to be bout two hundred thousand, and bout six thousand people are reported have been participators or sympa-izers with the mob. Being Chinese ew Year, the officials of the place ere absent for one cause or another, o there was no authority present to ope with the outbreak. English and merican men-of-war have been sum-oned by telegraph and will soon be here. But all too late—the deed is one. The only sufferers among the issionaries, so far as known, are the aptists, who have lost their premises, welling and church, and all their ersonal effects, barely escaping in heir night-clothes to the steamer by hich they came down to Shanghai. o far as yet reported, no one is illed or missing.

The above reminds us how precarious life among this multitudinous eathen! Yet it is a thousand wonders we e not all victims, and I think it eaks volumes for this long-suffering ople. Our European aggressiveness, not to mention the often high-handed treatment and abuse the poor natives sometimes suffer even here in our streets from men wearing Christian clothes, is enough to kindle resentment against us. Yet they suffer and we go scot-free.

A CHANGE IS COMING.

We have been practically dominating China now since 1860—nearly 30 years—during all which time China has been subject to a regency. But in a few days, 26 inst., the long-looked-for period of China's emancipation will have arrived. At that date the Emperor is to assume the reins of government, and the new era of Chinese intercourse with foreign nations be inaugurated. China is a great literalist, and as she now holds in her hands a convenient copy of our International Law, you may not be surprised that her future intercourse with the West will be characterized by the strictest of literal interpretations. This is certain: She is going to assert her rights out of the book of the law which we have taught her. But that is all as it should be. It is a great triumph even to have placed the law in her hands, and now that she is disposed to accept and use it, foreign nations should have as little objection as the missionary who is only too glad to see his converts taking up and promoting the gospel which he has so long labored to give them.

MR. CLEVELAND ELECTED PRESIDENT IN CHINA.

The vote cast by Americans in China gave Mr. Cleveland a considerable majority, and the surprise here was very great when a few hours later our dispatches began to arrive indicating his defeat in the home-land. It having been settled that a new administration is to follow, and that a change is inevitable here as elsewhere, a strong movement was set on foot to try and retain in China, if possible, our much esteemed and respected consul-general at Shanghai, Gen. J. D. Kennedy. Accordingly, three separate memorials—one by American citizens, one by American missionaries and one by all foreigners, including all nationalities—have been fully signed and sent on to Gen. Harrison. This is a rare compliment, and we hope to keep the General with us.

SHANGHAI, CHINA, Feb. 7, 1889.

Missouri Letter.

BY W. B. CHAPMAN, D. D.

Many of the churches in the Missouri Conference have been blessed this year with very gracious revivals, and there have been more conversions and additions to the church than during any year since 1885, when there were over 4,000 additions within the bounds of our Conference. White, at Plattsburg; Jackson, at Columbia; Whitten, at Moberly; Snarr, at Canton; Tucker, at Montgomery City; Rooker, at Winchester; Hardin and McMurry, at St. Joseph; Gibson, at Troy, and a number of the other preachers have had revivals of great power, and have each received from fifty to a hundred members into the church.

Park Church, in this city, has also been greatly blessed, and has received a large number of accessions. Sam Small was with me nine days, and rendered very valuable service. He preaches a pure gospel, and his trumpet gives forth no uncertain sound. Out of some twenty-five sermons which he preached while with us, there was only one on which any criticism, so far as Methodist theology is concerned, could be offered. Some one calls Bro. Small "a gilt-edged edition of Sam Jones." I think such a term is unjust both to Bro. Small and Bro. Jones: They are entirely different—the complements of each other, working well together, but in no sense similar, save that both have a keen sense of fun, and know how to both amuse and interest an audience.

I have seen but little notice of the great university which the Roman Catholics propose to establish at Washington, and I think the facts are not generally known. They have secured one of the finest sites in the suburbs of the city, and have already begun work. The plant alone is to cost $5,000,000, and the endowment is an after consideration, but will be commensurate with this original cost. Students are to be supplied by the parish and diocesan authorities, and will thus come from almost every Congressional district throughout the Union. These are to be selected students, notable for mental and pious (Catholic) abilities. It is easy to see what a powerful political enginery this will be, and how easily legislation will be effected by it. The majority of our Congressmen are very liberal in their religious ideas, and many of them are susceptible to the influences which can be exerted by such a constituency, which would always be watchful and alert. Thus Washington will be filled with these propagandists, and in emergencies of legislation their secret and coercive influence upon politicians will be immeasurable. The project, as it is proposed to be carried out, is not only a dangerous menace to evangelical religion, but to the freedom of our governmental affairs. The past history of Catholicism shows what it will do if it has the power, and it is no secret that the Vatican has for the past fifteen years been looking upon this country with longing eyes.

Then, of course, these Catholic students will have access to all the treasures of the government, as if, indeed, they were gathered for their sole benefit. The magnificent Congressional Library, one of the finest in the world, the Patent Office, the Smithsonian Institute, the botanical collections, and all the other great literary, scientific, mechanical and artistic museums which make Washington a city of such interest, will be open to them, and used as though they were private property. There is, perhaps, no way to prevent all this; but a counter-influence could and should be brought to bear by the establishment of a grand Protestant University there, which could share in these superior advantages. President White has shown the great necessity and the magnificent opening for such an institution in a recent number of the Forum. It is, indeed, somewhat remarkable that such an institution has not been before established at this great center.

There has been for some time a Bureau of Catholic Missions in Washington, and it was through this Bureau that last year the Catholics, who compose about one-tenth of our population, received more than one-half of the money allowed by the government for the education of Indians in contract schools. The statement of Senator Blair, made upon the floor of the United States Senate, will be remembered, that "upon the staff of every great paper of this country there is a Jesuit, whose business it is to see that a blow is struck whenever there is an opportunity to strike at the common school system of America."

It is time for Protestantism in this country to guard itself against these dangerous manifestations. Rome's lamb-like disposition in the United States does not imply a change of heart. She is tolerant where she is helpless. If she had the power, she would to-day repeat the scenes of the Spanish Inquisition in America. And the Pope openly says that "America is the hope of Rome." Lafayette, himself a Romanist, said: "If the liberties of the American people are ever destroyed, they will fall by the hands of the Roman clergy."

Who can predict the future of this country? I have great faith in the conservatism and good sense of the American people; but with this hydra of Romanism coiling itself around our vitals, with the Old World pouring its criminals and paupers upon us at the rate of 800,000 per annum, and with the fearful inroads of drunkenness and infidelity, it will need all the strength and faith of evangelical Christianity to save this country for Christ. But I am not a pessimist, by any means, and I have an abiding faith in the final triumph of the truth. We may delay this triumph, however, by not being watchful and vigilant.

Woman's Work.

BY REV. ISAAC L. PEEHLES.

The subject of woman's work is becoming quite momentous, and we confess that we are truly glad that it is, for now there is great hope of her work being properly designated and freedom granted her to perform it. In order to do this we must not forget that she is not a man and, too, that she is not in every respect fitted for the same kind and amount of work that a man is.

"But I would have you know that the head of every man is Christ; and the head of the woman is the man; and the head of Christ is God. Every man praying or prophesying, having his head covered dishonoreth his head. But every woman that prayeth or prophesieth with her head uncovered dishonoreth her head: for that is even all one as if she were shaven." (1. Cor. xi., 3-5.) "Doth not even nature itself teach you that, if a man have long hair, it is a shame unto him? But if a woman have long hair, it is a glory to her: for her hair is given her for a covering." (1. Cor. xi., 14, 15).

"Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands, as unto the Lord. For the husband is the head of the wife even as Christ is the head of the church. Therefore, as the church is subject unto Christ, so let the wives be to their own husbands in everything." (Eph. v., 22-24.) "Unto the woman he said, I will greatly multiply thy sorrows and thy conception; in sorrow thou shalt bring forth children; and thy desire shall be to thy husband and he shall rule over thee." (Gen. iii., 16.) "Even as Sara obeyed Abraham, calling him lord: whose daughters ye are, as long as ye do well, and are not afraid with any amazement. Likewise, ye husbands, dwell with them according to knowledge, giving honor unto the wife, as unto the weaker vessel and as being heirs together of the grace of life." (1. Pet. iii., 5, 7).

Not desiring to detail woman's work, we readily concede, however, that a part of her work is to preach if God calls her to do so. But, after all, there is one of two things that we are compelled to admit: that her work as a preacher is to be limited entirely to the local ranks, or, if extended in that of the itinerant, she is to pledge perpetual maidenhood or widowhood. Motherhood is inconsistent with an effective itinerant preacher. Until the General Conference sees fit and makes provision for licensing women to preach, no presiding elder or Bishop has any right whatever to license a woman to preach. Every preacher who enters our itinerancy solemnly promises not to mend our rules, but to keep them for conscience's sake (Dis. p. 89: 2); and, therefore, whenever he does anything contrary to them, he breaks his promise, and thereby forfeits his right to the itinerancy unless he makes suitable amends.

Fasting.

BY F. M. GRAFE, D. D.

"Why do thy disciples fast not?"

Fasting was not presented as a duty in the Old Testament. There were three feasts: the Passover, the First Fruits, and the Harvest, or Feast of Tabernacles. The only day resembling a fast was the tenth day of the seventh month called the day of atonement, in which they were commanded to rest from their labors and to afflict their souls. The Pharisees boasted that they fasted twice in the week. Moses was forty days in the mount: the presumption is that he fasted. Our Savior was forty days in the wilderness and did eat nothing. These supernatural fasts were no examples for us. The forty days of Lent, it is said, originated in the observance of Quadragesima, or fast of forty hours, during the time when our Savior's body lay in the tomb: but forty days has no authority. Our Savior evidently meant to restrict fasting, as then practiced by the Jews, to a private exercise. "When ye fast be not as the hypocrites of a sad countenance, for they disfigure their faces that they may appear unto men to fast: but thou, when thou fasteth, anoint thy head and wash thy face; that thou appear not unto men to fast, but unto thy Father which seeth in secret." Our Savior said of a certain kind of evil spirits, "This kind cometh not forth but by prayer and fasting."

Of the fasts of the apostles we read that when they set apart Paul and Barnabas for a certain work, they fasted and prayed and laid hands on them. (Acts xiii., 1-3.)

Of the fasts of St. Paul we find they were not voluntary or self-imposed, but are numbered in the same catalogue with other afflictions that came on the apostles. "Approving ourselves in much patience, in afflictions, in necessities, in distresses, in stripes, in imprisonments, in watchings, in fastings." (II. Cor. vi., 4, 5. "In weariness, in painfulness, in wanderings often, in hunger and thirst, in fastings often, in cold and nakedness." (II. Cor. xi., 27.)

In Acts xxvii we read that Paul, after long abstinence, made a petition to the captain of the ship in which they had been sailing, saying, "This is the fourteenth day that (we) ye have tarried and taken nothing (no regular meal). Wherefore, I pray you take some meat, for this is for your health."

From all this we see that it is impossible to prove from the Scriptures that there is any command for public or stated fasting in the Christian church, although we know that it has been practiced by nearly all Christians as a traditional duty. If a man chooses to fast for his own spiritual good, he certainly has the liberty to do so. But no man, no church, has the right to prescribe it as a duty. All decrees of this kind are of human authority only.

But what does our Savior mean by saying "when the bridegroom shall be taken away, then shall ye fast?" Evidently from the context, that they are to be sad and troubled on account of his absence. There will be sorrow enough (John xvi., 6.) when they hear the sad announcement that he must be taken away. The sorrow will be multiplied when they find the cruel manner in which this is to be done. Persecutions also are to follow of every kind. What need of men fasting who are thus beset on every side by the deepest afflictions? Would it be well to add the pain of fasting to all this?

But it may be said, now there are no such persecutions, is it not well for men to lay these burdens upon their souls to keep down pride? We answer: when we see the condition of man in this life there is not much to be proud of. "For man is of few days and full of misery. He cometh forth as a flower and is cut off. He never continueth in one stay." When I look around upon the actual and inevitable sufferings of human life, I can not see there is much need to add to them. Nevertheless, if anyone has a consciousness of too much happiness, if anyone feels puffed up with pride and wealth, if anyone has become gross and lusty by excess of health, it may be well enough for such to lay out his strength in doing good to others. Daily self-denial and taking up the cross will cure all our natural pride and self-conscious strength.

But not only has our Savior discouraged fasting, but the Old Testament writers describe a fast in very different terms from that of mere bodily castigation. "Is this the fast that I have chosen? a day for a man to afflict his soul. * * * Is not this the fast that I have chosen?" etc. (Isaiah lviii. 5-7.)

CONCLUSIONS.

1. That all religions practice fasting.

2. That to be successful, it must be accompanied with other things—benevolence, etc.

3. That nations or communities may be called to fast by public authority in time of great peril, etc.

4. That Christianity seems to lay less stress upon this exercise than do other religions.

5. That private fasting is not discouraged.

The Christianity for To-Day.

Our readers have heard something through our columns of the great mission which our Wesleyan brethren have established and are successfully working in West London. The following article from the Sunday Magazine, for March, concerning that mission, gives a good idea of the plan upon which the work is carried on. We do not hesitate to say that something of the kind is needed among us, especially in our cities. The writer of the article, Mary Harrison, says:

Rightly or wrongly, the masses of London have an ingrained and unutterable contempt for the ordinary institutions of the Christianity they see. Doubtless there is much that is bad, but surely there is also something hopeful in a British mob which can not accept a Christianity that ignores all its own needs, which is a friend of the pious, even a friend of penitents, but not a friend of sinners. It may be a patron of them, a reformer of them; but unless it is a friend of them, they surely refuse to receive even its words. Whatever be its credentials, it looks vile to them—a living lie. Happily, the masses know what is Christian. Little as they know, they have some conception of the Nazarene, vague and limited, and crude enough, maybe, but conception bright and true and divine enough to distinguish between him and the thing they hear and see around them which has taken to itself the Christian name. Theirs is not incapacity for the true; it is incapacity for the corrupt. They decline to believe that if is a vine which bears thorns.

Mr. Hugh Price Hughes and his band of helpers in the West Central London Mission have grandly recognized this fact, and the hope there is for a Christ-like Christianity, which is, first of all, true to flesh and blood, to its need of a brotherhood which combines a conqueror's courage with a Savior's patience. They have discerned in what lies the true cause of man's alienation from the church. Enmity can not last which has made acquaintance with living capability of anything for Christ's sake. To its patience with waywardness, its healing for sickness, its joy for weariness and sorrow, it is utterly weak. It is not used to men who thus willingly suffer for it; and in time, to such lovely and lovable natures it yields the ascendency.

Wisely, Mr. Hughes, in his West Central Mission, has set himself down by the people's side with inhalers, steam-kettles, air-cushions, blankets, bed-rests, bandages, materials for poultices, babies' clothes, medicines, night dresses, sheets and linen of all kinds, with hands that know how to put a poultice on, to wash a weary face, and (that miracle of the sick-room) to brush a sick man's hair. With all that are diseased, he would come into terms of friendship. He seeks to make "the hem of his garment" sacred. In nothing has the city Christian of the age such opportunity of likeness to the soothing goodness of his Master.

Round about him are hospitals of every kind. What the hubbub of the noisy dwellings and turmoil of the streets will not permit to be cured at home, he conveys to the quiet and noiseless ward of the hospital. "I have taken them there myself in cabs," says his Sister Superior. And while there they are visited and soothed and influenced by a woman's love. Distinction of rank and character are lost to them in the pain and in the joy of recovery. A Sister's hand makes the husband's coffee, and looks after children and dwelling while bed-ridden mothers and wives are away. She is shepherdess of the fold while the sheep have no shepherd. So the throbbing pain in the body grows easier, because the sufferer's mind is not anxious. Even in the valley of the shadow of death the stricken mother is helped to fear no evil; neither to the home which is left, nor in the possible home which may open its doors to receive her if her sickness shall darken into the stillness of death. She can keep her soul in quietness.

For the sick he provides "food convenient." Too little do men imagine how rough food and rougher cooking, which suits the poor in health, is famine to the squeamish appetite of sickness. Beef tea, beaten-up eggs and milk, served just so as suits the particular palate; given, too, spoonful by spoonful, with a "There, now, do take this," spoken in entreating tones; dainties fetched from an eating-house; and a delicate spray of Eau de Cologne, are all divine ministries of life and slumber to intense exhaustion. Death, too, is sacred. "Often they ask me to promise that no other hands but mine shall touch them when they are dead," tells its own tale of the triumph of a Sister's" hospitable love. "Run to Wardour Hall and ask the nurse to come," often spoken when serious accidents have happened, is not far from that saying: "If thou hadst been here my brother had not died."

Ten sisters go their daily and nightly rounds to bring knowledge of illness to the medical superintendent; then all that can be done follows. Six eminent physicians and surgeons, who, for such fees as the invalids can properly afford, or free, work with the superintendent. Surgical apparatus and medicine are supplied. No parents are allowed to feel that they are being treated at the price of their children's bread, or of a debt which will take them months of family privation to pay. "Use another's tenderness," that is the watchword of the medical visitants of the sick poor—a rich treasure of Christ! Independence of character, too, is dear to them, and by these ministers of love is not lost. Invalids share the cost where they can but are not allowed to lie anxious about it. Helper and needy, blending one within another, can not err in this.

All is free where—as one of those who go forth to minister says she has known—ten shillings a week has to go to the landlord out of eighteen shillings earned by the father. No wife nor family-sickness can hope for recovery where there is but eight shillings to provide clothes and food!

Infidelity pauses with astonishment at the strange tones of the disciple's voice and the gentle touch of her healing hand; and is willing to listen to the gracious story of Him who taught her these wholesome ways. Whether Jesus be Messiah or not, they may not yet know; but one thing they do know—that whereas they were once sick and friendless, they are now well, and have one whose kindliness they love. They have no longer wood statuettes of Jesus; they have a bit of his lavish love made flesh and dwelling among them; a singular mingling of the human and divine which merits faith in it for "the work's sake." A blinding light comes down from heaven and strikes them down to pray.

A true perception of the gospel is the entire forgetfulness of self, utter absence of any pretension, and the complete and entire refusal to accept the world's praise or judgment.—Gen. Gordon.

THE LAST-SOUGHT REFUGE.

BY OKAN THESCH.

If I ever had anywhere appeared in space
Another place of refuge where to flee,
Our hearts had taken refuge in that place,
And not with thee.

For we again at creation's dawn had been
Like prisoned eagles through great worlds had sought
Though but a foot of ground to plant our feet,
Where thou were not.

And only when we found on earth and air,
In heaven or hell, that such might nowhere be—
That we could not flee from thee anywhere,
We fled to thee.

Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of Louisiana Conference.

Women of the Church: The winter is past, with its season of inertia; all nature is springing into new life, and with the springtime comes seed planting and joyous praise to the Father of all blessing. Let us put off our sloth and bestir us about the Master's business while we unite our voices in the universal song of praise. While we have been shut in our comfortable homes, the issues of life and death have been steadily marching on. Many heathen souls have, day by day, gone down into endless night. Our missionaries have kept their places in the front of the conquering hosts, battling ever with the powers of darkness. Now comes our working season; let us be up and doing valiant work for their support. Gather your societies together; rally your members; infuse new life into the idle and indifferent; uphold the hands of your willing workers; extend your membership, and collect your dues; but, above all, strive to awaken an interest in missions. This cause is the life of the church. Read and talk and live missions until the pulse of the whole church is quickened. Your light, if smothered under a bushel, will go out. Lift your candle up high, and the very air which is necessary for its brightness will convey the glad cheering beams out into the regions of darkness. Let every worker feel assured that she needs the work more than the work needs her. Let every heart be burdened with the love which yearns for expression, and then, whether the offering be a priceless alabaster box of ointment or the widow's two mites, it will be holy and acceptable unto the Lord.

The Annual Convention of Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of Louisiana Conference will meet in Delhi during the month of July. In due time the exact date will be announced. Elect your delegates as soon as possible, and let every auxiliary have a representative. This part of the home work can not be too strongly stressed. There is strength in union and inspiration in numbers. The zeal and interest gathered up will kindle a holy fire, which will burn and diffuse warmth through the delegates into every auxiliary. The district secretaries are earnestly solicited to attend, and all ministers and lovers of the work are cordially invited.

A Prospective Book.

To the Preachers and Members of M. E. C., S.—

DEAR BRETHREN: I contemplate having prepared in the interests of my work a book to be entitled, "The Gospel Among the Slaves." I desire to embody in this volume sketches of those who were in anywise connected with giving the gospel to the slaves before the war, as well as such incidents, historical points, and data as will properly fall under the head designated. Brethren, especially elderly brethren, who were missionaries to the slaves before the war, who can furnish reminiscences of the character desired—whether personal or otherwise—as well as any other matter of interest, will confer a favor by forwarding same. All such contributions will be duly acknowledged, and given proper credit in the volume. I desire particularly points touching upon the work of our church among the slaves before the war, also sketches of some of the more prominent of these slaves themselves; such as Sandy Kendall, in Georgia; Harry Merrick, in North Carolina; Father Castile Selby, in South Carolina, etc.

I have turned the compilation of this work over to Miss Annie Maria Barnes, of Duluth, Ga., now one of the most competent and painstaking of our younger church writers, and whose last work, "The Life of David Livingstone," bids fair to give her a national reputation. Work hitherto done by Miss Barnes affords ample evidence that this commission will be well and faithfully carried out.

Brethren who are able to furnish any of the material desired will please forward same, either to the undersigned at Covington, Ga., or direct to the compiler at Duluth, Ga.

Your brother in Christ,

W. C. DUNLAP.

"Location for the New College."

MR. EDITOR: In the last issue of the ADVOCATE there were two letters presenting the claims of Brandon as a suitable place to locate the proposed new college. I agree with Bros. Peebles and Featherston that good health is the first consideration; but I can not concede that Brandon is healthier than Winona. I believe Winona has advantages over Brandon which will be quite a consideration in the location of said college. (1) Winona is built on both sides of the Illinois Central railroad, and the Georgia Pacific will run just north of its business streets, and through the resident portion of the town. (2) Winona is a healthy town. There is no local cause to produce sickness, and its streets and lots are kept clean. (3) Winona is a dry town, and it is likely to remain so, for nearly every business man in town, five of the seven lawyers, nearly all the doctors, and the principal property holders of the town are prohibitionists. The great Methodist Church of Mississippi can not afford to locate its college for the education of its boys in a whisky town. When it does it, as against the bids of other towns offering even a little smaller sum of money as an inducement, then I think it ought to quit making great claims to morality. Brandon, I understand, is a dry town, and I am not writing about that town under this head. (4) As to accessibility, Winona can not be excelled in the State. Situated on the Illinois Central, about one hundred miles north of Jackson, and seventy-five miles south of Oxford, and at the crossing of the Georgia Pacific railway, it is in close connection with the great Delta country, from which it expects to draw a part of its support. The importance of this item must not be forgotten. It is also in close connection with the eastern part of the State. (5) It is far enough removed from the other male colleges of the State to commend it as the proper place of location. Jackson is too near Clinton; any town south of Jackson is too near Centenary; Meridian is too near Greensboro, Ala.; West Point is too near the A. and M.; Holly Springs is too near Oxford. Brandon lacks accessibility. Winona is near the geographical center of the State, and, with the advantages already mentioned, there can be but one thing lacking, to wit: money. But Whom proposes to make a liberal offer at the proper time. Let the college be located where the morals of our boys will be guarded, and where their religious welfare will be attended to.

Yours for Winona,

T. W. LEWIS.

From the Work.

FRIAR'S POINT, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: This is, in some respects, a most delightful place. It is one of the oldest towns on the east bank of the Mississippi river, between Memphis and New Orleans. Since the construction of the Valley road, the town has lost a great deal of strength, socially and financially, as well as religiously; but the general understanding is, that the loop-line running up the levee is to come by here, and much of the old prestige of the community will return. We are here, very comfortably situated for the year, among a clever, kind people; but for a number of years the church in this place has been asleep, and in a dying condition. We do not know where to lodge the responsibility for this state of things. We have had some of the best consecrated talent this Conference ever produced in charge of the church here. We think, however, that a lax administration of discipline has been principally to blame. I find an instance of nervous anxiety to increase the membership, which led to a slight compromise with the world. The result is that the church has become a sacrifice to worldliness. The best element in the church has been tongue-tied and handcuffed, and some of the pastors who have served this point have been tortured more or less with the same troubles. The pastor is forewarned not to open his mouth in condemnation of sin, nor in vindication of the Discipline. How did this begin? By a smooth bargain virtually annulling the vows of baptism and church membership. I have known of such before. It is this: A certain preacher, years ago, admitted into our church some members, giving them the privilege to dance and engage in other worldliness, which their conscience, forsooth, did not condemn. It is hard to believe that a Methodist preacher, under the vows of ordination, would thus act. But it is even so. These parties had been expelled from a sister denomination for the same offenses, and found shelter in our bosom. But it was the poisonous serpent instead of a harmless babe. They are not really in our church, for they could not ratify the vows and reserve the aforesaid privilege.

Can Methodism bear such a reproach? Is this the spirit of our precious Savior, of his holy apostles, of our fathers, of Methodism of to-day? Would Fletcher, Wesley, Coke, Asbury, McKendree, and the great and good fathers of Methodism from 1739 to 1889, and the precious, devoted mothers of Israel recognize these as their spiritual children? Is there not too much catering to the world, the flesh, and the devil for patronage among our preachers? God forbid that I should not as a censor toward my brethren. I feel the responsibility that is upon us. I do not impugn the motives actuating my brethren. There is, no doubt, the best of intentions behind their administration; but there is such a thing as zeal without knowledge.

It is a hazardous thing to receive unregenerate persons into the church without probation, especially so when there is a spirit of self-will and insubordination to the rules of the church. It was a risk even when the old class meeting was an established and universal custom in our church, which served as a nursery for young converts, and held them responsible for their conduct and cultivated their piety. How much more so when we have no nursery, and practically little discipline to regulate the lives of our members! This thing of taking people into full connection with the church for a mere desire to be saved from sin and live better, will not do. Nothing short of a full fulfilment of the vows will suffice, and then a subsequent fruitfulness to betoken the continuity of the initial faith and pledge.

In the preamble to the "General Rules" the desire is not all that is required for membership; yet I have known persons received into full connection on this platform, and this course has wrought damage to our Zion. What does the preamble say? "Where this" desire "is really fixed in the soul, it will be shown by its fruits. It is, therefore, expected," etc. This phraseology presupposes probation. To take in everyone who merely wanted to be saved from God's wrath, would be to receive all indiscriminately, for no sinner lives who does not want to be saved from the wrath of God.

But I rejoice and thank God that we are here in much better condition, spiritually, than one month ago. Rev. Joe Jones, brother to Sam, has been preaching, laboring and praying here among us, and a good revival has been the result. He is a fair sample of Sam's stock. He did some much-needed subsoiling and grubbing, which was the only salvation for the church. The Christian sinners got mad and slandered him, but the truly Christian element in the church joined with me and held his hands up, and, despite the venom of the slanderous persecution, he came out triumphant. Sin had become respectable, and some of the church who were guilty were most vicious in their denunciation. God bless him! He is a man of God. The community is now sorry that he is gone. We received ten on profession of faith and some by letter. We expect to double our membership this year. There is a general awakening in this community, and we shall see other souls born to God. This people are my friends, for they have shown themselves such. For two months I have prayed and labored for a revival. This saves the membership and vindicates the Discipline. It may be that some will have to be expelled finally; but the church, as a body, is going to live a better life, and conform to the Discipline. I shall do all I can do, by love and prayerful effort, to rectify the church and save the rebellious. If any of my brethren want good, thorough grubbing done, and a genuine revival, send for Jones. We expect to carry up all the collections ordered by the Conference. My daily prayer is, God save Friar's Point!

FANNIN CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: The good work of God is still going on among us up here.

About one month ago I made a special visit to an aged man in the bounds of my circuit, who had never made any pretensions to religion. In due time I told him I had come to have a talk with him about his soul. Instead of his becoming offended, he was much affected by the conversation, and concluded by saying that he would take his soul's salvation under prayerful consideration, and if he came to a favorable conclusion, he would let me know when I could come and receive him into the church. As I had prayed earnestly to God to give me access to him, I afterward prayed him to water the seed sown; so, after the space of two weeks, a message came from the family to me, requesting me to come up. Accordingly I went on the morrow, and found my aged friend in penitence for his sins. He stated that he had put his case in the hands of his Savior, and intended to let it remain there; and that he wished to be baptized and received into our church. I received him; and when I had extended the right hand of fellowship to him, I gave the family the same opportunity; at which his wife clapsed his hand in hers and "fell on his neck and kissed him," after which his youngest daughter came forward and, with sobs of joy, embraced her aged father, who for so long a time had wandered from his spiritual home, but now had returned to a Father's embrace. Oh, how I love to be a fisher of men!

Within the last few days I have finished my round in the interest of our Conference collections, which resulted most satisfactorily. At Hollybush, where I only collected fifty cents last year for all the collections combined, I secured three-fourths of their whole assessment for this year. Then at Liberty, where I made my next effort, I was equally successful in getting our several collections in cash and subscriptions. The third and last effort was made at Fannin, on the fourth Sunday in February, last, where we raised the whole sum of our assessments for the collections, including the Bishop's salary, with an excess of $8 85, and more to follow; making in all up to date $150 (nearly twice the amount we raised last year for these purposes). Thus you see that our advancement is not imaginary, but real.

Mr. Editor, This is the first year of my ministerial life that I will have been privileged to carry up all my Conference assessments in full; and unless you have had failures in this respect in your pastoral life, you can hardly conceive how good it makes me to feel that I shall be able to read our assessments and report in full at our next Annual Conference (the Lord will, and I live); that there will be no mouths left unfilled, no soul left unsaved by my failures. Pray for us, that we may continue to grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord.

Respectfully,

J. N. TUCKER, P. C.

MARCH 4, 1889.

BENTON, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: It has been ten weeks since we entered our new home in Benton. I have visited each appointment, save one, three times; visited fifty or more families; procured several new subscribers to our dear old ADVOCATE; collected and forwarded $25 to same.

To tell of all the good things the noble people of this circuit have done to render us comfortable and make us feel welcome, would require too much space. The stewards met in due time, made a liberal assessment, paid to date $180, and have paid a balance of $50, due from this circuit on district parsonage, making in all $200 paid by this circuit on district parsonage; $155 of said amount paid by Midway Church, mostly by one man, Bro. William L. King. Noble man!

In addition to all this, the good women of the Wesleyan Aid Society gave us $15 to help pay moving expenses, etc. Then many good things, such as butter, eggs, hams, potatoes in abundance, just keep dropping in. Then some of the good women concluded we ought to have a buggy; so, with a little effort on the part of some young ladies and young men, an amount sufficient to buy a nice top buggy was soon collected.

Now, Bro. Carter, with a new horse, a new buggy, on a new circuit, with a consecrated Christian woman for a wife, among clever, good people, don't you think I ought to be a thoroughly consecrated man, a faithful, earnest preacher, a true watchman on Zion's wall? God bless the good people of Benton circuit! I want to see them all converted, saved from all sin, purified by the blood of the Lamb, and made every whit whole. God bless you and the ADVOCATE! Pray for us.

H. P. LEWIS.

NOTES FROM PLAQUEMINE BRULEE AND RAYNE.

Well, dear old ADVOCATE, here comes your list of subscribers for the three appointments of this charge—Plaquemine Brulee, Rayne and Crowley. A few names are a little in arrears—most of the subscribers are keeping up. Here is, also, your list of former subscribers, some of whom are now in heaven. And, dear ADVOCATE, they were greatly aided and comforted by your weekly visits while plodding their way towards the celestial city. I shall look after the list—the living—of both former and present subscribers, and solicit new ones also.

At Rayne, last week, I held a ladies' prayer meeting, and secured one subscriber to the ADVOCATE. The next day, at the dinner table, a lady promised her subscription. I find it well to talk up our church papers at social meetings, and on all occasions of pastoral visiting, where they are not taken and read. Yes, dear ADVOCATE, your influence is felt in every family and church where your sacred columns are perused. Leading minds have been discussing, through your columns, several very important subjects of late; one of which is, the financial and spiritual features of our reports at Conference. Some have accused our Bishops and Conferences of measuring men and preachers by the finances in their reports, and others defend by suggesting that reports are statistical—namely on the finances, etc.—and see nothing improper in stressing that feature of our work, since our church must handle money, etc. I was very much pleased at the editorial, few weeks ago, in the Nashville Advocate on this subject, calling attention to the fact that extreme views had been entertained on each side of the subject. Well, that's the way men often do. But, if not too late, let me suggest that we have not unfrequently impressed the spectator attending our Conferences that we are more interested in the finances of our church than anything else; and we are, to a large measure, responsible for it. We should ever regard the spiritual state of the church—the salvation of souls—our work; the end and, therefore, aim of everything the church and ministry undertakes, and the finances simply means through which we accomplish the great end—the salvation of the world. Then why not a Bishop ask a preacher about the conversion and sanctification of souls, the class meeting, the family altars, etc.; and then ask about the money as a means of support, church building, missionary work; in short, as means of saving souls. Let one be the end, and the other the means; and let everybody understand it and feel it.

Another important subject still under discussion is the woman's sphere in the church of God. Well, of this subject I am reading, thinking and praying—too much to be commented upon in this letter; but will simply say that while men are writing that the noblest and highest end of woman's creation is to stay at home, be mothers, rock the cradle and train the children, she is not only doing her share of that, but she is thanclering for the church, teaching, singing, praying, and sometimes beating the last one of us preaching. Go on, my sisters; you haven't time to stop. Men may tell you what you were created for (according to their limited views); but as long as God is so grandly opening doors to usefulness and showering blessings of success upon you, say, "Here am I; send me."

A NEW CHURCH DEDICATED.

MR. EDITOR: Yesterday (March 16) it was my good fortune to dedicate the neat little church recently built at McNair, Miss., by our diligent, enterprising brother, John A. B. Jones. The congregation exceeded the capacity of the building. The collection footed up more than the amount asked for. This church is another vindication of the wisdom of our church extension movement. But for the aid afforded by the Church Extension Board, this house of worship would certainly not have been built at present, and possibly not for years to come.

W. G. BLACK.

"I Die Poor."—McTyeire.

Divine economy differs widely from human notions. This is apparent everywhere, especially in the church. Take, for example, the ministry. The stripling David is selected rather than the staid Eliab, Abinadab or Shammah. The law of "supply and demand," that obtains in other vocations, is here set aside, and the conscience, not the purse, impels to action. "Filthy lucre" corrupts politics; the bigger the salaries, the corrupter the methods to obtain them. This "filthy lucre" is excluded as a motive: "the love of Christ constraineth us."

The Pauls, the Luthers, the Wesleys, the McTyeires "die poor," as the successors of him who "went about doing good." No greater calamity could befall the church than the endowment of the ministry with great riches. Corrupt men would scramble for places, and simony would carry the day. In the divinely appointed poverty of the ministry there is a blessing in disguise. The preachers are "to live of the gospel"—"their bread and water" sure. Like McTyeire, they find it "better to give than to receive." The world takes knowledge of them, that they have been with Jesus."

Patrons to "Preachers' Wives' Loan Fund," made by the Mississippi Conference: Mrs. J. S. Parker, Miss Mamie G. Wood, Mrs. F. M. Williams, Mrs. J. W. Harmon, Mrs. R. F. Witt, Mrs. George Bancroft, Mrs. E. F. Edgar.

Made by the North Mississippi Conference: Mrs. S. M. Thames, Mrs. J. E. Thomas, Mrs. R. P. Mitchell, Mrs. T. C. Wier.

If any name has been paid for that does not appear in these lists, we would be glad to have it sent to us at once; for the names of patrons to the "Preachers' Wives' Loan Fund" given above are all from those Conferences, for which we have received the $5 dues since March, 1888. The list has been sent to the Conference officers for correction, if needed. In the meantime I must ask all who have subscribed, but have not paid, or desire to subscribe, to send name and $5 direct to Rev. David Morton, 705 West Chestnut street, Louisville, Ky., for the time is short, and we can not, of course, publish any name in our report not paid for before March 31, 1889; and we are very desirous of publishing in the annual report all names that have been subscribed.

Sunday-School Lesson.

(Hurlburt and Simpson's Lesson Commentary. Phillips & Hunt, New York.)

LESSON XIII.—March 31.

TEMPERANCE LESSON.

Ephesians v, 15-21.

TIME.—A. D. 64. Written some time during either the first or second year of Paul's imprisonment.

PLACE.—From Rome to either the church at Ephesus or at Laodicea. Learned men adduce many forcible arguments in favor of each church.

15. See then that ye walk circumspectly.—The wisdom or circumspection required by St. Paul in this place, though it may very well be understood of Christian prudence in its utmost extent, is yet by very eminent interpreters presumed to have a more special regard to the circumstances of the converts from heathenism; and "the evil day" to intimate those dangers and temptations more particularly, to which the Ephesians were exposed by the enemies and persecutors of Christianity, who took every advantage of any imprudence in the professors of it. Not as fools, but as wise—The heathens affected to be called sophoi, or wise men; Pythagoras was, perhaps, the first who corrected this vanity by assuming the title of philosophos, a lover of wisdom; hence our term philosopher, used now in a much prouder sense than that in which the great Pythagoras wished it to be applied. The apostle here takes the term sophos and applies it to the Christian, and instead of it gives the empty Gentile philosopher the title of asophos, without wisdom—fool.

16. Redeeming the time—Prolonging your time in the world through the prudent conduct, for the days in which ye live are full of trouble. Buying up those moments which others seem to throw away; steadily improving every present moment that ye may, in some measure, regain the time ye have lost. By diligently making use of the opportunity for presenting in their conduct such a contrast as may convince those who are in the deep sleep of Pagan ignorance and vice, so that, standing reproved thereby, they may be brought to Christ. Because the days are evil—Because the characters and actions of the heathen deities, according to the notions which men entertained of them, were vicious in the extreme, and had a most pernicious influence in corrupting the manners of their worshipers. The apostle, in different parts of this epistle, but in a more solemn manner in the beginning of this chapter, held up to the Ephesians the characters of God and of Christ as truly venerable, and worthy of imitation.

17. Not unwise—Do not become madmen. Here is a most evident allusion to the orgies of Bacchus, in which his votaries acted like madmen, running about, tossing their heads from shoulder to shoulder, appearing to be in every sense completely frantic. Ye, for the sake of gaining time, do not become madmen by joining the votaries of Bacchus in their frantic rites, but understand ye what the will of Christ is; that he does not allow you to partake in these impurities.

18. Be not drunk with wine—Appropriately to the exhortation against impurity, he subjoins the exhortation against drunkenness. Hence the apostle condemns the Bacchanalian rites of which the heathen were immoderately fond. Wherein is excess—Denotes every luxury inconsistent with frugality. Signifies entire dissoluteness of mind and manners ... Denotes such a course of life as is void of counsel and good intention, like the behavior of persons who are continually drunk. The word rendered "excess" is to the same effect as that used in Luke xv, 13.

19. Speaking to yourselves in psalms—When by psalms I understand those of David's composing; by hymns, such anthems as were made up chiefly of praise and thanksgiving, by whomsoever composed; by spiritual songs, all sorts of songs upon any spiritual subject. These the apostle would have them speak or sing to themselves, or to one another by course, as the words "to yourselves" here signify, being the same as another in Colossians iii, 16. And accordingly we find, from the testimony of Pliny, that the Christians in the first age did sing among themselves a hymn to Christ, as God, by course, one after another.

20. Giving thanks always ... in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ—To return thanks to God in the name of Christ is, in effect, to declare our faith and confidence in Christ, as in our Mediator and Redeemer, our High-priest and Intercessor.

21. Submitting yourselves one to another—Let no man be so tenacious of his own will, or his opinion in matters indifferent, as to disturb the peace of the church; in all such matters give way to each other, and let love rule. In the fear of God—That is, so far as is consistent with the fear of God, and for his sake, and out of conscience toward him; and hereby we may give proof that we truly fear him. That is either in obedience to the command of God, who enjoins this subjection, or making the fear of God the rule and measure of their submission to one another.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

Perhaps no class of men look round so much as fools, idiots and weak intellects, but it is to no purpose that the eyes of such wander to the ends of the earth. There is curiosity which learns nothing. There are questions which reveal only folly; against such conduct we are warned.

Complete occupation of the mind and heart is defense against temptation to evil.

The stimulus which most effectually arouses the faculties and feelings to active, wakeful action is not alcohol, but the Spirit of God. For most men the part of worship undertaken is that of singing psalms and hymns. Paul approves this, and points out what should be its aim and result—melody to the Lord.

Thanksgiving is never impossible or out of order. There is always both reason and opportunity for it.

Three things certainly are included in the lesson: The demand for watchfulness and care. The abstinence from the practices of the world. The adoption of positive means of defense and indicating the difference between the world and the church.

The Campaign Opened.

The college campaign has opened with gratifying results. The first meeting was held last night (March 12) at Wesson. The spacious Methodist church was crowded to its utmost capacity. After a few introductory remarks by your humble servant, Bishop Galloway made an address worthy of the man and the occasion, closing with a collection, which aggregated $2,665 50. It is believed that there is more to follow. Several contributions of fifty dollars each were made by young ladies who earn their livelihood in the school-room, and one by one of our young ladies who is a foreign missionary-elect.

Now, Mr. Editor, I regard this as a very good beginning. Don't you? I am frequently asked, "Do you think you will get the $50,000?" In reply to that question, I wish to say that if every church in the two Conferences will do as well in proportion to ability as Wesson has done, we will raise ten times $50,000.

The good beginning made at Wesson is largely due to preparatory work done by the pastor, Rev. T. L. Mellen. Bro. Mellen preached last Sabbath on Christian education, and he has been for some time working industriously to get all his people on the college question. If every pastor will do likewise, the problem before us will be easily solved.

Mr. Editor, I neglected to say in the outset that we had raised $1,700 before going to Wesson. So we have already a little over $1,000. We go to-night to Crystal Springs. This will be the last meeting held for a time, as Bishop Galloway will be in Arkansas for the next two weeks. W. F. BLACK.

Missionary.

An Open Letter.

TO THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH, CONCERNING THE PRESENT WORK, NEEDS AND PROSPECTS OF THE JAPAN MISSION.

Dear Brothers and Friends: As a mission field, Japan presents features different from any other in the East, if not in the world. The Japanese nation is in the midst of changes and movements that can not be fully appreciated by any one not an eye witness. There is a general commotion of thought, a revolution powerful, but peaceful in the government—a running to and fro, a casting off of the shackles of a feudal system dating from the former centuries, a taking up of foreign institutions and modes of life—all of these things, too, with a rapidity that seems almost incredible. Ere this shall be read, the Emperor will have proclaimed a constitution for the future Empire. Within two years a parliament will be set up as the result of partial suffrage granted for the first time to this nation. In very many Japanese schools the English language is regularly taught. Western sciences, and the history of western nations are now part of the course of education in the public schools. These facts are unparalleled in any other country in Asia.

Buddhism is still making desperate effort against Christianity. The following extract from a manifesto promulgated from their great centre at Kyoto, the old capital, explains the latest movement of the priests to prejudice the mind of the Japanese against the religion and teachers of the gospel of God: "Son No Ho Ilusu Dai Dodan ("Honor the Emperor, Believe in Buddha") is an association established for the purpose of maintaining the honor and majesty of our Emperor and the truth of the doctrines of Buddhism; a union of those who wish to protect our land and religion from the contempt of foreigners. Those who unite with us are expected to avoid everything that would lessen the reverence due to his Imperial Majesty or the influence of Buddhist doctrine. For instance, in selecting our representatives to the national parliament, to provincial assemblies, to town councils or local offices, in the distribution of all honors, in appointing school teachers, officials of societies and business companies, etc., we pledge ourselves to exclude all who are disloyal to the Emperor or untrue to Buddhism by believing in the foreign religion called Christianity. If these points are kept well in mind and carried out in practice, we, 39,000,000 of brethren united in one, will so protect our country that though many a difficulty and many a social problem may arise, still our Emperor's position shall stand secure, and the doctrine remain unshaken."

The Buddhists feel that the influence of the old doctrines is decaying. They, therefore, propose to link their waning cause with the government in the person of the Emperor. Failure will be the result, but the failure only offers new opportunities and puts greater responsibilities upon the Christians in America, for just as fast as the Japanese are being detached from their heathen faith there is a teaching and there is a power standing ready to enter and occupy that soul thus made void of its old faith. The more easily may this become so, because in realizing the falsehood of the old religion the Japanese are in the mood to go further and say: "All religion, Christian and pagan, is false." "All a deception and a fable." Oh, let our Christians in America ponder well what must be the awful mind and heart struggle going on in so many Japanese at this very hour.

Yes, there are other spirits, sevenfold other spirits, ready to come in the moment the spirit of heathenism is cast out.

(a) The spirit of a godless infidelity is here in all its power.

(b) The teachings of modern science are being turned against a supernatural Christianity.

(c) An agnostic philosophy is being disseminated far and wide—a form of philosophy so deadening to every spiritual aspiration of the mind, teaching the educated class to say, "I do not know" "I can not know about these things," and thus making the next step so easy—"I do not care."

(d) A rationalism that claims the holy name of Christianity for its banner, and thereby all the more dangerous, is also abroad in this land. This rationalism is coming from two sources; one is the rationalistic schools of Germany, the other, the Unitarian societies in the United States. The press is being used to scatter to the ends of the country these deadly doctrines that profess to be Christian, but virtually deny the supernatural in Christianity, and the divinity of our Savior Jesus Christ.

The missionaries still have the ear of the Japanese under command. But it will not long remain so. What is done now will save ten times the effort, if put off a few years. Now is the time to strike. Now is the day to take the citadel when Buddhism is about to be driven out, and before infidelity shall have intrenched its forces. We repeat: To-day Japan is offered to the Christian Church of America and Europe. In ten years it will not be so.

Again, speaking now more particularly of the Southern Methodist Mission in Japan, we crave the earnest attention of every reader to the fact that our work is now under most extraordinary conditions. Though coming to this field after all the others, not three years ago, we are thankful to say that under the blessing of God an unprecedented success has crowned our feeble efforts. But we are not more deeply impressed by the marvelous success than we are by the enlarging opportunities and wide doors that from all sides bid us hasten our steps and double our forces.

Let us consider the field now occupied by your representatives in this land. The Mission of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in Japan, lies in the Southern part of Japan, along the shores of the Inland Sea. It is a region of large cities, rich soil, and dense population—the most desirable section of the whole empire. Kobe, a city of 100,000 people, and situated on the northern coast of the Inland Sea, is the headquarters of our mission. This city is the second seaport emporium in the empire, and is growing steadily. Here we have one church organization and a house of worship. The building was erected without asking the Board of Missions for a dollar. The society is the outgrowth of one member that for three months constituted our total native membership in Japan. For this large city and growing work that demands the establishment of two good schools, one male and one girl school, we have only two missionaries, Rev. J. W. Lambuth, D. D., and Rev. N. W. Tiley.

Osaka, twenty miles from Kobe on Osaka Bay of the Inland Sea, is a city of 500,000 people, and is on many accounts a most important centre. But here we have only one missionary, Rev. O. A. Dukes. A society has been organized, but no church building, and Dr. Dukes has besides Osaka several villages under his charge located on the railroad between Osaka and Kobe. To meet the demands the work needs to be doubled in both these cities.

Wakayama, fifty miles from Kobe, has a population of 70,000. Here the work was opened last year, but we have not had a missionary to spare for that field able to devote his whole time. Rev. C. B. Mosely had to teach in the government school to supplement expenses. There is encouraging outlook in that city if we had the force sufficient to keep a missionary there his whole time.

Hiroshima is a city of 80,000, one hundred and eighty miles from Kobe, on the north side of the Inland Sea. We have had here the finest opportunities, and these may still be grasped, but we will lose them, if we do not build at an early day both a church and a good school for girls. For this pressing work, and enlarging field, we have two regular missionaries, Rev. H. W. Waters and Miss Gaines. Bro. Waters is partially self-supporting, which means that much nerve and time drawn away from the regular work. The work is growing and more laborers for this vineyard are sorely needed.

Otta, the chief city and Ken seat of the Island of Kushiu, two hundred miles from Kobe. Here is the seat of the government normal school. Otta is very important to our work. Here we have an earnest layman, Dr. S. H. Wainright, but not supported by the church. A society has been organized and the membership is constantly increasing. A school and a church building are both needed. By all means a regular missionary should be sent to Otta.

Mitsuyama and Mitsugaitama, a city and adjoining seaport with a population of 40,000 people, is up to this day almost entirely destitute of Christian work. Had we the men and the means we could at once occupy this unoccupied place. Kyoto, the former capital of the empire, is only forty miles from Kobe, and is a city of 300,000 people. This is the centre of old Japanese influence and culture. Here is the stronghold of Buddhism. But we have no man to send there. Our feeble resources and small number of workers keep us out of that great city.

Besides these chief cities named, there are a score of smaller places that lie properly within our territory, and some of these are stretching their hands for the gospel of the true God. At Uwajima a mere Japanese youth is holding the field because we have no missionary to send. Our superintendent, by traveling often as an evangelist, ministers to these intermediate places occasionally and thus holds them in a tentative way till re-Interrements can come, but it help does not come soon nearly all of these positions will have to be given up.

At Tokyo, the capital of the empire, we have an evangelistic work, which is a fact anomalous in the operations of all the missions planted in Japan. Tokyo has a population of 1,200,000, and is the most important city in the whole empire. At the recent annual meeting of our mission it was decided that we should open work in Tokyo. Rev. J. C. C. Newton and our theological students in the Union Methodist Theological School in that city will open evangelistic work. We can not afford to neglect the capital and key to the whole Japanese nation.

This single glance across the boundaries of our mission must convince every Christian reader throughout the connection that if the forces of this mission were at once doubled, our superintendent could only then barely man the field with forces to work the places already occupied.

But we have not called your attention to the schools that must be established and carried on if we expect to permanently occupy the territory. This people are a reading people, and education is being fostered by the government. But this education is not Christian—far from it. How could it be, when the body of the nation is not Christian, but pagan? The rulers in the government are not Christian, the teachers, nine-tenths of them, are not Christians—some are open opponents. Christian education must be a part of our work in Japan. There is no escape from the conditions that imperatively impose this kind of work upon us. But here again, we shall be compelled to call upon the church in America for the same equipments and same quota of competent teachers as have been furnished the older mission fields. Numbers are not always an infallible test, but generally they are a fairly good index of the situation. Since the annual meeting, the first of September, presided over by Bishop Wilson, there has been an increase in our baptized membership of 40 per cent. These baptisms are all after due probation and thorough examination. Not unto us, but unto our blessed Christ be the praise for such unparalleled growth in mission work. Having only one native Japanese preacher, and the work multiplying so rapidly, the few men we have on the field are overworked. Not only so, but they are deprived of the proper time necessary for the mastery of the language. The language is by all admitted to be the most difficult language in the world. Without its thorough mastery our missionaries are put against their will at a disadvantage in comparison with other missions and before the eyes of the Japanese. This state of things can not continue long. We must have speedy reinforcements of men and means or the work will inevitably suffer. Nor do we forget the fact that some of the wives of the married missionaries are doing all they can to help carry forward the work. All do so as far as they are able. Our honored Bishop Wilson and his noble wife have recently been here surveying the field, and they were strongly impressed with the remarkable opportunities and the increasing demands of this young mission. We rejoice in view of the representations which they will make speaking to you face to face. We can only write on paper the words our hearts so deeply feel. We confidently expect that the Bishop will awaken a renewed interest in the mind of the whole church toward this mission.

Dear brethren, we are your fellow laborers in the gospel of our Lord. We ask nothing more than is accorded to our itinerant ministers at home. But as a majority of our pastors in the home lands are provided with parsonages, we would like also to have a home for ourselves and families in this far land. The truth is, a time is reached sooner or later when every church in the prosecution of her work must invest in ground and houses, or else labor at tremendous disadvantage. She can not, beyond a limited period, hold a camping, nomadic or mere tenant relation without loss. We, therefore, feel strongly and know well that this mission has reached a crisis in its history:—1. It is the reinforcement crisis. 2. It is the building crisis. Apropos to the subject of investments, it is but just to say that the Japanese as compared with our American people are very poor, yet we are warranted in saying that the amount of money raised on the field will more than pay the interest on the money appropriated by the Board. As the report of our statistical secretary shows, the sum of 3,897.80 yen was raised in various ways on this field last year! We do not boast, God forbid, but we simply ask where in all history of the missionary work of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, can a parallel be found for this fact, namely, that a mission not yet two years old raises on the field in one year nearly 4,000 yen? (The yen equals 75 cents in American gold.) Our superintendent has from the first taken decided ground upon the question of self-support. He is training our new members in this idea, and, therefore, we think the Japan mission promises an early day self-support as a practical attainment in the native church.

And now in conclusion. Dear brethren and friends, we have made this statement of the situation believing that you would be interested in the progress of this your youngest mission in foreign lands. In the name of our common Lord, we have written and we commend to your earnest and prayerful consideration the facts set forth.

Dyspepsia

Makes many lives miserable, and often leads to self destruction. Distress after eating, sick headache, heartburn, sour stomach, mental depression, etc., are caused by this very common and increasing disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla tones the stomach, creates an appetite, promotes healthy digestion, relieves sick headache, clears the mind, and cures the most obstinate cases of dyspepsia. Read the following:

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. In an hour after eating I would experience a fullness or fired, all gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. Hood's Sarsaparilla did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced. It relieved me of that faint, tired, all gone feeling. I have felt so much better since I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, that I am happy to recommend it." C. A. PAGE, Watertown, Mass.

REV. J. D. CAMERON, D. D.

REV. B. CARRADINE, D. D.

REV. W. L. G. BUNNICUTT, D. D.

THURSDAY, MARCH 21, 1889.

Briefs.

The presence of Bishop Keener at ministers' meeting, at the Carondelet Street Church, last Monday, was enjoyed by all. Every city pastor, as well as other workers, were present. The Bishop's closing prayer touched, thrilled and warmed every heart.

One who has the most knowledge of the history of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in Louisiana, says that the New Orleans district has sent out more itinerant preachers than any other district in the Louisiana Annual Conference.

The Rev. C. F. Evans, D. D., presiding elder of the New Orleans district, reports that everything in this district is moving off harmoniously and pleasantly. The people have received their preachers kindly, and the latter have gone to work enthusiastically. The church collections are being successfully taken. The Sabbath and social meetings of the churches are well attended. Accessions to several of the churches encouraging. There is but one church in the district that owes a dollar for church property. Several are, however, in arrears for their preachers' salaries. This ought and need not be the case.

Mrs. E. T. Merrick, president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Louisiana, has received a dispatch from Miss Frances E. Willard, president of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union, stating that she will attend the convention of the Louisiana Woman's Christian Temperance Union, on Thursday and Friday, April 25 and 26. This convention meets this year at Alexandria, La., where Mrs. R. F. White is making ample arrangements for the accommodation of the numerous delegations expected from the seventy-nine local Woman's Christian Temperance Unions of Louisiana. The opening address will be made on Thursday by Miss Frances E. Willard, which will be followed by the annual address by the president, Mrs. Caroline E. Merrick. The music of the convention will be in charge of Mrs. David Zable.

Bishop Foley, of Detroit, has astonished the Catholics by taking strong ground, in an interview, in favor of the public school system. A committee of ladies recently called upon the Bishop with a petition affirming the right of women to vote for school inspectors. Bishop Foley signed the petition, and the woman suffragists were delighted. Being asked if he was in favor of woman suffrage generally, the Bishop said he was not, and added: "I signed because I thought, perhaps, it might prove of some benefit to education, and, perhaps, take the schools out of politics. I believe in the State providing educational facilities for its citizens, and I think the public schools should be non-sectarian. Sectarianism should not be allowed to enter into either politics or the public schools. When I vote, I vote as John Foley, an American citizen, and I would vote for a Protestant candidate against a Catholic, if the former was better fitted for the place than the latter. I do not approve, however, of the maintenance of schools for the rich out of money taken from the poor."

The Test of the Leisure Thought.

When the Psalmist prayed that the meditation of his heart might be acceptable in the sight of God, he had about reached the limit of consecration; he was ready to surrender the last stronghold of self.

The chronological succession of the Psalms can not now be ascertained, but there is strong internal evidence that this prayer came after the affair of Uriah the Hittite. David had probably not then learned to appreciate the dangers that threaten even a good man in his hours of ease. But Bath-sheba's presence in the royal house was a daily reminder to him of that fatal hour when, in a leisure walk upon the house-top, he was surprised into a sin which shadowed his own life and put into the mouths of God's enemies a taunt that has served its evil purpose from that day to this.

It is not an easy thing to throw the whole weight of one's life upon the promise of God; to commit to his keeping the imaginations of the thoughts, as well as the works of the hands. The spirit of compromise enters into all our sacrifice and service. It is comparatively easy to forgive our enemy, or to forego some gratification of the flesh, if only we may regard the iniquity in our hearts. But the forgiveness which simply lays restraint upon hands and tongue, the continence which does not curb the unlawful thought also, is far below the divine requirement.

The vast majority of Christians are never safe except when at work or asleep. Our excellent "General Rules" contain no more wholesome direction than that which warns us against being unemployed, or triflingly employed. It is not without reason that our Savior so often prescribed active service to those whose maladies he had healed. The leper must go and offer the gift which Moses commanded. The demoniac of Gadara even was required to use his recovered reason in making known what great things the Lord had done for him. In no single instance does he advise the subjects of his ministry to sit down and meditate merely upon the goodness of God and the glory of his power.

But activity can not continue always. There must needs be intervals of rest in our daily life; moments when the mind turns in upon itself, or seeks recreation in realms of fancy, or falls into musings upon the past or the future. At such times the enemy of souls is unusually alert, and the world and the flesh are apt to allure us with a fascination that it is hardest to resist. To be strong, then—to forego the sensuous delights of unrestrained reverie—is a severe test of Christian character. The wonder of Job's constancy is, that he could sit down in enforced inactivity for days, and years, perhaps, of suffering, and yet without sin. But possibly it was Job's boils that saved him after all. He might have found it harder to be patient if he had been condemned to sit there and merely hold his hands—physically capable of enjoyment, and yet surrounded by the ruin of all that might have given him pleasure.

The leisure thought makes some valuable revelations, if we will only give them heed. It is not unlike a glass in which we may see our moral and spiritual self reflected; for as the thought of the traveler turns in the intervals of business to the home he has left and the loved ones there, so naturally does the mind at leisure dwell upon the objects that are nearest the heart. In this connection, may not dreams be sometimes good to the use of edifying? For is it not a fact that, uncertain as they seem to be—unreasonable and even grotesque in the physical acts and situations in which they involve us—they seldom represent us as morally better or worse than we are? The coward probably never dreams that he is brave, nor the vile man that he is pure. One resists temptation or yields to it, fights or runs away, in these visions of the night just about as he would under similar circumstances when awake. Is it not possible, at least, that God still warns men thus as he did of old?

The leisure thought has its uses, doubtless. Through it the Divine Spirit may operate upon us in warning or rebuke; by it being revealed more perfectly to ourselves we may be the better to withstand the assaults and guard against the surprises of the besetting sin.

But the revelations thus made are not for judgment only. "My meditations of him shall be sweet," says the Psalmist in another place. Sweet, indeed, is the privilege, and gracious, to lay down the care and burden of a weary day, and spend an hour in heaven. This is the Christian's secret of a happy life. "The kingdom of Heaven is within you," means more than that God's restraining and suppressing hand is on the secret springs of action. The introspection of the pure in heart discovers heaven in miniature, "righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost." The whole length of Jacob's ladder was in his heart. Enoch walked with God in a very special manner; no doubt, in the quiet morning and evening hours. John was in the Spirit; but the Spirit was in John also when the apocalyptic vision burst upon him. And Paul was in a like frame of holy meditation, doubtless, when he saw those great and gracious things which it is not lawful for a man to utter. It is in the effort to relate the experiences that come with the leisure thought sometimes that the most fluent of us falter in our speech and burst into tears or hallelujahs.

This habit of holy contemplation and communion is what the ascetics of old so often vainly sought by fast and vigil. The mistake they made was to magnify sacrifice at the expense of service, not knowing that the heaven within develops only as heart and mind and hands are busied in creating heaven around us. A word of cheer to a despairing soul, the cup of cold water to a thirsty pilgrim, count for more in this development than all the dramatic sufferings of St. Simeon on his tower. A living sacrifice and service of love, a consecration that includes the lightest fancy as well as the profoundest emotion of the soul, is that which Paul declares to be "acceptable unto God."

What say you, brother; can you stand the test of the leisure thought?

ASTERISK.

Increase in Giving.

There is too little rule about our giving. In a great many cases there is no rule at all. Very few of us measure our gifts by our receipts. The decrease of receipts always shows itself in our gifts. The increase of receipts is rarely followed by increase in giving. To have no rule, or to practice none in the matter of beneficence, is unscriptural, because the Scriptures do lay down a plain law on this subject. To follow a practice which is unscriptural is anti-Christian. If a man don't act as Christ teaches him in his Word to act, then plainly he is against Christ. If this is so, how can he call himself a Christian?

Some men, who are accounted liberal in the use of their money, give the same amount every year. Whether their income increases or is the same, they contribute the same amount to the Lord's cause. It depends entirely upon the circumstances whether such a man is liberal or not. At any rate, he does not follow the rule laid down in Scripture, and, of course, is guilty of a want of fealty to the wisdom and authority of his Lord as expressed in that rule. He simply says: "I know a better rule for my guidance than my Lord does." He here runs against that saying of Christ: "He that is not with me is against me." How dare he say that he is a Christian in the full sense of that great word?

A man's gifts should increase as his income increases—"As God hath prospered him." But do we do this? Is it not frequently the very opposite? A man with an income of $500 finds no difficulty in giving 10 per cent. of it to the Lord. If his income increases to $1,000, is he keeping the Scripture by still giving 10 per cent.? Surely not. He has prospered 100 per cent.; and does not the rule require that his gifts shall increase 100 per cent.? Surely it does. And if he adheres to the 10 per cent. in giving while his income has doubled, his giving is contrary to the rule. It is anti-scriptural and anti-Christian. He sets himself against Christ; and how can he call himself a Christian?

Let us make this plain, for we do believe that many church members are in danger of being wrecked right here. A man ought to adopt a certain per cent. of his income as the measure of his gifts to the Lord's cause; and this rate is not a constant, but a variable quantity. The Scripture law demands that it be such. If his income is $1,000, and he determines that 10 per cent. shall be set aside as the Lord's portion, that is good, and may be all that is required of him as long as his income does not increase. By this rule he has $900 for his own use and $100 for the Lord. Suppose now that his income increases to $2,000; what shall be his per cent. in giving? The general usage is, that we still, under these better circumstances, hold to the 10 per cent. rule as the measure of our giving, if we do not actually lower the rate. This, we affirm, does not come up to the requirement of Christ's law in the case. The case now stands thus: The man has received $2,000; his 10 per cent. requires $200 of this to be laid aside for the Lord. His revenue is doubled; has increased 100 per cent., while his rate of giving has not increased at all! He has not followed the rule: "As God hath prospered him;" and, not having followed the rule, he is found in an unscriptural attitude—an anti-Christian position. As his income has increased 100 per cent., so his rate of giving ought to increase 100 per cent. There is no other way, that we can see, to keep the rule. The case, then, ought to stand thus: Income doubled; rate of giving doubled. Income, $2,000; rate of giving, 20 per cent.—not $200, but $400.

We do not say that every man and woman shall give 10 per cent. of their income, but we do say that every man and woman must adopt some rate per cent. in giving, and that the percentage in giving must increase in the same ratio as the increase in income. It seems to us that nothing else will satisfy the requirements of the rule laid down in the Scripture. The haphazard way we have of giving is obstructive of Christian progress and barren of blessings to our own souls. Let everyone of us adopt some rule of giving; and, then, "as God prospers" us, learn liberality from him, and increase the rate of our giving as he increases our prosperity. Then we shall learn by experience something of the joy of the Lord.

The Baptists in Cuba have purchased the Havana Theatre, which they will convert into a church. They have had wonderful success with their mission in Havana.

A Preacher's Gift to Centenary.

That preacher who sent me yesterday his note for $100 toward the endowment of Centenary is a real friend to the college. He is not rich (what preacher is, except in good works?), but, having previously given $200 for the endowment, he continues to help to swell the growing fund. If one hundred preachers (of whom there are four hundred in the two Conferences) and five hundred laymen should do likewise, we should have an endowment of $240,000. And why shall we not have it? When God shall enlarge the hearts of the friends of Christian education, no man will think twenty-four dollars a year too much to give for so great a cause.

W. L. C. H.

Comparative Giving.

We have before us the Minutes of our three patronizing Conferences. These Minutes differ materially from each other. The North Mississippi Conference reported 12 collections; Mississippi, 15; and Louisiana, 17. The whole amount reported by the three Conferences for all purposes is $332,-205 81. They report 89,552 members, counting all the preachers. Their contributions last year to churches, then, amounted to $3 70 per capita. The contributions of the North Mississippi Conference reached the sum of $129,437 29, which, divided among 37,390 members, makes $3 46 apiece. Mississippi Conference, with 33,719 members, contributed $105,597 40, making $3 12 apiece. The Louisiana Conference, with 18,443 members, contributed $97,-171 12, which is $5 27 apiece. These three Conferences contributed to foreign missions $19,-108 93, which is 21 cents apiece. To domestic missions they contributed $5,177 22, which is 5¾ cents apiece. Just here we would like to inquire where are the contributions of those who believe in domestic missions, but can't endure foreign missions? Putting the domestic and foreign mission reports together, we find that the North Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences contributed the same amount per capita—that is, 29 cents; and the Mississippi Conference contributed 23 cents apiece.

During the past year these Conferences expended in church and parsonage building and repairs, the sum of $91,320 64: North Mississippi expending $38,070 70; Mississippi, $25,-236; and Louisiana, $28,073 94. North Mississippi reports nothing for education and self-denial, and the Mississippi Conference Minutes show nothing whatever of the money raised by the Woman's Board. That seems to us to be a very serious omission. We might extend these figures, but enough has been written to show that the 89,552 Methodists in Louisiana and Mississippi, while, perhaps, they are doing as well in finances as any other churches among us, are not beginning to come up to the measure of their ability. Brethren, wake up the people to the awful responsibilities of their stewardship before we all perish.

Two Big Straws!

Two large straws shot through our atmosphere last week.

1. A man was tried and convicted of manslaughter some days ago. Last week it leaked out that the jury by whom he was tried and convicted had been furnished with liquor and cards, and had spent the greater part of the night in card playing and drinking. This while deliberating upon the innocence or guilt of a fellow-being on trial for his life!

2. A woman, who was defending her husband and her home from the attacks of a set of drunken hoodlums, was shot and killed. The parties were promptly arrested by order of the Chief of Police, and as promptly released on a bail bond of $1,000 by Recorder Landry.

These outrages are simply evidences of the utter contempt in which the law and the rights of the community to protection are held. Such juries are not only a disgrace, but a menace to the rights and lives of the people, and such a judge is unfit for the judiciary, and should be superseded.

Notes.

We have all to learn how to do everything. If we keep our eyes open we can learn from a great many unexpected sources. Getting the church collections often bothers the brethren no little. We commend to the thoughtful study of our pastors the following from a pastor of a different church. He says: "By the outlay of a little money and labor and time and a talk, the people have been induced to give seven times as much this year as last. This is my first year, but my experience has taught me that 'where there's a will, there's a way,' even though the people are poor and don't believe in missions."

An exchange says:

At the late annual meeting of the Baptist Missionary Society of Great Britain, Rev. F. B. Meyer mentioned these instances which came under his notice: "A governess earns £100 a year, and gives away one-half; a person whose income is £2,000 lives on £200, and gives away £1,800; another who earns £1,500 lives on £100, and gives away £1,400; another whose income is £8,000 lives on £250, and gives away £7,750. The latter gives back to God $31 out of every $32 received. As we read these things we begin to get some idea of what is munificence."

Now, that may be called giving, and, judged by those examples, very few of us are givers.

The heathen seem to be pretty good givers, if we may judge by the following, collected and reported by a missionary:

Of nine persons he gives the annual income of each and the yearly amount given to idolatry:

No. 1. Income, $120; given to idolatry, $29 30. No. 2. Income, $60; given to idolatry, $14 84. No. 3. Income, $84; given to idolatry, $21 43. No. 4. Income, $60; given to idolatry, $21 69. No. 5. Income, $33 33⅓; given to idolatry, $7 31. No. 6. Income, $54; given to idolatry, $12 30. No. 7. Income, $66 66⅔; given to idolatry, $12 72. No. 8. Income, $133 33⅓; given to idolatry, $25 11. No. 9. Income, $48; given to idolatry, $20 22.

Very few Christians with as little income give anything, and yet they say they love their Lord. These benevolent heathen will rise up in the judgment and condemn them.

The prime subject with the churches of the present is the evangelization of our cities. The people are concentrating in them, and there the church problem is to be worked out. Rev. Washington Gladden thinks the problem is one of "colonization" rather than "missions." He says:

The church must send forth strong colonies of its best families to plant churches in these dark places. The problem of city evangelization can not be solved by "mission churches" or Sunday-schools. We may send missionaries to China and Zululand, because we can not go ourselves; but to our neighbors in the down-town wards we can go ourselves; hired emissaries will not answer the purpose, because they can not possibly convey the one essential gift for which these churchless multitudes are suffering—and that is our love. We must carry that ourselves.

This is the way a heathen father of a family managed to save money in order to support his religion. Read it and blush, oh! ye stingy Christians. He thus described the process of saving in order to give:

From ancient times my family has believed in and worshiped "the great bright god of self-restraint." We have also made a box, and called it the "self-restraint box," for the reception of first fruits and other percentages, all of which are offered to our god. As to percentages, this is our mode of proceeding: If I would buy a dollar garment, I manage by self-restraint and economy to get it for eighty cents, and the remaining twenty cents I drop into the "self-restraint box;" or, if I would give a five-dollar feast to my friends, I exercise self-restraint and economy and give it for four, dropping the remaining dollar into the box; or, if I determine to build a house that shall cost one hundred dollars, I exercise self-restraint and economy and build it for eighty, putting the remaining twenty dollars into the box as an offering to Kannin Daiminyo-jin-gan. And it is always my purpose thus to make an offer to my god twenty per cent. of everything by the exercise of the virtues of self-restraint and economy. In proportion to my annual outlays the sum in this box is large or small. This year my outlays have been large; hence, by the practice of the virtues named, the amount in the "self-restraint box" is great. Yet, notwithstanding this, we are living in comfort, peace and happiness.

Personal and Otherwise.

Our correspondent, Dr. J. H. Brunner, of Hiwassee College, is said to be the oldest college president in office to-day in the United States—that is, he has been in the president's office the longest time.

We regret to learn that Rev. J. G. Bibley, of the Mississippi Conference, has been compelled to give up the pastorate on account of ill health. His postoffice hereafter is Nicholson station, Hancock county, Miss.

The New Orleans District Conference convenes in Felicity Street Church, this morning, at 9:30. Bishop Keener will preside.

The Board of Missions will meet in annual session, Friday, May 3, at nine A. M., in the Mission Rooms, Nashville, Tenn.

The Twenty-eighth International Convention of the Young Men's Christian Associations of North America will be held in Philadelphia, May 8-12, 1889.

It is announced that the Florida Christian Advocate will, in a few weeks, remove to Leesburg. We wish Dr. Anderson great success in his new home and may his paper continue to "grow in favor" with the people!

Rev. Fisher T. Rawson, for several years a member of the Louisiana Conference, died in this city, March 13.

If you read the article on the fourth page, entitled "The Test of the Leisure Thought," twice, you will find that then you will want to read it the third time. Each reading will do you good.

The editor hopes that the "Minutes" have all been corrected by this time, and that everything now is straightened out. The secretaries have much trouble in this matter, and the wonder is that they get so few things incorrect.

We would have our readers know that there are some genuine philosophers who write for their edification. One of them appended this to an article just received: "I know this will get in the paper or waste-basket, so I am sure of a hearing." Isn't that genuine philosophy?

Bro. Van Valkenburgh will have a good supply of our publications on hand at our District Conference in Felicity Street Church. Give him a call. He can suit you in reading matter.

The subscriptions to the endowment fund for the new Methodist College in Mississippi are coming in right handsomely. From the start made we think the matter is an assured fact, and therein do we rejoice, yea and will rejoice." Let every Mississippi Methodist show his loyalty in this great enterprise.

The Catholic Bishop of Detroit, Bishop Foley, has expressed himself in favor of the State providing education for its citizens.

Dr. Haygood preached recently in Jacksonville, Fla., and took a collection to build a new church in that place and the responses from the congregation amounted to $12,659. We congratulate Pastor Anderson on the splendid success of that day's work.

Postal Card Reports.

—Rev. H. C. Morehead writes from Grenada, Miss., March 15: "The District Conference, Grenada district, will convene at Duck Hill, by appointment of Bishop Galloway, April 3; Sunday-school Convention, April 4. The editor and publisher of the ADVOCATE—one or both—are cordially invited to be present. We are moving forward in many lines of church work. Have bought a splendid parsonage for Grenada circuit, and we are comfortably and happily domiciled in it. Collections are well advanced. Come to District Conference, and see for yourself."

—Rev. R. M. Blocker, writing from Crowley, La., March 17, says: "Today, at this place, I received into the Methodist Church from the Presbyterian Church a lady who was superintendent of our Sunday-school, and one of the best I ever met. Of course, she continued her in charge of the school. At Robert's Cave, a schoolhouse five miles of Crowley, the afternoon service resulted as follows: Five children baptized and two adults; four conversions and six accessions to the church. A Sunday-school of thirty persons organized, one young man started in public praying, and one subscriber to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. Praise the Lord!"

—Dr. T. C. Wier writes from Okolona, Miss., March 18: "James L. Barnes, son of Rev. J. M. Barnes, of the North Mississippi Conference, died at Shannon, Miss., Friday, March 15, and was buried at Okolona on Saturday following. We laid him away to rest by the grave of his mother, who died about eighteen months before. Bereft of two sons, left off in bright, hopeful young manhood in less than two years, Bro. and Sister Barnes need the sympathy and prayers of the church."

—Rev. J. B. Harris writes: "Clarksdale has been moved as it never was moved before. We have just closed a glorious meeting. Rev. Joe Jones, a brother of the inimitable Sam Jones, has been with us, putting in his sledge-hammer blows, and the whole town has been moved. Forty-six have united with the church. To God be all the glory!"

BOOKS

CHRIST AND OUR COUNTRY; OR, A HOPEFUL VIEW OF CHRISTIANITY IN THE PRESENT DAY. By Rev. John B. Robins, A. M., of the North Georgia Conference. Printed for the author by the Publishing House of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Price, $1.

This book seems to be written as an answer and antidote to Dr. Josiah Strong's "Our Country." The author does not hesitate to contradict many of Dr. Strong's positions as to the perils that surround us, and endeavors to show the illogical inferences he has drawn from his facts and figures. He believes, and states his belief clearly and forcefully and courageously, that the only peril threatening the church is the church itself. He argues that neither wealth, nor Immigration, nor Romanism, nor Mormonism, nor Socialism, nor the concentration of population in cities is a peril to our civil or religious institutions. He believes evidently the old adage, "Whatever is, is right," and that the present condition of things is the best for the present generation. Those who have read Dr. Strong's book should read this.

THE PREACHER: HOMELY HINTS ON MINISTERIAL MANNERS AND METHODS. By One of the Preachers. Publishing House of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Price, $1.

We have come to the conclusion that when a man writes a book that is worth reading he ought to give the reader his name. We are sure the author of this book ought to have put his name to it, and not put the public to guessing who he is. There is much in it that is excellent, and it frets us to read good things and not know who says them. There are twenty four short chapters, each presenting the preacher in a different attitude and from a different point of view. The author as he goes along presenting the preacher in his private and public positions, shows that he is pretty well acquainted with the Methodist preacher and his duty and surroundings. Any preacher, whether young or old, can find much to do him good in this book. We have read it all and commend it to all.

PERIODICALS.

—The Century Magazine, for March, opens with The Grand Lama of the Trans-Baikal, by George Kennan; an interesting Illustrated article on Christian Ireland, by Charles de Kay follows; W. H. Beehler writes, The Use of Oil to Still the Waves; a finely illustrated paper on York Cathedral is from the pen of M. G. van Rensselaer; Charles Barnard contributes, George W. Cable, another Strange, True Something Electricity Is Doing; Story of Louisiana; Dutch Painters at Home, is by Emma E. Chase; Edward Eggleston contributes a criticism on Prof. Bryce's American Commonwealth, under the title of A Full-Length Portrait of, the United States; Thomas B. Reed writes on the Rules the House of Representatives; and the editor writes upon Topics of the Times. And this all makes a fine number. Century Company, New York. Price, $4.

—The Treasury, for March, has a very fine table of contents. There are sermons, talks, comments, Sunday-school lessons, prayer-meeting topics, helps in pastoral work; and these written by such men as Moses D. Hoge, John R. Paxton, Milton S. Terry, W. C. Prime, C. H. Spurgeon, and others. Its editor is J. Sanderson, D. D. E. B. Treat, publisher, 771 Broadway, New York. Price, $2 50; clergymen, $2.

—Boston Musical Herald, for March, has its usual complement of musical matters and persons. Franklin Square, Boston. Price, ten cents.

—The Home-Maker, for March. This is number six of this new monthly, and it is better than any preceding, though all have been good. It makes a specialty of everything connected with the home, and is destined to find its way into thousands of homes, and do them good when it gets there. It is edited by Marion Harland, and that is the guarantee of its right to be in every home. Home-Maker Company, New York. Price, $2 a year.

—The Studio, for February and March, came together this time. We have already spoken in favorable terms of this monthly. It is devoted exclusively to the "Fine Arts," and is well worth the attention of all who are engaged in that line of business or thinking. The photo-gravures are in excellent style, and the reading matter and critical notes are of the best. Studio Publishing Company, New York. Price, twenty-five cents.

—Book News, for March, has a sketch of Frank R. Stockton, with portrait. The Miscellany contains articles of interest and value. The review of new books is a special feature, and a fine one, of this monthly. You get also a list of new books announced by the principal publishers. John Wanamaker, publisher, Philadelphia. Price, five cents a number; 50 cents a year.

—The Converted Catholic is a magazine devoted to the enlightenment of Roman Catholics and their conversion to evangelical Christianity. James A. O'Connor, 50 Bible House, New York. Price, $1.

—The Kindergarten. The March number has a good table of contents. Alice B. Stockham & Co., 161 La Salle St., Chicago. Price, $2.

—The Great South is a monthly paper devoted to the furtherance of all the varied industries of the South. The March number is full of news, and presents a good view of the real state of our Industrial affairs. The Great South, Birmingham, Ala. Price, $1.

Missionary Review of the World, for March. The leading and longest article in the number is by Dr. Sherwood, on "The City As a Factor in the World's Evangelization." It is a noteworthy paper, full of startling facts and statistics and irresistible arguments going to show the necessity of evangelizing our cities in order to the salvation of the country and the world. Dr. Pierson's "Exposition of Missions" and "A Wonderful Work in the West Indies" will be read with intense interest. Mr. Bliss' criticisms on the Evening Post's gross and stupid assault on missions are trenchant and deserved. Then Dr. Cust's paper on "Missions in Equatorial Africa," Dr. Morse on "The Bondei Mission," and Sturbuck's translations from foreign missionary periodicals, are all valuable. All the departments of The Review, as usual, are full of matter adapted to their several spheres, and the whole rounding out a number of marvelous interest and power. Published by Funk & Wagnalls, 18 and 20 Astor Place, New York. $2 per year; twenty-five for single numbers. In clubs of ten, $1 50.

—The Trained Nurse, published from Buffalo, N. Y., by the Lakeside Publishing Co., is the only journal published in America consecrated to the interests of those who minister to the sick and suffering in hospital and home. It isn't a magazine of clippings, but original from cover to cover. The Trained Nurse is succeeding largely because it is worthy of success. If you'd like to get acquainted with the journal, send the publishers 15 cents. They want to know you and have you know them.

PAMPHLETS.

—The Sunday Paper, by Bishop S. M. Merrill and Theodore E. Schmauk. Cranston and Stowe, Cincinnati. Price, fifty cents a dozen.

—Chimes of Victory—A service of Scripture and Song for Easter. By Emma Pitt, Baltimore, Md. Price, five cents; $4 per hundred.

Seashore Camp Meeting.

A meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Seashore Camp Ground will be held on Thursday, March 28, at nine o'clock A. M., at the camp ground. A full attendance is requested.

The presiding elders of the New Orleans, Seashore, and Mobile districts are to meet with the trustees of the Seashore Camp Ground, at the camp ground, on Thursday, March 28, at nine A. M., for the purpose of consulting as to the work of the next camp meeting, July 10. Every effort will be made to make the next session a success in winning souls.

Correct.

I lovingly ask. Is it right for a brother to correct the Minutes when those Minutes are a faithful copy of the reports which he has handed to the statistical secretary? According to your reports, brethren of the Mississippi Conference, your Minutes are correct. You are aware that I stated to the Conference that the statistics did not present the exact condition of our work. I do not know what ought to be in the blank places of a report. As far as possible, I make a note of the matter, see the brother, and question him. Even then I sometimes fail to get correct answers.

Correcting brethren, if the case demands correction, would it not be more charitable to correct in such a manner that, at least, part of the blame may fall where it belongs? Why should you force me to publish these facts to the 20,000 readers of the ADVOCATE? Of your number, Bro. Dominick only had a right to complain. He might have seen that the mistake in his case was caused by a misplacement of the type.

Let Ques. 15 be properly answered at every third Quarterly Conference. May God bless you, my brethren!

JOHN W. CHAMBERS,
Statistical Secretary.

Notice.

The plan for raising the Mississippi college endowment fund is this:

We take notes payable in one and two years, viz: December 1, 1889, and December 1, 1890. Blank forms for these notes are in the hands of Bro. R. W. Millsaps, and will be furnished to any of our preachers who desire to work for the college. Bishop Galloway will be in Arkansas from the fifteenth to the twenty-fifth. On his return he will resume the canvass. Brethren desiring a visit from him in the interest of this enterprise, should write to him at this place by the twenty-fifth. W. C. BLACK.

JACKSON, Miss., March 11, 1889.

The Bishop of Liverpool has been saying some things about "Preaching," as well as our ADVOCATE. Hear him on one point:

"Preaching consists in telling in simple language the things of the gospel, and as long as the world stood, no instrument could be compared to it for doing good. Christ was sent into the world as a preacher; Christ commissioned his apostles as preachers; preaching founded Christianity, preaching brought the light of the Reformation into Germany and England; and preaching accomplished the great revival in England. What was wanted now was no more ceremonies and forms, but more simple preaching of the gospel.

Rev. B. Carradine, D. D., and Rev. T. S. Randle.

The Rev. Dr. Carradine states: "In the Louisiana Conference Minutes, just published, there is no record of the missionary money contributed by the Carondelet Street Ladies' Missionary Society." Since the foregoing sentence was published, his statistical papers on file were shown to Dr. Carradine; and they are wholly free of one letter or figure in regard to the women's society of his church. Hence Bro. Beard is not to be held accountable for the silence of the statistical tables in regard to that noble body of Christian workers. Near the foot of page 3 of the Minutes is this item: "Collected from Woman's Auxiliary to Parent Board, $147 20." This Treasurer Parker informs us, is the amount handed him by Bro. Carradine for his women's society. Bro. Parker also informs us that in not giving the names of the Mexican societies in his report he has followed the course pursued by his predecessor, Rev. C. Keener. It would be well for every brother who has a Mexican Missionary Society to report it on his statistical blank, so that the statistical secretary may publish it in the statistical tables. The ladies who are working directly for Mexico, as well as those who belong to the organization of which Mrs. Juliana Hayes is president, are entitled to be fully reported in our Annual Minutes.

Rev. T. S. Randle's point on the statistical secretary is well taken.

The American National Bank.

The results of the first week in the life of this new enterprise in New Orleans shows conclusively the confidence this community has in its able president, Mr. Henry Gardes, W. W. Girault, cashier, and efficient Board of Directors. From its opening day the number of depositors, as well as amount of business, has steadily increased. Doubtless, its success will soon equal that of the most popular of our banks.

Publisher's Department.

Three Reasonable Requests.

1. Let every subscriber carefully read this issue of the ADVOCATE, and then show the paper to some neighbor who does not take it, and ask him to subscribe.

2. Let every minister arrange for a complete canvass of his circuit, so that every family of every Methodist congregation may have the paper offered to them. Where the minister can not do this personally, let him appoint some suitable person to do it.

3. Let the benefit and duty of subscribing for our church paper be mentioned in every congregation; and all reasonable efforts put forth to obtain new subscribers, and secure the renewal of old ones.

A Bologna bank cashier has absconded. We suppose the detectives will collect evidence against him link by link.

Next to your subscription the greatest favor you can extend the ADVOCATE, in a business point, is to mention the paper in writing to advertisers.

A computation of the next census is to include "animals not on farms." The cats that live on the back fences must feel flattered.

Ten Thousand Subscribers is what the Publisher and friends of the ADVOCATE ask for.

Ten Thousand Subscribers is the number that all say the paper should have in the bounds of the three Conferences. How can we secure the requisite number to make up the 10,000? If each subscriber will send in one new subscriber, we will have more than enough to make the 10,000. If each preacher will send in ten new subscribers, it will give the ADVOCATE over 10,000.

THE PUBLISHER'S PROPOSITION.

Brethren and friends, if you will give the ADVOCATE a subscription list of 10,000, I will give $2,000 to the superannuated preachers, widows and orphans' fund, to be divided among the three Conferences, pro rata, in proportion to the number of new subscribers sent in from each Conference.

My object in asking for the ADVOCATE'S increased circulation is to enlarge its field of usefulness and increase its power for good in this part of our Zion.

Our Young People.

THE BOYS WE NEED.

Here's to the boy who's not afraid
To do his share of work;
Who never is by toil dismayed,
And never tries to shirk.

The boy whose heart is brave to meet
All ills in the way;
Who's not discouraged by defeat,
But tries another day.

The boy who always means to do
The very best he can;
Who always keeps the right in view,
And aims to be a man.

Such boys as these will grow to be
The men whose hands will guide
The future of our land; and we Shall speak their names with pride.

All honor to the boy who is
A man at heart, I say;
Whose legend on his shield is this:
"Right always wins the day."

Golden Days.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little orphan girl. My mamma went to heaven five years ago. My papa is living, but is not housekeeping. I am living with Papa and Mamma Clark, and they love me very much and are so kind to me. Of course, you know I love them. I was eight years old on March 6, and weigh forty pounds. I can sweep the floor for mamma and fry batter-cakes and potatoes and wash the dishes; and when mamma milks I help her milk. I can spell and read and am learning to write and cipher, and last year I raised one dollar and fifty cents' worth of chickens, and gave the money to Bro. Drake at Vicksburg, in December, for missionary money. Now, Mr. Editor, don't you think I am a right smart little girl? This is my first letter to the ADVOCATE, and I will be very proud to see it in print. I love to read the children's letters very much. Mr. Editor, Papa Clark is the preacher you referred to in your good paper last week. He is in charge of Clarke circuit, in Clarke county. Will the little cousins tell where this passage of Scripture can be found?—"Everyone shall be salted with fire." Your little friend,

MAGGIE JONES CLARK.

MR. EDITOR: As it is a rainy day, and I can not go to Sabbath-school, I thought I would tell the little cousins that our Sabbath-school did not go into "winter quarters," as some have done. Mr. Green is our superintendent. His daughter and my Cousin Lilian are our teachers. We like them very much. Bro. W. G. Backus is our preacher again, and we are all so glad. He comes once a month to our Sunday-school; gives us some beautiful cards, good lectures, etc. I am anxious for warm weather to come, so I can see his wife and sweet little ones, Daisy and Oatie. I will answer Mary Hodges' question: The shortest chapter in the Bible is Psalms cxvii. I will close by asking a question: How many words are there in the Bible? Much love and prosperity for the dear ADVOCATE. I am eleven years of age.

PEARL P. HOUSTON.
DEKALB, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl seven years old, and live in the pleasant little town of Newton. I thought I would surprise my papa by writing a letter to the ADVOCATE. My dear Uncle Jarred Watts died last year, and we still get the ADVOCATE in his name. He has taken it since the first copy was published. I have one little brother, Jarred Watts, and two sweet little sisters. I go to school and study geography, revised third reader, spelling and arithmetic. My teacher's name is Mrs. Plalack, and I love her so much. She is so kind. Our new preacher is Rev. J. S. Parker, and we all love him. He is such a splendid preacher. His little boy, Bennie, who wrote such a nice letter to the ADVOCATE, is now quite sick, but hope he will soon be well. Your little friend,

LIZZIE RANKIN.
NEWTON, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: This is the first letter I have ever written, and I hope it will be nice enough to put in your paper. I have two little brothers and one little sister. Sister and I have been going to school four months. The name of our school is Sunbeam, and it is a mile from home. We have a nice walk going to and from school. We are going to have Sunday-school at our school-house, and I wish you could come to it sometimes. I have finished the first reader, and will be so glad to get the second. Hoping you will always have a place for our little letters in your paper, I am,

Your little friend,

ANDREW RAMSEY.
HARRISON, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: A letter from me may be a surprise to you and the many readers of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, as I have never troubled you before. I have one brother named Marshall Marvin. I am ten years old, and he is eight to-morrow. I am studying history, geography, arithmetic, grammar and music. Buddie is not much behind me. Mamma and papa think we are getting along well. I have no sister, as my dear, sweet little sister Emma's body is sleeping at Bastrop, La. Papa moved to Texas to improve mamma's health; but, besides the sickness she had when we came here, she has rheumatism in the arms, hands and feet, so that I have to do much of her work. I must not forget to tell you that one of our cows found two calves last night, and they are doing well. We think papa ought to carry mamma back to Louisiana; but he has not decided that he will. I close by answering little Mary S. Hodges' question: The shortest chapter in the Bible is Psalms cxvii, if you call a Psalm a chapter. Your little friend,

JIMMIE M'KEE.
ALLEN, Texas.

The Happiest Boy.

Who is the happiest boy you know? Who has "the best time?" Is it the one who last winter had the biggest toboggan, or who now has the most marbles, or wears the best clothes? Let's see.

Once there was a king who had a little boy whom he loved.

He gave him beautiful rooms to live in, and pictures and toys and books. He gave him a pony to ride, and a row boat on a lake, and servants. He provided teachers who were to give him knowledge that would make him good and great.

But for all this the young prince was not happy. He wore a frown wherever he went, and was always wishing for something he did not have.

At length, one day, a magician came to court. He saw the boy, and said to the king: "I can make your son happy. But you must pay me my own price for telling the secret."

"Well," said the king, "what you ask I will give."

So the magician took the boy into a private room. He wrote something with a white substance on a piece of paper. Next he gave the boy a candle, and told him to light it and hold it under the paper, and then see what he could read. Then he went away and asked no price at all.

The boy did as he had been told, and the white letters on the paper turned into a beautiful blue.

They formed these words:

"Do a kindness to some one every day!"

The prince made use of the secret, and became the happiest boy in the kingdom.—Our Sunday Afternoon.

Is It any Wonder

that Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery outsells all other blood and liver medicines, since it possesses such superior curative properties as to warrant its manufacturers in supplying it to the people (as they are doing, through druggists) under conditions such as no other medicine is sold under, viz: that it must either benefit or cure the patient, or the money paid for it will be promptly returned. It cures all diseases arising from deranged liver, or from impure blood, as biliousness, "liver complaint," all skin and scalp diseases, salt-rheum, fever sores, scrofulous sores and swellings, fever-sores, hip joint disease and kindred ailments.

"No," said his mother, "good ones do not." "O Raymond," said little Laura, "do be good, or no one will have anything to do with you—unless," she added, "it is somebody who hasn't any politics!"

Household.

AN IDEAL HOUSEKEEPER.—The best housekeeper we ever saw never raised her voice much above a whisper. When she spoke you had to listen to hear what she said. Her household numbered twenty-five persons in all, and was amply equipped with every provision for comfort. One could tell the seasons by looking at her house, but how the various changes from one season to another were made, it was not easy to see, they were made so quietly. The house was always clean and in order, but there was no confusion, no bustle, nothing upside down at any stage of the proceedings. Her servants, like herself, went noiselessly about the house, making their presence felt only in tasks quietly and deftly done. No parade was made about things left undone, and though she often had to wait for the accomplishment of her plans, there was no fuss made about waiting, no attention called to it, and only she herself knew that everything was not as she wished. The secret of her success lay in her exact knowledge of what needed to be done and the best way of doing it, in the exactness of her routine, in the quietude of her soul, and the patience of her disposition. She was thus easily mistress of herself and of her household.—New York Christian Advocate.

SPOONS—An interesting article appears in the current number of Cassell's on the origin of spoons. The earliest spoons were doubtless made of wood, a hollowed improvement upon John Chinaman's chopstick. These in turn were displaced by spoons of horn and bone. Then came spoons of tin and iron, of rough and inelegant shape, and hammered by hand. In the prosperous Tudor times the precious metals became more plentiful, and gold and silver plate was in such demand, that every great family had its own goldsmith. Perhaps the most curious, and certainly the most singular variety of spoon is that known as the Apostle spoon. Apostle spoons are very seldom found before 1500, but they were very popular for a century and a half. It was the custom for sponsors to present them to their godchildren, a wealthy person giving a whole set. A list is given of the emblems found on Apostle spoons: St. James the Less is represented by a fuller's hat, St. Peter by a key, St. Paul by one or two swords, St. Matthew by a wallet, and St. Bartholomew by a butcher's knife.

HOME, SWEET HOME.—The Western farmer, with his hundreds of acres of new and fertile soil, looks with contempt upon the small and often sterile farms that are to be found in some parts of New England.

The owner of a Western farm of eight hundred acres, nearly all of it under cultivation, who was visiting in Maine, sent a letter home, in which he expressed his mind freely as follows:

"Here in this country they call two acres of ground, six hens and an old rooster a farm, and half the time one acre of the ground is graveyard. Give me old Kansas every time."—Youth's Companion.

Look for good in every life instead of evil, and you will be surprised to light on much of it where least expected. An expression of happiness over the discovery will leap to its cultivation.

Our Endorsement Is Result.

It is the incessant drip and drop upon the surface of the stone that finally makes the impression.

So there need be no question, after this statement, why it is we so persistently present these little bulletins of Compound Oxygen for your consideration.

RICHMOND, VA., March 26, 1887.

"I am happy to tell you that my husband has greatly improved since taking this second treatment: and has been relieved of his rheumatism. He finds his digestion almost perfect now and no pains save from rheumatism."

MRS. W. L. WARING.

RICHMOND VA., May, 18, 1887.

"Mr. W.'s improvement from your Compound Oxygen is so perceptible that my nieces decided that they must have it as a trial for their difficulties. Our friends see for themselves the marked improvement in him."

MRS. W. L. WARING.

We publish a brochure of 200 pages regarding the effect of Compound Oxygen on Invalids suffering from consumption, asthma, bronchitis, dyspepsia, catarrh, hay fever, headache, debility, rheumatism, neuralgia; all chronic and nervous disorders. It will be sent, free of charge, to any one addressing DRS. STARKEY & PALEN, 1529 Arch St., Phila., Pa.; or 331 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal.

The Favorite

Medicine for Throat and Lung Diseases has long been, and still is, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. It cures Croup, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, and Asthma; soothes irritation of the Larynx and Fauces; strengthens the Vocal Organs; allays soreness of the Lungs; prevents Consumption, and, even in advanced stages of that disease, relieves Coughing and induces Sleep. There is no other preparation for diseases of the throat and lungs to be compared with this remedy.

"My wife had a distressing cough, with pains in the side and breast. We tried various medicines, but none did her any good until I got a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which has cured her. A neighbor, Mrs. Glenn, had the measles, and the cough was relieved by the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I have no hesitation in recommending this to every one afflicted."—Robert Horton, Foreman Headlight, Morrillton, Ark.

"I have been afflicted with asthma for forty years. Last spring I was taken with a violent cough, which threatened to terminate my days. Every one pronounced me in consumption. I determined to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Its effects were magical. I was immediately relieved and continued to improve until entirely recovered."—Joel Bullard, Guilford, Conn.

"Six months ago I had a severe hemorrhage of the lungs, brought on by an incessant cough which deprived me of sleep and rest. I tried various remedies, but obtained no relief until I began to take Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. A few bottles of this medicine cured me."—Mrs. E. Coburn, 19 Second st., Lowell, Mass.

"For children afflicted with colds, coughs, sore throat, or croup, I do not know of any remedy which will give more speedy relief than Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I have found it, also, invaluable in cases of Whooping Cough."—Ann Lovejoy, 1257 Washington street, Boston, Mass.

LOFTLIN—Mrs. JANE LOFTLIN. (nee Sessions) died at the residence of her son-in-law, J. H. King, after a long and painful illness, December 12, 1888. The deceased was born May 18, 1829. She was a member of the Methodist Church and was a true and devout Christian. During her long and painful illness she did not murmur. Thus another one of God's children has gone to join the already innumerable host of heaven. She leaves to mourn her loss one son and three daughters. She was one, who amid all the storms and tempests on the sea of life, never made shipwreck of her faith and sweet trust in the promises of a blessed Redeemer, but trusted in God till she was sweetly drawn into the arms of Jesus. Her resignation was beautiful and her confidence was unwavering to the last. She was heard to remark, "God's will be done," and her prayers would ascend to Heaven not for recovery, but grace sufficient to enable her to bear her afflictions. She exercised the liveliest faith in the promises of her Savior. She was loved by all who knew her, especially her children and grandchildren, who feel their loss keenly, but their loss is her eternal gain.

E. HESS.

POOL.—The subject of this notice, Mrs. ELIZABETH LYON POOL, died in New Orleans, La., November 22, 1888. At the time of her death she was living with the family of her son-in-law, Mr. H. T. Allen. She was a native of South Carolina, having been born in that State in Abbeville district, December 29, 1820. When about the age of sixteen she came to Mississippi, and at eighteen was married to Hon. Joseph Pool. Soon after their marriage they joined the church and remained faithful to their vows—her husband preceding her by several years into the "rest that remains for the people of God." Sister Pool delighted in the services of the sanctuary, and the company of the people of God was her chief joy. As age came upon her she grew more and more ripe for the kingdom of Heaven. From the time that the Spirit opened her heart to receive the Word her desire was to honor God with her life. In her last hours she found great comfort and peace of soul in the precious promises which she realized were fulfilled to her. She was the last remaining child of Thomas and Lucy Lyon. She sleeps in peace.

WEST—Dr. JAMES M. WEST was born in Florida, December 25, 1801. He moved with his parents to Georgia in his boyhood days, where he lived until 1828, when he moved to Lawrence county, Miss. In 1829 he moved to his late home in Copiah county, Miss., where he spent the last sixty years of his life. Dr. West's first marriage was to Miss Nancy Taylor; but the date of that marriage and of her death the writer has not at hand. His second marriage was, in 1839, to Miss Mary A. Sims, who lingers yet on the shores of time. He professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South in 1819, and lived in full communion until January 12, 1889, when God called him to his home in the skies. It was the privilege of the writer to be his pastor and intimate friend for years, and ever found him true in his friendship and faithful to the church of his choice. We miss him sadly, but while we feel that earth is poorer, we rejoice to believe that heaven is richer. May the Lord bless the aged widow and all the children and friends, and bring us all to meet in that better land!

PIERCE—Mrs. SALLIE KATE PIERCE was born in Attala county, Miss., September 29, 1867. She was the daughter of Hon. F. M. and M. A. Gibbs. She was married to Hugh H. Pierce, December 26, 1888. Sister Pierce made a profession of religion very early in life and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and lived a devoted member until the day of her triumphant death, which sad event occurred February 23, 1889. Sister Pierce was one of our best women—she was meek, quiet and retiring in her disposition, but progressive in her nature. Goodness and benevolence were depicted in her countenance. She was a model of order and neatness, and as an angel of mercy she moved in the family, and among the large circle of relatives and friends, bestowing a kind word on all. She was the center of attraction among her many friends. She was one of nature's noblest women. With her beauty of person and smoothness of temper, intensified by the religion of Jesus Christ, she became a character that was beautiful to contemplate. One feature in her life was specially prominent; that was devotion to her father and mother. Such willing obedience is rarely seen. Her last sickness was of short duration, but was very painful. She bore it with patience and fortitude. When the final end came, she gave clear evidence of her preparation and willingness; then asked those who were present to meet her in heaven. Thus she passed away to live where there is no more sorrow. It is sad to think we will meet her no more in this life, but there is comfort in the hope of a reunion in the glory-world. God grant that we may meet those we have loved where death and parting are no more!

W. W. WILLIAMS.

WEST—Died, February 21, 1889, ANNIE TOMLINSON WEST, aged twenty-one years, seven months and two days. Sister Annie when a child was called a good child, and when she grew up to young womanhood she had lost none of the sweetness of childhood's disposition, but had ripened into a Christian that was the admired and loved of all who knew her. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, while young and gave her heart to the Savior and her life to his cause. No wonder, then, when she came to the dark valley she found it lighted up, for the Savior was with her. When Annie found she must die she called her father, mother and brothers to her, and exhorted them to faithful, loving lives and to meet her in heaven, saying she was not afraid to die, but was ready and willing to go. She sent for some of her classmates, and after exhorting them to meet her in heaven she calmly and peacefully passed away. May the loved ones left behind, when they think of the sweet and gentle spirit of Annie, strive earnestly to meet her in the sweet by-and-by.

WILSON—Sister MARTHA WILSON, wife of Bro. Robert Wilson, died in Burnsville, Miss., December 25, 1888, full of faith and hope of a blessed immortality. She was a devout Christian, having professed religion at the early age of twenty years, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and was a true servant of the Lord and his Christ in every sense of the word. Her home was the home of the preacher. She left a sorrowing husband and ten children to mourn her loss. Two of the children had preceded her to the better land. Her parting words were to her children to meet her in heaven, and gave evidence in her dying moments that the Lord of Glory had come for her, and called upon her husband to look and see her Maker. Thus she passed out at the age of fifty-eight years, and, as we doubt not, has gone home to heaven. May we all meet her there!

L. A. M'KEOWN, P. C.

FLURNAY—Sister M. M. FLURNAY died near Woodville, Miss., January 29, 1889, aged seventy-four years, twenty-one days. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. In early life and lived a consistent member of the same until her death. She said just before she died that she was satisfied as to her future prospects. Sister Flurnay was a patient sufferer for several months before she died. She leaves a lonely daughter to mourn. She loved her Savior and trusted him in all troubles. Our loss is her gain. God bless her loved ones and finally save them with their loving mother and friend!

The Religious Newspaper.

1. It helps to expel from the homes of its parishioners worthless and injurious literature.

2. The religious newspaper in the home aids in solving the Sabbath problem.

3. The religious denominational newspaper attaches the people more closely to their own church.

4 The religious newspaper strengthens the people in the fundamental doctrines of the Scriptures.

5. The religious newspaper makes the pastor's work more effective by increasing the intelligence of his hearers, by making them acquainted with the philanthropic and missionary enterprises of the day, and by giving them information respecting churches near and far.—The Watchman.

If you are suffering from Malaria, ask your druggist for Shallenberger's Antidote for Malaria. If he don't have it and tells you he has something just as good, don't believe him, but send one dollar to Dr. A. T. Shallenberger, Rochester, Penn'a, and get the Antidote by mail. A few doses will restore you to perfect health. The medicine is in the form of pills, but is not a purgative. It not only destroys Malaria, but is an excellent tonic.

WOMEN AS INVENTORS.—According to a document recently issued by the Commissioner of Patents, the number of patents issued to women since 1790 is 2,500. This is evidence of the fact that women as well as men are capable of inventing, and many of these patents also prove them to be quite as practical and possessing equal skill. The first patent granted to a lady was that for straw weaving with silk or thread, and was issued to Mary Kils, in 1800. For the first few years, however, there were very few applications filed by ladies, but during the last half-century they have increased quite rapidly. Most of these patents were, however, upon articles of feminine or household nature, but still quite as important in their line as are those produced by a masculine genius. There were several exceptions to this rule, as it is shown that improvements in reaping and mowing machines, improved war vessels, furnace for smelting ores, and last but not least, burglar alarms for windows, etc., were among the inventions of the fair sex. There seems, however to be one thing lacking. In all these there is not the first sign of a new principle, and they were invariably in the form of improvements. We do not, however, need to look at the patent lists to satisfy ourselves of the ability of women to provide for herself or assist at the work which man has looked upon as beyond her powers and capabilities. We find them now in almost every vocation, and they are showing themselves masters of the situation. It is, however, to be regretted that in most cases they have been driven to it, not through choice, or because they were dissatisfied with their lot as women, but by stern necessity, and too often through the duplicity or depravity of man.—Exchange.

NEW USES FOR THE ELECTRIC LIGHT.—The body of a boy drowned at Winchendon, Mass., recently, was found through the use of the electric light, a bulb being fastened to a pole and submerged, illuminating the water for a considerable distance in the neighborhood. The electric light promises to become an important aid in all manner of submarine operations. We notice that the superintendent of the Madras Museum has been requested by the Board of Revenue to visit electrical establishments in Europe in order to select an electric globe light to shine in twenty fathoms of water. Such a light is wanted at the pearl fisheries, for, up to the present, the work of the fisheries has been confined to comparatively shallow banks. Electricity is also being applied with some success to the lighting of omnibuses in London. The accumulators are placed in a small box beneath the body of the vehicle. The lamp stands in a frame, and is so arranged that, by being moved a little towards right or left it is lighted or extinguished. The frame is connected with the accumulator by a small hidden wire. One charge of the battery is sufficient for two days. The invention is in practical use on some of the London omnibus lines, and is said to work excellently.

LONGEVITY OF PROFESSIONAL MEN.—The comparative longevity of professional men may be accounted for by reference to the exceptionally favorable conditions under which they exist. While the man who is in trade is tormented by anxiety over the uncertainties of the morrow, and the man who has made a fortune and retired is, unless he has cultivated a hobby, a prey to inanition, and liable to feel that he has no longer a welcome place in the world, the professional man of fifty has learned what he can do, and has adjusted himself to a career for which he is fitted. If he is making a fortune, his life is full of interest and brings little trouble or anxiety to himself. It is not his own case that the lawyer pleads, the physician combats, and the parson arraigns. If he is only moderately successful, his earnings, though small are safe, and he may hope that his future will be as happy as his past. His occupation, meanwhile, brings him consideration and intelligent surroundings, and his life is fairly and pleasantly varied. These things all contribute to length of life.—Popular Science.

CHEAPEST FURNITURE HOUSE IN NEW ORLEANS
J. G. GRANT
50 and 52 Baronne Street,
OFFERS THE FOLLOWING SUGGESTIONS

THERE are two ways to make money. One is to earn it; the other is to save it. There are two ways of saving money. When you save a dollar by putting it in the bank you do well, but when you save a dollar by shrewd purchasing you do better. The first is saving; the second is in reality earning. So there are two ways of earning money--by labor and by wise purchasing.

LET ME SAY A WORD ABOUT PURCHASING:

The FIRST THING to learn in order to become a successful purchaser is that price means nothing until you have seen the goods. The fact that Bedroom Suits, for instance, cost $100 in one store and $65 in another tells you nothing. The $100 suit may be worth $125, while the $65 suit may not be worth carrying away. It is only when you have compared the goods as well as the prices that you are in a position to judge of what is cheap and what is not. Goods may be too cheap sometimes. Prices don't always tell the whole story. Either know the goods or know the dealer. If he has a reputation for liberality and straightforward dealing, people soon find it out. When you learn that he is carrying a larger and better stock, and that his trade is increasing rapidly, both in the city and the adjoining states, why it means something. It means that his business methods have been approved, that people have discovered his liberal ways and taken advantage of them, and it points you the direction for your next purchase.

The SECOND PRECEPT in successful purchasing is that the best is always cheapest in the end. Many people who have never visited my warerooms have the idea that only cheap goods are sold because I do not put on much outside style and occupy a showy and very high priced store, but one visit will prove that this is a great mistake. Remember that there is a big difference between CHEAP GOODS and GOODS CHEAP. Go elsewhere for cheap goods, but come here for goods cheap. The man who sells cheap goods sells his customers at the same time. I am not in that line of business. The public are beginning to understand the difference, and my trade proves it very clearly. A word to the wise is sufficient. Call and see how cheap fashionable furniture of the best quality can be sold.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

A battery of boilers at the West Point Boiler Works, in Pittsburg, Pa., exploded on March 14, completely wrecking the plant and burying a number of men in the ruins. Five persons killed and eleven injured.

The American bark Agnes, from Nassau to Baltimore, was wrecked on the Virginia coast last week. Six lives lost.

The recently elected officers of the Grand Lodge, K. of H., of Louisiana, were publicly installed in this city on March 14.

The liabilities of the Reading Iron Works are estimated at $1,875,959 91 and the assets at $2,091,747 24.

It is said that the convicts in Sing Sing Prison, N. Y., are becoming insane for want of employment. Two prisoners were transferred to the Auburn Insane Asylum on March 15.

One of the smelters of the Anaconda Mining Company, at Anaconda, M. T., burned on March 5, entailing a loss of fully $1,000,000, with no insurance.

Telegraph communication with the United States has been established by cable from Santiago de Cuba to Hayti and San Domingo, thence to the Island of Curacoa, thence to La Guayra and Caracas, Venezuela, where connection is made with the government land lines for the places of the interior.

The small-pox scare cost Galveston, Texas, $6,000. There were twenty-four cases treated and fifty-four persons placed in quarantine. The city is now free of the disease.

Senator Chace resigned his seat in Congress upon the beginning of his second term of six years. It is said the reason for this action on his part was caused by the insufficiency of the compensation of a Senator.

Ex-President Cleveland, ex-Secretary Bayard, ex-Postmaster General Dickinson and ex-Secretary Vilas left Washington, on March 18, for a trip to Cuba.

Big Sandy, Mont., is full of excitement over the development of gold mines in the Sweet Grass Hills, fifty-five miles northwest of that place. People have just arrived from the hills reporting that miners in Eclipse Gulch are making from $50 to $80 a day.

Jay Gould and party arrived in this city on March 18, after an inspection tour over the entire Gould system of railroads.

Letters of sympathy with the projected National Confederate Home, at Austin, Tex., continue to pour in to the secretary from every section of the Union.

FOREIGN.

Advices received from Samoa show that there was no basis for the sensational rumor of an engagement between the United States man-of-war Nipsic and the German corvette Olga. Far from this, German officials in the island have given up their aggressive policy.

March 14 was the forty-fifth anniversary of the birth of the King of Italy. In receiving deputations that came to congratulate him, King Humbert referred to the economic crisis, and expressed a desire for European peace.

Reports from Newfoundland say that the issue of licenses to American vessels for the purchase of bait and other necessary outfit will be refused this season, and that the British government will coincide with the Dominion government in its policy.

By an explosion of firedamp in a colliery near Nimes, France, on March 15, fifteen persons were killed and six injured.

The Samoan conference is not expected to present formidable difficulties. Slight doubts are expressed as to the attitude of America, but the German government will do its utmost to prevent friction, at the same time maintaining Germany's full right to deal with the Samoan rebels. Confidence is felt in Berlin that the peaceful disposition of all three powers will render an agreement easy. Prince Bismarck is in no way inclined, in the present state of European affairs, to be drawn into colonial disputes.

The Paris police have made further searches of the residences of the members of the Patriotic League. It is reported that they have seized papers showing that a plan had been matured for a descent by members of the league upon the Palais Bourbon (where the sessions of the legislative chambers are held) and the Elysee (the residence of the president).

The Pope, on March 16, gave a special audience to Bishop Keane, who is to be rector of the Catholic University which is to be erected at Washington. Bishop Keane presented Miss Caldwell, her sister and her aunt to the Pope, who specially blessed Miss Caldwell for her generosity in endowing the university.

An enthusiastic reception was given to Gen. Boulanger at Tours, France. A crowd of 3,000 persons gathered at his hotel to welcome him.

Queen Victoria and Queen Christina will meet, on March 21, at San Sebastian.

A dispatch from Tien Tsin to the Hamburg Correspondent says it is reported there that the natives have risen on the Kiang Si frontier and they have destroyed houses and killed 100 Frenchmen.

It was a genuine Sunday at the White House. Both ends of the house observed it. Not a stroke of work was done in the executive offices, and the family rooms were as quiet as the Harrison home at Indianapolis used to be of a Sunday. Few people came, and not one of these on anything approaching business or politics. So strict was the observance that the President's mail lay unopened on Private Secretary Halford's desk.—Washington Post.

There are many hair preparations in the market, but none have so desirable effect upon the hair and scalp as Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer.

Callers.

The ADVOCATE enjoyed a call from Mr. John A. Lewis, of Meridian, Miss. Bro. Lewis is a plucky, liberal worker in the cause of Christ. He is one of the best of Mississippi's numerous excellent Sunday-school superintendents, and is a strong, wise leader in temperance work. He is much interested in the success of the next meeting of the Seashore Camp Meeting.

Rev. W. F. Brown, a Presbyterian minister from Cannonsburg, Pa., called at the ADVOCATE office this week. He and his wife have been so benefited by their frequent winter trips to New Orleans that they say they can not keep away during the hard, cold weather of the North. Bro. Brown has been filling Rev. Dr. B. M. Palmer's pulpit a few Sabbaths during Dr. Palmer's illness.

During the past week, Bro. Richard L. Robertson, of Moreau Street Methodist Church, has reached the advanced age of ninety-one years. He is hale and vigorous, attending to his business regularly, and continues his official position as superintendent of the Sunday-school of the above-named church, which place he has ably filled for nearly half a century. Bro. Robertson remarked to the writer that he saw the first steam vessel (the steamship Savannah) that crossed the Atlantic, enter Liverpool on her first voyage. That he also was at Richmond, Va., when the first steamboat ascended James river, on which occasion an old lady with whom he was staying, who was out in the field at the time this boat was seen coming up the river, the smoke pouring and steam belching, hurriedly gathered her children to her and fled to the house, exclaiming, "The day of judgment is coming up the river."

A reporter of the New York World states that the manufacture of cotton goods is profitable goes without saying. If it were not, there would not be so many mills. There are four new ones nearly completed, and four more contemplated. Those who are going into the business see the dividends paid: By the Amerieau, 22½ per cent. last year; Border City, 11; Bourne, 10; Fall River, 12; Flint, 10; Granite, 22; Sagamore, 13; Seacounet, a new mill, 14½; Troy, 20; Union, 30; Wampanoag, 11½. They see also that the American stock, $400 par value, is selling at $990; granite, $100 par, at $250; Sagamore, $100 par, at $122; Seaconnet at $140, and Union, $100 at par, $240. They also observe that many of the stocks are not to be had at any price. They know that cotton goods are protected by a 140 per cent. tariff, which will not be changed for the next four years in any event, and they are assured they can compete with all the world even if the tariff was removed.

The Mechanics' & Traders' Insurance Company.

We call attention to the card of the above well-known insurance company, which, under the skillful and careful management of Mr. Lloyd R. Coleman, its president, and competent Board of Directors, has, with unfailing fidelity, met every demand in the many past eventful years of his history. Few gentlemen in this community have warmer friends, or more entirely the confidence of his business associates, than Mr. Lloyd R. Coleman of this company.

The Home Insurance Company.

This prosperous local institution, which has stood the test of many years, again presents its business to the numerous readers of the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. Its assets have grown from over $400,000 in 1886 to nearly $460,000 in the year closing December 31, 1888. The growth of this excellent and reliable Insurance Company is largely due to the wise, honest and judicious management of its president, Thomas Sefton, and its influential Board of Directors, many of whom are prominent members of the Presbyterian Church.

CHEAPEST FURNITURE HOUSE IN NEW ORLEANS.—This is the heading of the advertisement of Mr. J. G. Grant's, 50 and 52 Baronne street, New Orleans. Now, we would suggest to our readers to peruse it carefully, and they will be astonished at the low prices which Mr. Grant is selling furniture for. As this gentleman is thoroughly reliable, and guarantees the smallest article that leaves his store, we feel satisfied that those who may try him once will have further dealings with him. There is no store of this character in the South that keeps a larger or finer assortment than his, and as his expenses are less than others in the same line, he has informed us that he can sell lower. Try him.—N. O. Weekly Picayune, January 24.

District Conferences.

The Greenville District Conference will be held at Cleveland, on the L., N. O. and T. R. R., April 26-28. Bishop Galloway will preside. The opening sermon will be preached by Bro. C. N. Terry, on Thursday evening, April 25.

R. M. STANDIFER, P. E.

Bishop C. B. Galloway will hold the Grenada District Conference, North Mississippi Conference, at Buck Hill, April 4-7.

The Sunday-School Conference will meet Thursday, April 4, at 2 o'clock, and the following subjects will be discussed:

1. Qualifications Necessary to Successful Officers and Teachers.
2. The Mission of the Sunday-school.
3. The Value of the Bible in the Sunday-school Room.
4. How Shall We Overcome the Difficulties of Sunday-schools in the Country?
5. Music in the Sunday-school; How Best Secured, and What Should Be Its Character?

The clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policy-holders.

The Episcopal Diocese of New York has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and The Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

East Tennessee, Virginia & Georgia R. R.

Well known as the Great Kennesaw Route, is now making twelve hours quicker time to Washington via New York and eastern points, with Pullman Buffet Sleepers from New Orleans to Washington without change. The mountain resorts of East Tennessee are reached in twenty-four hours, and Virginia resorts in thirty hours. For tickets, sleeping accommodation, circulars, schedule, etc., call at Kennesaw ticket office, 22 Carondelet street.

The Burlington's "Eli."

The formerly popular Vestibule Fast "Eli" Train of the Burlington Route has been resumed between Chicago and Kansas City, St. Joseph and Atchison, leaving Chicago daily at 5:30 P. M. The Burlington's Vestibule Trains to Omaha, Denver and St. Paul will continue as before. They are the best trains between Chicago and the points mentioned. Tickets can be obtained of any ticket agent of connecting lines, or by addressing P. S. EUSTIS, G. P. and T. A., C. B. & Q. R. R., CHICAGO, ILL.

ETERNITY.

BY DD. THOMAS GIBBONS.

"What is eternity? Can aught
Paint its duration to the thought?
Tell every beam the sun emits,
When in sublimest noon he sits;
Tell every light-winged mote that strays
Within his ample round of rays;
Tell all the leaves and all the buds,
That crown the gardens and the woods;
Tell all the spires of grass the meads
Produce, when spring propitious leads
The new-born year; tell all the drops
The night upon their bended tops
Sheds in soft silence, to display
Their beauties with the rising day;
Tell all the sand the ocean laves,
Tell all its changes, all its waves,
Or tell, with more laborious pains,
The drops its mighty mass contains.
Be this astonishing account
Augmented with the full amount
Of all the drops the clouds have shed,
Where'er their watery fleeces spread,
Through all time's long-continued tour,
From Adam to the present hour;
Still short the sum: it can not vie
With the more numerous years that lie
Enrolled in eternity."

Early thirty years ago I knew in anta a good man and Methodist, a l worker, but afflicted, poor, and, men count such things, unfortunate.
elt an invalid widow and two small dren. It was hard for them to live ll; they had no comforts and few ortunities of any sort. The boy, strong of body, was not otherwise tion to his mother and sister, an iling purpose to take care of them, an unflinching determination to do t, trusting God for the issues of and death.

Johnny Knight was in my Sunday
ol at old Trinity during my pastor-1865–66. When about grown up, strong of body, nor well taught, gifted, he received employment
the Atlanta Gas Company. He himself—his religious life. I am

e had no idea how wise and good his words were (as a little child—like the sunny-faced boy now toddling round my desk—has no notion of the sweetness of his laugh and his smiles) when he said to me:

"The other day Bro. —— said: 'Johnny, you must come round to class meeting and tell us what the Lord is doing for you.'

"I said: 'Bro. ——, if any of you were to ask me what "I am doing for the Lord," I don't know what I should say.'"

And then he added: "If I only served the Lord as faithfully as I serve the Atlanta Gas Company!"

I said to him: "Johnny, you are in the employment of the Gas Company: doing faithfully your work is religious—that, also, is serving God."

When the Lord makes up his jewels, it seems to me men like Johnny Knight, who do faithfully all their life the plain work given them to do and who lay themselves out for others, deny themselves utterly to bear "burdens" in caring for others—these will be among the crown jewels of the great King.

As Johnny held my hand tightly, his eyes grew dewy with glad tears, and the "skin of his face shone" as he turned down the crowded street, looking after his gas-bills for the company he had served so long and so well.

Religion is a very practical thing; it makes all days holy and all true work sacred.

DECATUR, GA., March 22, 1889.

The Lottery.

BY R. ABBEY, D. D.

The lottery in some of its various forms dates back both in England and this country about two hundred years. In other countries some forms of gambling somewhat resembling the lottery dates further back. The name, it is seen, implies a game of hazard or chance. Lotteries in former times were chartered for various public purposes; sometimes to raise money for support of the government; but this was discontinued in Europe long ago. It was a very sure way of furnishing revenue, but it was soon seen that this mode placed government support mainly on the poorer classes, leaving the more wealthy untaxed. Lotteries were then confined to particular objects, such as establishing colleges, asylums, hospitals, and sometimes to build houses of worship. They were never allowed without special permission.

But about a hundred years ago public sentiment, both here and in Europe, set in so strong against this mode of gambling that by about 1830 it was placed under ban, and very nearly, if not quite, exterminated, in every part of Christendom, except a very few places where the Romish Church holds rule. It does not appear from any authentic history now before me that the lottery was ever chartered, in any country, for any private company, persons or corporation, except in poor, unfortunate, down-trodden Louisiana!

One of the most unfortunate things that ever occurred in the Southern country was that, some years ago a gang of drunken roughs and hoodlums, by some means, got control of a majority of the Louisiana Legislature. And under the Constitution of the United States "a State Legislature can license crime, even though the members themselves may be the beneficiaries. This was long ago settled in the celebrated "Yazoo frauds" case of the Georgia Legislature.

It is not necessary for me, here, to express my views about the moral, religious, social and civil misfortune of the lottery. It is sufficient to state that in every State, county, Legislature and court in the United States, and nearly, if not quite all of Europe, the lottery is treated as an outlaw, a fugitive and vagabond, an incendiary, wanderer, and enemy of mankind. It is everywhere by all men regarded as the worst and most damaging form of gambling ever invented. One of the great features of its peculiar harm and criminality is its insidious stealthiness of approach to the young, the ambitious and the unwary. The possibility of getting a hundred or a thousand dollars for ten is very tempting. And the losses, which are morally certain to occur, beget a spirit of recklessness and fault-finding with Providence, unfitting a man for the sober realities of life. Chagrined with one loss, he tries his luck again and again, and so, like scores and hundreds of foolish, inconsiderate people, he gives to this monstrous shark, which swallows ten thousand smaller fishes, one third, or one-half, or more, of the wages of his honest toil.

As to his chances of his drawing a big prize, it is all a cheat, with scarcely the semblance of truth about it. It is one of the most deceptive frauds ever invented. One chance in ten thousand or a million is just about equivalent to no chance at all. One might say that in ninety days from this day, at exactly noon, it will begin to thunder and in two hours after, to a minute, it will begin a hard rain. These things might happen in each one of ten times' trial; and the likelihood is greater than that your ticket will draw a prize. "A fool and his money are soon parted."

But the lottery is a "benevolent institution!" Was ever such stark fool impudence uttered before? For every thousand it filches from the pockets of the credulous and the unsuspecting, it gives back, out of pure charity, five, ten, and in a rare case, even fifty or a hundred dollars. A stage coach in Kentucky was robbed of several thousand dollars; and the liberal highwaymen generously gave to each passenger as much money as would pay his expenses home. Now, it is seldom a half-dozen penniless stage passengers meet a stranger who furnishes each one as much money as will carry him home. Lottery generosity is certainly very charitable.

But this lottery is charitable. It helps the hospitals, gives a public library, builds a church, school-house, and other public charities, and proposes, on a renewal of its charter, to pay the city and State debt! Isn't that charity enough? Of course it is—genuine stage-coach charity. Does not the State of Louisiana owe a large debt, and the city also? And is not that debt to be paid? And if somebody proposes to pay it, "free, gratis, for nothing," isn't that a large charity? And when three "gentlemen" in Kentucky meet with a stage coach full of passengers, who, by some means, have lost all their money, isn't it a considerable charity to furnish each one money to enable him to get home? Who objects to charity?

Now, it can hardly be supposed that common sense has entirely taken leave and departed in broad daylight from the people and State of Louisiana. Of course, the lottery can pay the State debt, and the national debt, too. Any fool can do that. Give him four times that amount of money, gathered from the pockets of the people, no matter how, and what is to hinder him? The State treasurer will pay the debt for one-fourth the money less his annual salary. Which way is best?

The money comes from the people; but it is a question of some import, looking exclusively at the mere dollars, whether it be gathered by fraud from the poor mainly, or from the poor and rich according to several ability in the usual way of taxation. And it is still another question whether a rapacious, gormand lottery company would be a safer and better custodian of public funds and disbursing agency than a treasurer regularly appointed with security and financial capacity.

Now, I am not of Louisiana; but I am a household of a considerable community of sufferers along this coast line, which is lawlessly and wickedly invaded by this lottery horde of trespassers upon Mississippi soil. By them our laws are daily trampled upon, and our rights constantly invaded by this peculiar form of robbery, and I, therefore, have a right to enter a protest. I will not commit the wrong to my fellow-citizens in mincing words descriptive of this great public iniquity.

And now what? First, let public sentiment wake up! And, secondly, let the pulpit and the press wake up. I thank you, my young friend, Dr. Carradine, for leading off in this matter. We must be outspoken. I know they hold out their bags of ill-gotten gold as a menace to overawe. How far that will succeed we expect to see. It is to be hoped that the pulpit and, at least, the non-subsidized press will handle this subject firmly, judiciously, fairly, and with ungloved fingers. The people have a right to our support. The masses don't understand the subject at all. These flaming, gilt-edged, rather quilt-bodied advertisements deceive the unwary. The people must be informed. And their source of public information is the evangelical pulpit and the unpaid press.

Now, brethren and friends, let us speak a united voice, neither in a whisper, nor in an uncertain sound. Here before us is one of the greatest and most formidable hinderances to the spread of the gospel and the support of public and private morals. And this lottery fraud is so nakedly and defenselessly vulnerable that we can soon get the ear of the people and command the situation. The duty presents itself to every minister, to every editor, to every public man and every private citizen. The lottery must be exposed; nothing is needed but to show what it really is. The pulpit has already introduced the subject on this issue line, and so has the press; but the public looks to the great pulpit and press power of Louisiana to arrest this great and growing evil.

A Quarterly Meeting.

BY A. P.

As a relief to the monotony of my winter-quarters, I accepted an invitation of my presiding elder to take a seat with him in his buggy, and accompany him to his quarterly meeting, sixty miles due north, over roads which have not improved a whit since 1841, the first time I ever saw them. Talk about progress, but not in these roads. The quarterly meeting was at Mooringsport, a town on a bluff overlooking Fairy Lake, a mile wide, with expansive waters to the right and left, giving an enlarged view. A grove of beautiful forest trees, mostly oak, lined these waters, making it a delightful summer retreat for fishing and pleasure. The place seems to have been designed by nature for a town, or even a city; but apparently nature and art have been at outs, the town is small, dilapidated, and, I judge, growing less. Here the faithful pastor, Bro. Sanders, and his consecrated helpmeet live in the parsonage, which has no sign of paint, or even whitewash, or any other trappings to give it a cozy, home-like look. Yet it is a center, a place of prayer, study and preparation, from which to radiate gospel light for the benefit of the circuit. There was a good turn-out of the officials on Saturday at the Quarterly Conference; every church represented save one. Salary assessed to the pastor, $350, and the discussion turned on whether or not that could be paid before the end of the year. The preacher seemed to be confident and easy. He is in the itinerant succession; a descendant from an itinerant ancestry. He is no novice in these matters.

All the Sunday-schools on the work reported in winter-quarters—no stoves; and churches uncomfortable. A most paradoxical report came from —— church; more than a hundred members enjoying a high degree of spiritual life. A stove had been placed at the door, and the preacher donated brick to put it up; yet the Sunday-school in winter-quarters two winters, the children perishing for the bread of life, and no one found to put up the stove. This is what a Chinaman would call, "Muchee faithee, little-ee workee." That quarterly meeting, in my judgment, was wanting in two essentials to make it a success—a love-feast and the sacrament of the Lord's Supper; and, I might add, a collection. My experience has been for these long years, where Friday preceding the quarterly meeting is observed as a day of fasting and prayer, with the sacrament of the Lord's Supper on Sunday, and a good love-feast, that it never fails to stir, vitalize, and do good. Try it.

The presiding elder honored me with the eleven o'clock hour; by the way, that is all the hour we had. The morning was cool, no stove in the church, and, as might be expected, the congregation was small. I thought of an incident which occurred on an occasion when Dr. Payson preached to his choir and one old negro. The old darky told the preacher he enjoyed it so much. When he said anything hard about the sinner, he looked round to see somebody to give it to; but, as there was no one, he took it to himself. On this occasion there were not enough to divide with. We wound up with an old-fashioned camp-meeting shout, a hearty handshake, and a renewed covenant to live faithful, in view of the sweet by-and-by. I found it good to be there.

Conviction for sin is a consciousness of wrong to the heavenly Father, so pungent that the mind is unfitted for any thought or action that affects our self-interest. "There is no peace, saith my God to the wicked."

Letter from the City of Mexico.

BY REV. J. M. WEEMS.

MR. EDITOR: We make grateful acknowledgment for your kindness in looking after the shipment of our goods from your city, and for the bundle of ADVOCATES just received. The goods came safely, but expensively, to hand a few days after your letter came. Our total expense from Brookhaven to this city was $206 in American money and $80 in Mexican. Of this amount $25 was paid as duties on my library. I can not tell why it is so, and yet it is true, that only occasionally does the dear old ADVOCATE find its way to our home. And after looking into its cheery face, and communing with its consecrated spirit for the years past, you can imagine how sadly we miss its weekly visits, now that we need it most. But all our missionaries complain of the irregularity with which their papers come. By the way, why is it that our church papers do not exchange with our paper? 'Tis true its strange tongue might not be very edifying to them, but theirs would be immensely so to it. So let them come to Avenida Balderas, No. 3.

For the past month we have been passing through the deep waters, and have learned something of the sweet experience of "trusting in him who is our life." For three weeks my wife has been confined to her bed, and she is now unable to walk a step without assistance. We hope, however, the worst is past, and that she will soon be well again. While her sufferings are great, I am thankful that her confidence in the goodness and mercy of our God is strengthened by each day's experience. And then we are greatly comforted by the sincere and constant sympathy of our Mexican brethren. They often visit us, and do not think of going away without asking the privilege of prayer with us for wife's recovery. Yesterday one came into the room and read these words: "Greater love hath no man than this: that a man lay down his life for his friends." And while the tears rained down his cheeks, he implored God not to suffer the senorita to lay down her life for her friends in Mexico; but to spare and prolong her life to help and bless the women of his country. It is useless to say we love them, and are willing to work and suffer for their good. O! that our women realized what a rich field is open to them in Central Mexico! They will see it some day, for our God will show it to them; but, O! how long, my Master, before this heavening power shall be felt in this needy field!

Well, we are now blessed with the presence and preaching of the great Methodist, of London, whose efforts for the Master on the Congo and elsewhere have made his fame world-wide. I heard him preach to-day, and he impressed me that he was a man of one heart, one mind, and one book. Indeed, I have rarely seen such power and authority over the deep things God has revealed unto man. He is here, as he said to me, for the purpose of seeing for himself what there was in this field for the Master. May the God of heaven open his eyes wide to see the great things that will transpire in the near future!

Specie Payment.

BY THE REV. GEORGE H. BUCHARD.

The readiness to adopt indirect methods of raising money is a dangerous weakness of the Christian church of to-day. Whenever a church is to be built or repaired, or a large sum of money raised for any object, the first thought is apt to be of suppers and fairs and concerts, and other entertainments. Christians contribute a few dollars to such an entertainment, or buy a number of tickets, and imagine that the sum thus expended has been consecrated to God, and is put down to their credit in heaven. Some day they will learn that they have made a mistake, and that the credit side of their account on the great ledger is much smaller than they had supposed. That money is not consecrated to God that we spend in entertainments or suppers, although we may receive an adequate return. It is simply a trade in which we have knowingly gotten the worst end of the bargain. Such schemes reflect great discredit upon the intelligence of Christians, to say nothing of their piety. If some one who is equal to the task would write a book on Christian economy, the real loss and wastefulness of these indirect methods might be made clear, and Christians might be induced to abandon them.

What should we think of St. Paul, if he had written to the Corinthians thus: "Now, concerning the collection for the saints, let all the brethren and sisters unite in getting up a charity ball, or a series of Isthmian games, with tickets of admission, that you may have a goodly sum of money raised when I come!" We should canonize him at once.

The old tabernacle of the Hebrews cost an immense sum of money, and it was built at a time when the people were not in a flourishing financial condition. Why, then, do we not read, in the account of its construction, something like the following: "And Moses called unto him Bezaleel and Aholiab, and said unto them, Go to, let us get up an entertainment, a grand festival with a manna supper, and roast quails in abundance. We may also have games and music and dancing. And let sundry beautiful damsels scour the neighboring country, selling tickets. Let them be in comely attire, and let them play upon the timbrel and lute as they go, that they may attract the attention of the people. It may be that you wealthy Hittite will be pleased to contribute of his substance to the building of the Lord's temple; and, if we shall succeed in drawing a few shekels from some of the well-to-do Amalekites, our burden will be much reduced thereby; and, best of all, these ungodly sinners will have been duped into paying tribute for the glory of our God."

"Absurd!" you say. Of course it is. If the Bible contained any such nonsense, we would throw it away. The fact is, none of the indirect methods of raising money find my approval, either from precept or example in God's Word. They are not in keeping with its teachings. They are a disgrace to the Church of Christ, and bring only contempt upon it from the unbelieving world. Their result has always been to vitiate the true spirit of consecration, and to blight the spiritual life, influence, and activity of church members.

The popular notion regarding church finances needs reforming. It is based upon false principles of economy, and places the Church of Christ in an unworthy light before the world. The credit of the kingdom of Heaven has been weakened by subterfuges and shams. Christians have been too careful to distinguish between religion and business, as though there were some necessary antagonism between the two. Men like to talk about consecrating "themselves" and their "time" and their "talents" to the Lord, but they shudder when the word "talent" is translated into the modern word "dollars." They fancy that the mere thought of money is worldly, and will lower the tone of spirituality. It is a grand mistake. That spirituality which is so easily injured by contact with the world, which must be bottled up and hermetically sealed lest it should spoil in the open air, is a pretty poor article. True spirituality sanctifies whatsoever it touches, by the power of its own purity. Like Christ, it touches even the leper, and, instead of being defiled, imparts pure and healthy life. We have altogether too much religion that is like a balloon—full of gas, and shooting straight up into the air whenever it is let loose; or, like a soap-bubble, beautiful with its rainbow tints, but bursting into a thousands fragments the moment you touch it with anything solid.

True business principles are not unspiritual; they are helpful in the religious life. Not only would the church as a whole be benefited by a well-regulated system of economies, but individual Christian lives would be strengthened. May the time soon come when we shall be as practical in religious matters as we are in business. Then we shall do away with all indirect methods; all evasions of duty, and build up our Christian institutions on the only true basis—that of specie payment.—Sunday-School Times.

Help!

To any who may read this, I call on them for help. Sister Jackson, widow of Rev. J. D. Jackson, is in great need. She is homeless, and I am trying to raise a sufficient amount to build her a house. Two hundred and fifty dollars will buy the lumber and shingles to build the house. Fifty dollars of this amount is subscribed, and part paid. She can get friends to put up the house. Can't the two hundred be raised? I think so. Come, brethren, sisters and friends, help in this worthy cause. I will report through the ADVOCATE the amounts received. The undersigned will give ten dollars of the two hundred asked for. Bro. Jackson was one of our best preachers. His zeal for Christ and the church, no doubt, caused his death; therefore, I hope those who read this call will respond at once. Send contributions to me at Plaquemine, La.

W. WIMBERLY.

Notice.

Will the preachers of the Greenville district please send me at once the number and names of delegates who will attend the District Conference, which meets at Cleveland, April 2d? Address me at Stonestown, Miss.

Yours truly, W. T. BARNETT.

THE LAST GOOD NIGHT.

BY J. R. EASTWOOD.

Clad in their night-gowns, clean and white,
The children come to say good-night;
Father, good-night," says Marjory,
Climbing for kisses on my knee;

Then I must, Kittie, Harry next—
And Lulu—till I feel perplexed,
Wishing the last good-night was said,
And each and all were packed to bed.

These small folk take me unawares;
I hear the call, when safe upstairs,
As I sit down to read or write,
"Father, we want to say good-night;"

The book or pen is laid aside;
I find them lying open-eyed—
Five rosy cheeks, five curly heads,
Who greet me with tumultuous noise.

Can I be stern with such as these?
Can chiding ways and looks displease?
They hold and scarce will let me go,
And all because they love me so.

Then in a vision, suddenly
The future seems unveiled to me!
It is my task, though all in vain,
To long to say good-night again.

I see the years stretch on and on,
The children all grown up and gone:
No chamber echoes to their tread,
The last good-night has long been said!

And by his fireside desolate,
An old man sits resigned to wait,
Recalling joys that used to be,
And faces that he may not see.

Therefore, what bliss is mine that now
I still can smooth each fair young brow!
And feel the arms that clasp me tight,
The lips that kiss the last good-night!

—The Quiver.

Quarterly Conferences.

Quarterly Conferences are not what they ought to be, for the following reasons:

1. The districts are much to large, as a general thing, thereby rendering it impossible for the presiding elder to give the time necessary for the best interest of the work. I am fully convinced that they ought never to be more than twelve circuits or appointments in one district, so that the presiding elder could give two full days to each work, embracing a Sunday on each work; then he could fill all his appointments in forty-eight Sundays, and have two Sundays for Conference, and three to visit camp meetings and District Conferences, and he could then go into the neighborhood of his Quarterly Conference on Friday night, and then remain over until Monday, and not have to break the Sabbath, hurrying home on Sunday evening to prepare to go somewhere to hold a quarterly meeting in the week. There is no telling the amount of good which could be done by our presiding elder if they had a little more time to visit around and see after the general interests of the work. May the time soon come when we will only have twelve appointments in a district!

2. The official members do not attend the sessions of the Quarterly Conference, as is their duty; and it ought to be esteemed a high privilege to do so.

I suppose it is the duty of all official members, as much so as it is the pastor's or presiding elder's; but my experience is, that they do not do it. While it is the duty of class leaders, exhorters, local preachers and stewards and all official members to attend, we generally have only a few in comparison to the whole, and the few a great many times leave for home on Saturday evening after the session of the Quarterly Conference is over, and the Sunday service left with the little neighborhood church alone.

Mr. Editor, just imagine a quarterly meeting with a large majority of the official members present—stewards, class leaders, exhorters, local preachers, trustees, Sunday-school superintendents, and all—on Sunday morning, at half-past nine o'clock, assembled in love-feast and experience meeting, full of the Holy Spirit, and telling sinners around what a dear Savior they have found! I tell you, sir, it would shake the devil's kingdom from center to circumference in that neighborhood; and, as the quarterly meetings revolved around on the circuits and stations, we would have a genuine revival influence pervading the entire work. But it is not that way, and it is getting so that the quarterly meetings do not amount to any more than an ordinary occasion; and I want it understood that I am not referring to the Brandon district, or to any one district or circuit, for I suppose we have as good, faithful and efficient presiding elders and as faithful official members here as anywhere; but I am fearful this state of affairs exists almost everywhere. There may be some exceptions.

Now, brethren, when will we wake up and get out of the old ruts and make our Quarterly Conferences occasions of great interest and power? It may be that it is the fault of the pastor to a large extent, for not stirring up the minds of our brethren, by way of remembrance, that it is their duty to attend and remain at the quarterly meeting. If so, let us do better, brethren.

3. It has been a rule in our church for a long time for the pastor to announce, and the church to observe, the Friday preceding each Quarterly Conference as a day of fasting and prayer to God for a general revival, and for the prosperity of the church generally. Is it observed? Do we keep the rules of the church? Are we obedient at this point?

I am fearful that not one-tenth of our members observe this rule, and it may be that some of our pastors, although under a solemn vow, do not set the example before the members as they ought. Our blessed Lord, just as he was ready to enter upon his great life-work, fasted forty days and forty nights, and, although we can not fast that long, we can and ought to fast a reasonable length of time, and pray for the power. And if our presiding elders could give us full time, and our official members would attend after fasting and praying for the power of the whole church, the Quarterly Conference would then be what it ought to be.

A. D. MILLER.

Young Men's Christian Association.

From the cradle to the grave we are subjects of unconscious influences; in their hands we are as plastic as is the clay in those of the moulder. The little girl unconsciously imitates every action of her mother, and sings her dolly to sleep with the self-same lullaby that she herself had been sung asleep. The boy apes his father's actions, copies the mode he wears his hat, his gait; the most trivial action of the parent is observed and imitated, and the boy grows up a veritable "chip of the old block." Literature is a powerful factor in forming the characters of our rising generation. Pernicious books are motors of the strongest kind for filling our prisons with criminals. We are all prone to hero worship, and are apt to select from the pages of history or fiction some hero who we delight in honoring, and who unquestionably helps to mould our characters. To bring our youth under good influences has for many years been the work of philanthropists. Undoubtedly, the best method that has been devised is that adopted by the Young Men's Christian Association. From Maine to California this association is to be found represented in every city and town, and the good it is doing is incalculable. The clergy and merchants everywhere recognize the benefits which accrue from an alliance with this association. Its influences are the best, the literature it provides the purest, and the companions to be met with in its portals are sure to be of irreproachable character. The aim of the association is to make its rooms and surroundings as homelike as possible; by so doing, giving young men far from home influences a safe haven from the temptations which are likely to assail them. The merchants of New Orleans are perfectly cognizant of these facts, and subscribe handsomely for the maintenance of the Young Men's Christian Association here. The fact is clearly established that the rooms used here are totally inadequate to the wants. In no part of the Union does such a lack exist of a place for a man (stranger or otherwise) to pass his leisure hours profitably as in this city. The reading-room of the Young Men's Christian Association is thronged all day—mostly by strangers. In all the large cities of the Union the Young Men's Christian Association is well represented by a building worthy of the association, equipped with a good reading-room, library, gymnasium and baths.

New Orleans boasts of the perfection of her public institutions; her Charity Hospital is unique; and her other institutions for the amelioration of the condition of man are unrivaled. It is to be hoped that some one will take the initiative, and start a subscription which will give to the city a building worthy of the association. The association has a charter which empowers it to erect an edifice in New Orleans, but is prevented from so doing by the want of requisite funds.

AUBREY MURRAY.

Location of the Mississippi Methodist College.

That Mississippi is to have a male college is a foregone conclusion. Where is it to be located?

First, several things that ought not to be considered in fixing the place. Or if considered at all, should weigh but a trifle.

Conference lines ought not to be regarded. There are now two Annual Conferences in the State, and either next year, or four years thereafter, there will be four. So, never mind Conference lines. Everybody can not have the college in his Conference, nor in five or ten miles of his home. Neither is geographical relation to other colleges of any importance. Nor is geography in itself of any importance—that is, its importance is measurable. It is exactly two cents a mile of importance. If geographical center is important, the average of advantage would be about one dollar a year to each student. And if this is important, then go to Kosciusko. There you have all the advantage I am able to see at any other point, except one.

Health is of ten times more importance than all the other questions combined. And in this respect there is but one place in the State that is far away and supremely above all others. That is the Gulf coast. And to the man who considers that remark extreme, or extravagant, I have but a word to say: You are not well informed.

I have lived more than fifty years in Mississippi, and with some acquaintance throughout the State, before I knew anything almost about the remarkable healthiness of this seashore country. With some acquaintance of a practical kind in more than two-thirds of the United States, I give my experience for what it is worth, that I know of no interior country or neighborhood that will compare with this, or come half-way to it. Seven or eight children around me exhibit such health, vivacity and constant sprightliness as I never saw before. Three years ago I came here an old man, "in good health," but "getting old." Now, if you will keep the almanacs out of the way, I am several years younger than I was five or six years ago. And my experience is the uniform experience of everybody along this coast. No sort of febrile diseases here.

I suggested to a medical gentleman, familiar with all the hospitals in New Orleans, that if they would remove them all here and supply the wants of the patients from the kitchen alone, they would fare better than where they are, with all the doctors and all the drug stores. "O, yes," he replied, "no doubt of that; but that is the very thing that would render such an enterprise impracticable. No doctors or drug stores would be needed, and so, what we now call hospitals would be large boarding-houses. Then what of the doctors and druggists?"

Here we have no cold weather, no uncomfortably warm weather. I never spread an umbrella except for rain. We have a constant breeze. The simple fact of summer bathing and oyster food will, in my judgment, overbalance all the local advantages to be suggested in favor of any other place in the State. I think these suggestions are worthy of consideration.

As to traveling facilities, no part of the State has better; and as to geography, a hundred miles means two dollars. I presume there is no better stock region than this, and yet the housekeepers tell me that oysters are the cheapest animal food we have. The supply is said to be not only inexhaustible, but the more you remove, the more there is left.

Now, I suggest that this matter be looked into.

Save the Advocate.

I have adopted the plan of preserving the ADVOCATE this year, which I never did before, and which I find of great advantage and convenience. Here is the way I preserve it: I take all the numbers of each month, and sew them together in order, according to date, and make a book in pamphlet form; so that at the end of the year will have twelve numbers of the pamphlet. By this means the papers will not be scattered and so liable to be lost, as if thrown aside, after a casual perusal, as newspapers generally are. This paper is well worth all the pains it takes to keep it in a state of preservation for future reference. By this means any article in any number of any date may easily be turned to and consulted again. It frequently occurs that we wish to re-read an article in a previous number, for it contains, week after week, thoughts and researches of the ablest minds in the Methodist Church, South, on scientific and theological subjects which can be found nowhere else without a vast deal of study and investigation. The generality of readers have neither the time nor opportunity to investigate such questions as the ADVOCATE solves and gives the result. The various topics of the day are also fully discussed, pro and con, and brings to light the various phases of the subject. As a rule, these articles are well worth reading in after days. But there are no long-winded, continued stories of a thrilling, exciting character, founded entirely on fiction, or the results of a vivid imagination, published in the ADVOCATE. And, indeed, it is meet, proper and right that there should not be such, for such articles are calculated to produce a dislike for reading either books or papers of real worth and accredited authority. They never make educated men or women. They never give the proper tone to the morals of a boy or a girl. They are never instrumental in producing in the mind of the reader a sense of his or her sinful nature and practice, and of leading him or her to the cross upon which hung the bleeding Victim for the sins of the world. Such articles are not worth reading the second time, and should not be read the first.

And such is not the case with the paper sent out by you, week after week. It is, indeed, and in truth, what its title indicates. It advocates the cause of Christianity. It is alive to the interest of the church at large, and to the demands of the intellectual and spiritual man. From all points of the compass it brings intelligence of the progress of the Christian religion. From it we learn what advances the kingdom of Christ and of our God is making in the far-off heathen lands; how the idolatrous worshipers are being turned from their idols to the true God; how the missionaries labor and toil for those children and older ones who have never enjoyed the Bible and Christian privileges that we have.

A Chance to Get Two Good Books, and, at the Same Time, Help the Paine and the Lane Institutes.

Dr. Rogers, of the Illinois Conference of our church, is the author of a small treatise on baptism.—I heard Bishop McTyeire give it a strong endorsement from the chair during the session of that Conference, last November. Bro. Rogers offers to give for my work the entire profits on all the copies ordered through me. It is well bound. Price, twenty-five cents.

Miss Annie M. Barnes has written one of the most intensely interesting books of the day, "The Life of David Livingstone," published by our House at Nashville. Price, one dollar, postpaid. They allow her forty cents on every copy she sells, or that is sold through her influence. She proposes to give for my work half this commission on every copy sold through me as her agent. You can not get a better or a more instructive book for your Sunday-school library; your children, or for yourself. The book, too, is one of the most handsomely bound that has ever been sent out by our House. It would make an elegant birthday or holiday gift. Send me one dollar, and get this book. By so doing you will not only help in a good cause, and get a valuable present for some young person, but you will encourage the commendable efforts of a young lady who deserves well of our church.

Answer to "Jack's Wife."

MR. EDITOR: Please inform "Jack's Wife" that "Jack" was not in "Tom Stirling's" mind when he wrote "A Presiding Elder Pounded." I have "Tom Stirling's" word for it. "Jack" was loved here, but not so much loved that the people were unwilling to receive kindly his successor. As "Jack's" successor, I have been as kindly received and as generously treated as I have ever been in any new circuit. I hope "Jack" will not think that there is any great dissatisfaction at my appointment here as pastor. I have assurance to the contrary from "Tom Stirling" and one of the leading stewards of the circuit. The latter, one of "Jack's" most ardent admirers and truest friends, assured me a few days ago that the officials of the church had expressed themselves as gratified at my appointment to their work.

"JACK'S" SUCCESSOR.

From the Work.

COLUMBIA, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: There is in the bounds of this work a house, in which was held the second Annual Conference in the State of Mississippi, still in a good state of preservation. It was once a block-house; and if it could talk, doubtless, could tell many a tale of gallant resistance and deathly struggle on the part of the whites against the dusky warriors of the forest. In it, too, was held one of the first State conventions; so that it has quite a politico-religious history—one, too, that runs back for, perhaps, a hundred years. It was then owned and occupied by John Ford, a local preacher, who was one of the pioneers of Methodism in this country.

Many and great changes have been wrought since that time; for whereas before this was one immense wilderness, with here and there a settlement, and the preacher's duties extended from the Tombigbee to the Mississippi river, now it is all different: the whole country is pretty well occupied, and the circuit is one of only five appointments, with the farthest church only fourteen miles away.

This is the beginning of my third year here, and the people have treated me well. One hundred and sixteen have been received into the church these two years, and the assessments have all been paid in full, and last year overpaid. This year we have begun well; am taking all of the collections at once, and have succeeded beyond my most sanguine expectations. Foreign missions paid in full, and sent off, and the remaining collections will be overpaid in a short while. This is not a rich circuit, but our people are becoming more and more liberal, which is better than wealth. We paid more self-denial money last year than did any one of the four largest stations in the Mississippi Conference. That speaks well for Columbia circuit. We are getting along better spiritually, too. We have three prayer-meetings in Columbia alone, and they are on an average better attended than any I ever saw. Do not understand me to say that all is sunshine and smooth sailing, for it is not. I suppose that everything has its evil as well as good, and we are no exception to the rule. This is a "dry" country, but it has its stump-hole groceries, which is one of the evils that we have to contend with. Columbia would be the very place for the Mississippi College, according to the requisites stated by the brother from Brandon. Yes, far superior to the above-named place; in fact, I do not think that Brandon would do at all, for it had Centenary once, but did not keep her. Bro. Featherston said at Conference that Centenary was sick. That sickness must have been caused by the chill given to her by Brandon. There is too much malaria there for a college, for it might take the swamp fever, and so we would lose the child. Now, this is a fine country—the land sandy, and the health splendid. So much for the prime requisite. The next, necessibility. We have Brandon there, for we are only thirty-two miles from the railroad on one side, and forty on the other; so that while Brandon is as much as a mile from the railroad, it is only one railroad, while we have one on each side, to say nothing of the steamboats that run here (when the river is up). The third requisite—insulation. Well, sir; it would have been well for the boomer of Brandon to have left that point out, for we have him there worse than ever. There is not a male college in a hundred miles of this place; in fact, we are so insulated that if we were electrified by having the college granted to us, the sparks would be seen by no college—no, not even by Brandon, the aspirant. The least and last requisite—wealth. I have told you that we were liberal; indeed, sir, we would, I think, give the public school buildings for the college, and, besides all that, furnish the president. In view of this array of facts, Brandon had better hide her diminished head and withdraw her complaint, for she has not the ghost of a chance. Columbia is the place for the college.

FAISONIA AND NEW SALEM, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: As I have been connected with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, thirty-four years, and steward about twenty years, and the ADVOCATE is the oldest member of my family, I will send my first item of news from this circuit. I have been in this delta about two years last December, I came here from the Brookhaven district, Mississippi Conference, under the impression that the church was poorly supplied with the ministry; but I have been very agreeably surprised to find the preaching ability of my worthy pastor for 1888, Rev. T. H. Owen, equal, if not superior, to any that I had been accustomed to. He done us a faithful year's work, and we were sorry, indeed, to give him up last Conference; but we consider his place well filled by his successor, Rev. O. L. Savage, who is a man of sweet spirit and fine ability, and abundant in labors. This charge is in better condition than it has been since I have been here.

Our first Quarterly Conference was held at Faisonia, March 10, Rev. R. M. Standifer in the chair. He preached a good sermon from 1. Cor. xv, 58. The report of the preacher in charge was splendid, having visited quite all of the members in the bounds of this charge, and organized a new church about six miles from his charge, where the gospel was never preached before.

Methodism has a fine field in this delta, and it is gratifying to see that the church is "going forward." and to have men of wisdom and faith to carry on the work.

The NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE is highly appreciated in this country, and my pastor is doing all he can to increase its circulation. We would be glad to have you come up to our District Conference, April 26, at Cleveland, on the L., N. O. and T. R. R. Pray for us.

Yours in the love of Christ,

R. E. GRAY.

MR. EDITOR: I agree with you that accounts of preachers' poundings are no good as church news. I do not know whether the good people of the Methodist Church, of this city, have filled Bro. Holloman's pantry or not. This I do know: that he is in favor with his people. His congregations are good, his sermons are good, and his prayer meetings are well attended, because they are not too long, and he has not too many prayers. Short prayers, and sweet, lively, spiritual songs, and very short and quick addresses are the things for prayer meetings, which, you know, all the clergy say are the laymen's meetings. Bro. Holloman has commenced and gone thus far in his work very nicely, indeed. May God direct him, and good-will be the result! Some accessions, I know; but how many have joined the church I do not know. If he can but be the instrument in the hand of the Master of convincing the wise men of this city of the true duties of life, all will be well.

A MEMBER.

SALLIS CIRCUIT, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: The first Quarterly Conference for this pastoral charge was held at Springdale Church, on Saturday and Sunday, March 16, 17. Our able presiding elder, R. Wheat, was present, and preached with improved ability. The Conference was an occasion of spiritual power, and was enjoyed in the usual Methodist way. Dr. Wheat made a fine impression on the people, and his visits among us during the year will be looked to with fond anticipation. The assessments for the new year were made and accepted by the Conference without a despondent word that I heard of. I believe this people mean business this year, and, as a basis for my calculations, I am glad to say: Sallis circuit paid every assessment in full last year and some over. We will do the same this year by the help of the Lord.

W. W. WILLIAMS, P. C.

SHILOH CIRCUIT.

MR. EDITOR: Our first quarterly meeting has come and gone, and we had a very pleasant occasion. Our presiding elder was at his post, and, though a little indisposed, he did the work well, both in the pulpit and Quarterly Conference, and we had a good meeting. The Board of Stewards made liberal provision for the preacher and family, and made a good showing for the first quarter; and, although my wife has been sick ever since Conference, depriving me of the privilege and duty of pastoral visiting almost entirely, yet I think the work is in a good condition, spiritually and temporally or financially. Now that my wife is much better, and will probably soon be well, I am hoping and praying for a good year; and, as I move around among my people, I shall not forget the ADVOCATE.

A. D. MILLER.

CATO, Mississippi.

What Inspires Dr. J. Parker.

He told his hearers what it was, the close of a paragraph in a recent address in a Congregational Church in England. Here is the paragraph:

When the world's heart is aching and sends for Charles H. Spurgeon, General Booth, Moody and Sankey, men who have, by the Eternal Spirit, entered into the solemn and overwhelming agony of Christ. I will not hesitate to say that there is a pollysyllabic ministry which is as barren as rationalism itself, though it professes to be evangelical in doctrine. It is not evangelicism; it is a mere trick of pollysyllables. I call such preaching the cruel art of giving stones for bread. It is the gospel made difficult. It is not the universal tongue of simplicity; it is the local and limited tongue of Babylonia. It is not right in our pulpits. It will destroy our holiest influence. It is the most monasticism which claims to hold the only key of the kingdom of heaven. Thank God the men who resort to theological cloud-making are unwanted by the great sorrowing and dying world. They are clever cloud-makers, but they know not the truth of the spirit of Christ. Thank God for the great Methodist pulpit! When I am outworn and helpless, I will take down a volume of the lives of our Methodist preachers, and I am sure to be inspirited and encouraged. When Methodism loses its evangelical intuition, it will sink into the decrepitude and heartlessness of a ghastly respectability.

LIBERALITY PROSPERS.—Richard Baxter says: "I never prospered more in my small estate than when I gave most. My rule has been, first, to spare out none on necessity, but to live frugally on a little; second, to serve God in any place upon that competency which he allowed me to myself, and what I had myself might be as good work for common good as that which I gave to others; and third, to do all the good I could with the rest, preferring the most public and durable object and the neurest. And the more I have practiced this, the more I have to do it with; and when I gave almost all, more came in, I scarce knew how, at least unexpected. But when by improvidence I have cast myself into necessities of using more upon myself or upon things in themselves of small importance, I have prospered much less than when I did otherwise or have contented myself to devote a sum I had gotten to charitable uses after my death instead of laying it out at present."

CHEERFULNESS.—How contagious it is! "I can not meet Mr.—— without getting a gleam of sunshine into my own life," said a friend recently. How we all need it! How one cheerful face lights up and brightens a company and changes in the thought of a disheartened pastor the whole aspect of a congregation! What right has one to look like a thunder-cloud and to generate darkness and gloom wherever he goes? Be cheerful. Cultivate a pleasant look; and a pleasant way of speaking to everybody. Never take a doleful view of things; then no one will cross the street to avoid meeting you or feel that the peace of mind is destroyed by a brief interview. The clear sky and bright sunshine after days of rain and fog are no more grateful than the cheering face and presence of those who reflect the most of the image of God.—Christian Inquirer.

It is the slovenliness of men and women which, for the most part, mars their lives, so unsatisfactory. They do not sit at the loom with keen eye and deft finger, but, they work listlessly, and without a sedulous care to piece together, as best they may, the broken threads. We are apt to give up work too soon, to suppose that a single breakage has ruined the cloth. The men who get on in the world are not daunted by one or a thousand breakages.—Sunday Review.

"I STOOD A MAN OF MACEDONIA."
(Acts xvi., 9.)

BY REV. J. F. STONE, M. A.

Through midnight gloom from Macedon,
The cry of myriads as of one,
The solemn silence of despair
Is eloquent in awful prayer;
The soul's exceeding bitter cry—
"Come o'er and help us, or we die!"

How mournfully it echoes on,
For half the earth is Macedon.
These brethren to their brethren call,
And by the love which loved them all,
And by the whole world's life they cry—
"Save that live, behold, we die!"

By other sounds the world is won.
Not that which wails from Macedon.
The roar of guilt is round it rolled,
For men unto themselves are sold;
And can not list the alien cry—
"To hear and help us, lest we die!"

Yet with that cry from Macedon,
The very ear of Christ rolls on.
"I come! who would abide my day,
In yonder wilds prepare my way.
My voice is crying in their cry—
Help ye the dying, lest ye die!"

Protestant Missions in Syria and Palestine.

In 1818 the American Board of Foreign Missions appointed Rev. Pliny Fisk and Rev. Levi Parsons as missionaries to Palestine. Mr. Parsons arrived in Jerusalem, February 17, 1823, and was the first Protestant missionary of modern time to reside there, but his work was cut short by his death, February 20, 1822. Mr. Fisk reached Jerusalem with Rev. Jonas King in 1823, and these missionaries for two years made Jerusalem the chief place of their labors, but from there was then suspended.

In 1823 the missionaries of the American Board commenced a mission in Beirut, the Rev. Isaac Bird and Rev. William Goodell landing there October 16, 1823, and the mission was strengthened in 1828 by Rev Eli Smith.

The London Society for the Jews was established in 1809, and in 1825 Michael Solomon Alexander, of England, was baptized and afterwards made the first Protestant Bishop of Jerusalem, being succeeded in 1846 by Bishop Gobat of the Church Missionary Society. Samuel Gobat was born in Switzerland in 1799. He was first a missionary in Abyssinia and afterward in Jerusalem, and for 30 years he was Bishop of Jerusalem, dying in 1879.

In 1870 the American Board transferred its mission in Syria to the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, and this church is the most important of the evangelizing agencies of Syria.

The Irish Presbyterian Church, the American United Presbyterian Church, the Free Church of Scotland, the English Church Missionary Society, the London and the British Society for the gospel among the Jews, the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society, the Friends and some German societies, are supporting missions in Palestine and Syria. There are also British Syrian schools, some independent Protestant schools at Sidon, and Rev. Y. El Karey, a Baptist missionary, at Nablous.

The American Presbyterian Church reported last May that in its Syrian mission at Beirut, Abeih, Sidon, Tripoli, Zaideh, and their out-stations, there were 31 American missionaries, 1 native Syrian laborers, 19 churches, 31 church buildings, 1,493 communicants, 85 regular preaching places, 66 Sunday-schools with 3,732 scholars, and that in 1887 the native churches contributed $8,114. The printing work is very important, there being printed during 1887 over 57,000 volumes containing over 20,000,000 of pages, more than half being pages of Scriptures. The educational work is no less important, there being 1 Syrian Protestant college, 1 theological school, 1 theological seminary, 3 boarding-schools, 3 female seminaries, 19 high schools, 91 common schools, with a total of 5,391 pupils.

The Free Church of Scotland commenced a mission at Tiberias on the Sea of Galilee in 1884 and it has there two male missionaries, Dr. D. W. Torrance and Rev. William Ewing; a foreign teacher, Miss Ellen Fenton, and five native helpers.

The London Society for work among the Jews reports missions in Jerusalem, Jaffa, Safed and Damascus. The missionary in Jerusalem says that the Jews' knowledge of Christianity is much better than it used to be, that the New Testament is now read and published where formerly it was unknown, and he fully believes it is becoming a household book among the Jews.

The British Society for work among the Jews has one missionary in Syria, Rev. A. Ben-Oliel, who was transferred from Rome to Jaffa in 1887.

The Presbyterian Church in Ireland supports a mission at Damascus and four stations where there are 11 day-schools with 705 scholars.

The English Church Missionary Society supports missions at Jaffa, Gaza, Jerusalem, Ramallah, Nablous, Nazareth, Haifa, Salt, and East of the Jordan, with 10 ordained English missionaries, 1 European female teachers, 5 native ordained preachers, 60 native readers, 131 communicants, 32 schools and 2,011 scholars.

The missionary at Jerusalem writes that there is an immense field for work among the women of Jerusalem, and that the almost unanimous testimony of workers in Palestine is that never before the Moslems of Palestine so willing to listen to the gospel as now, and it is our duty to avail ourselves of the very opening for telling them the message of love in Christ."

The missions of the Friends are at Ramallah on Mount Lebanon and at Ramallah, Palestine. At Brummana is a medical mission, a boys' training home, a girls' training home. At Ramallah are several schools and a medical mission.—Gospel in all Lands.

Sunday-School Lesson.

(Hurlburt and Simpson's Lesson Commentary. Phillips & Hunt, New York.)

LESSON I.—April 7.

THE TRIUMPHAL ENTRY.

Mark xi, 1-11.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion; shout, O daughter of Jerusalem: behold, thy King cometh unto thee.—Zech. ix. 9.

TIME.—A. D. 29. Palm Sunday. Four days before the Jewish Passover. Christ's triumphal entry into the city took place on Sunday.

PLACES.—Bethany. In Bethany Jesus was at home. It was the village of Lazarus, and Martha, and Mary. Jerusalem and the Temple.

PARALLEL PASSAGES.—Matt. xxi, 1-11; Luke xix, 29-44; John xii, 12-19.

1. Nigh to Jerusalem—Bethany was a suburb of Jerusalem, about two miles from that city, on the eastern slope of the Mount of Olives, near the place where the road to Jericho descends steeply to the Jordan valley. It was the home of Mary and Martha. But where was Bethphage? It is generally assumed to have been a village near Bethany. The meaning of the word is house of figs. Mount of Olives—A hill just east of Jerusalem, so called from the olive trees upon it. It was about a mile from the city. It was their open ground for pleasure; for worship—the "Park" of Jerusalem—the thoroughfare of any going or coming in the direction of the great Jordan valley. Two of his disciples—An analogous commission to prepare the Passover was given to Peter and John. (Luke xxii, 8.) They may have been the two sent forth.

2. Into the village over against you—This may have been Bethany, or, on the assumption that it was nearer Jerusalem, Bethpage itself, or possibly some smaller village, the name of which has perished. Ye shall find a colt tied—The horse was an animal of pride and war; the ass of humility and peace. Yet there was nothing mean in the humble state which our Lord now assumed. Even Solomon, the Jewish prince of peace, rode on a mule in state. Wherein never man sat—Not readily would there be found such a colt at one and the same time and place; this one, therefore, was reserved for the Lord. Those creatures or things which are to serve Christ must be free from all pollutions of sinful bodies. (See Matthew xxvii, 60.) This was not, we think, as Hengstenberg maintains, to indicate humility, but sacredness. Unused animals were put to sacred purposes.

3. If any man say—Whether owner or not. The Lord—The word Lord often means no more than master as opposed to servant. The word is sometimes used in the Bible as applied to God, or as a translation of the name JEHOVAH. Its common use is a mere title of respect given by an inferior to a superior, by a servant to a master, by a disciple to a teacher. As a title of high respect, it was given to Christ, or the Messiah. Straightway he will send him hither—Or, in the new version, straightway he (Jesus) will return him back hither. The new version gives the true meaning. The idea is not, as commonly understood, that the owners will at once give up the animal, but a promise that the Lord would, without delay, return the animal.

4. They ... found the colt ... where two ways met—(Or, new version, at the door without, in the open street.) As this was an inconsiderable hamlet, which had probably but one street, it seems better to explain the term as meaning the highway on which the village stood. The apostles also found these animals, Mark tells us, by the door without; that is, probably before the door of the owner, who had just used or was just about to use them.

5. Certain of them—The owner or members of his household. What do ye, loosing the colt, is not an English idiom, though obviously equivalent to saying, What do you mean by thus unfastening or untying him?

6. They let them go—What a clear and full demonstration Christ gave of his divine nature: of his omniscience, in foreseeing and foretelling the event; of his omnipotency, in inclining the heart and overruling the will of the owner to let the colt go; and of his sovereignty, as he was Lord of the creature, to command and call for their service when he needed them. All was the carrying out of an eternal plan that an old prophet saw six hundred years before.

7. They ... cast their garments on him; and he sat upon him—Jesus mounted the unused foal, while probably some of his disciples led it by the bridle. They lifted him upon the colt, and the triumphal procession set forth. It was no seditious movement to stir up political enthusiasm, no "insulting vanity" to commemorate ambitious triumph. Nay, it was a mere outburst of provincial joy, the simple exultation of poor Galileans and despised disciples. He rides, not upon a war-horse, but on an animal which was the symbol of peace.

8. Many spread their garments in the way—These garments were the abba, or hyke, being the loose blanket or cloak worn over the tunic or shirt. To celebrate the arrival of some great hero by spreading carpets, or, still more, their garments, was a Greek and Roman custom, and is so natural as to be in use in modern times even in Christian countries. Cut down branches—That is, while one part were strewing their garments in token of humble affection, the others were cutting the branches of the palm, the emblem of victory, to strew his path. Others still, according to Mark xi, 8, cut and strewed mattings or twisted weavings of the palm twigs.

9. They that went before, and they that followed—Stanley assumes that the front band came from the city, and the rear from Bethany. Hosanna—The word hosanna means "save now," or, "save, I beseech thee." It is a Syriac word, and was the form of acclamation used among the Jews. It was probably used in the celebration of their great festivals. During those festivals they sang the 115th, 116th, 117th, and 118th Psalms. In the chanting or singing of those Psalms the Jewish writers inform us that the people responded frequently, Hallelujah! or Hosanna! Their use of it on this occasion was a joyful acclamation, and an invocation of a divine blessing by the Messiah. Cometh to the name of the Lord—That is, as his embassador. The words are taken in part from Psalm cxviii, 25, 26, a hymn which belonged to the great hallelujah chanted at the end of the paschal supper and feast of tabernacles.

10. Kingdom of our father David—Mark adds that they shouted, "Blessed be the kingdom of our father David, that cometh in the name of the Lord." That is, the kingdom promised to David. Coming in the name of the Lord means coming according to the promise of the Lord. Its meaning may be thus expressed: "Prosperity to the reign of our father David, advancing now according to the promise made to him, and about to be established by the long-promised Messiah, his descendant." In the highest—This may mean either "Hosanna in the highest, loftiest strains," or it may mean a prayer to God, "save now, O thou that dwellest in the highest heaven, or among the highest angels."

11. Into Jerusalem—Jerusalem in its glory rose before them. It is hard for us to imagine, even to imagine the splendor of the view. The City of God, seated on her hills, shone at the moment in the morning sun. Straight before stretched the vast white walls and buildings of the temple, its courts glittering with gold, rising one above the other: the steep sides of the hill of David crowned with lofty walls: the mighty castles towering above them: the sumptuous palace of Herod in its green parks, and the picturesque outlines of the streets. Over all rested the spell of a history of two thousand years; of a present which craved salvation in its own perverted way; and the mystic holy of holies linked the seen to the invisible. The crusaders, long centuries after, when the only glory left to the Holy City was its wondrous memories, burst out into a loud cry, Jerusalem! Jerusalem! when they first saw it, and the enthusiasm of the Jew could not have been fainter. The shouts and rejoicing rose higher than ever. Into the temple—The word temple was given, not merely to the sacred edifice, or house itself, but to all the numerous chambers, courts, and rooms connected with it, on the top of Mount Moriah. The temple itself was a very small edifice, and was surrounded by courts and chambers half a mile in circumference. Into the sacred edifice itself our Savior never went. The high-priest only went into the holy of holies, and that but once a year; and none but priests were permitted to enter the holy place. Our Savior was neither. He was of the tribe of Judah, and he consequently was allowed to enter no farther than the other Israelites into the temple. The works that he is said to have performed in the temple, therefore, are to be understood as having been performed in the courts surrounding the sacred edifice. Looked round about upon all things—This was not done through vain curiosity, but in order to ascertain by personal inspection what abuses had crept into the temple worship, and what portions of the sacred house and its courts had been profaned by money-changers and others of similar stamp. Eventide was come, he went out—Thus a certain sadness and sense of rejection fell even on the evening of the day of triumph. It was not safe for Jesus to stay in the city, nor was it in accordance with his wishes. He retired secretly from the temple, hid himself from his watchful enemies, and protected as yet outside the city walls by the enthusiasm of his Galilean followers, "went out unto Bethany with the twelve."

Temperance Notes.

It is said that 30,000 people go to bed drunk in Glasgow every Saturday night.

A Kentucky W. C. T. U. woman recently said she had six unanswerable arguments in favor of prohibition—her six sons.

In one court of London twenty-seven out of twenty-eight cases of attempted suicide within a short time were traced directly to drink, and the twenty-eighth was doubtful.

Pennsylvania W. C. T. U. has a well organized press department. Out of a total of sixty-six counties, sixty-four have active superintendents at work for the amendment.

Mrs. Aggie F. Newman, of Lincoln, Neb., recently spoke before the State Legislature in behalf of the Milford Home for unfortunate women. An appropriation bill is pending.

The American Humane Education Society, through Geo. S. Angell, president, offers to American editors a prize of $300 for the best essay on "The Effect of Humane Education on the Prevention of Crime."

There is more spiritual destitution prevalent among a million of the dwellers in New York and Brooklyn than exists among a dozen whole States and Territories at the West.—J. M. Sherwood.

How to control and finally destroy this evil is the great problem of the hour. Its solution is next on the world's calendar of progress. The saloon has boldly entered politics and it has come to stay until vanquished or victorious. Hon. William Windom, Secretary of the Treasury, July, 4, 1887.

What is Scrofula

It is that impurity in the blood, which, accumulating in the glands of the neck, produces unsightly lumps or swellings; which causes painful running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which develops ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or many other manifestations usually ascribed to "humors." It is a more formidable enemy than consumption or cancer alone, for scrofula combines the worst possible features of both. Being the most ancient, it is the most general of all diseases or affections, for very few persons are entirely free from it.

How can it be cured? By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the cures it has accomplished, often when other medicines have failed, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. For all affections of the blood Hood's Sarsaparilla is unequalled, and some of the cures it has effected are really wonderful. If you suffer from scrofula in any of its various forms, be sure to give Hood's Sarsaparilla a trial.

Briefs.

The Carondelet Street Methodist Church subscribed this week seven hundred dollars for the new brick church that is to be built for the Louisiana Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Rev. J. B. Walker, D. D., who is pastor of the last-named church, states that there is about $7,000 secured for building the Louisiana Avenue Church, and that it will not be long before the brick walls are up and the slate roof put on this edifice.

Rev. Dr. A. G. Haygood says: "True education will move along three great lines—books, morals, industry. To state it otherwise: There must be head-training, heart-training and hand-training. Each helps the other, and neither is complete without the other." Again he advises: "Put religion in your college; not mere orthodox belief, but real, warm, soul-saving religion; not the sort only that makes people happy, but also the sort that makes them good; the sort that makes men and women good and true in all the relations of life, as well as ready for the life to come."

Rev. James A. Parker, president of the Board of Education of the Louisiana Annual Conference, informs us that owing to the agitation of the subject of education by the ministers of this Conference, as well as by the Louisiana Educational Societies, an increasing interest in public school education is manifest in Louisiana, specially in the northern part of the State. So great has been the improvement in the quality and number of schools in the parishes of Bossier, Webster, Bienville, Claiborne, Lincoln, Union and Ouachita that there is hardly room for more schools than now are regularly taught in said parishes; while good schools are found in Winn, Caldwell, Catahoula, Richland and West Carroll, in nearly every thickly settled neighborhood. Bro. Parker stated that he was not sufficiently acquainted with the progress made in education in other parts of Louisiana, but he thought the advance in this line was manifest throughout the entire State.

The New Orleans City Mission, of the Southern Methodist Church, held its annual meeting March 19, Rev. J. T. Sawyer, its president, in the chair. After several short, spirited talks, it was unanimously decided to push this arm of Christian work and to strengthen and maintain the mission stations already planted, which are as follows: Claiborne Street Mission Sunday-school, and Gretna Chapel and Sunday-school; The Industrial School, supported by the Carondelet Street Church; Felicity Mission, by the Felicity Street Church; Third District Mission and Washington Avenue Mission, by Moreau Street Church; and Gouldsboro Mission, by Algiers Church. The following officers of the City Mission were elected for the present year: President, Rev. D. L. Mitchel; vice-presidents, J. G. Grant, C. M. Fush, W. B. Thomson, J. W. Adams, J. J. Rochester, C. Wagener, F. A. Daniels, W. H. Krone, A. Weaful, and J. T. Belt; treasurer, J. R. Westerfield, who is also secretary pro tem. A vote of thanks was tendered Bro. Sawyer, the retiring president, for his faithful labors in this good cause.

New Orleans District Conference.

This body was opened for business March 21, in Felicity Street Church, by Bishop Keener reading the eighth chapter of Hebrews, and the Conference joining in singing 249th hymn and prayer, led by the Bishop. Bro. Sawyer was elected secretary. Only two committees were called for—one on Public Worship, and one on Quarterly Conference Records. There was a goodly number of members present, especially from the country circuits and stations. Before proceeding to call for reports from the pastors, the Bishop took occasion to say that it was oftentimes difficult to guage properly the spirituality of a church. Several things must enter into such a computation, and we must, in some way, form our judgment by the aggregate use or non-use of such things. Attendance upon preaching and the social meetings of the church; home religion, such as reading the Scriptures and family worship; reading religious literature and giving to the Lord's cause, constitute the principal evidences of a church's spirituality. Where these are all well attended to the growth of a church in holy things becomes an assured fact.

From the reports of the pastors we come to the conclusion that, in many things, our church in this district is in a growing condition. Faithful work in preparing the ground and sowing the seed and cultivating the vineyard is beginning to reward the laborer with a ripened harvest. Many members have already been received into the fold. The congregations have increased in number over last year, and the social meetings of the church are being better attended than in the past. The Sunday-schools generally are in fine working order, and are doing admirable work, both in the Scripture lessons for each week and monthly missionary lessons. Some pastors report a monthly missionary prayer meeting. This we know to be an excellent feature to awaken an interest in missions, and would advise our pastors everywhere to adopt it. Make preparation to give the prayer meeting a talk on some phase of the mission work, and then pray over it, and ere long you will see a good result. Church and parsonage building are getting along towards the eve of a revival. Two new churches are projected in the city, both of which we hope will be built before the next session of our Conference. The Conference collections have, in some places, been pretty well collected, and in others will be forthcoming at the time they are wanted. There can be no fear about collections in a district where the membership contribute $14 apiece for church work, as was done by the members in this district last year. Bishop Keener's talk on this subject before the Conference was the most tremendous and awful statement of the financial responsibility of the church we have ever heard. It made the hair stand on end when we saw the picture of the Methodist Church leaning over the brink of the precipice of the bottomless pit. Such talks must stir our people on this important subject.

Several very valuable papers were read before the Conference on important topics, such as "Higher Education," by F. M. Grace; "The Steward and the Pastor," by S. J. Davies; "How to Take the Conference Collection," by J. T. Sawyer; "Mission Work in the City," by J. B. A. Ahrens.

The missionary spirit took a good, strong hold on the Conference, and brought it right up to the point of subscribing $500 in a few minutes for the purpose of supplying the waste places along the Lafourche with the gospel. A committee was raised to continue the work of soliciting funds for that purpose until sufficient have been contributed. The financial report of the Seashore Camp Ground Association was read by the secretary, E. P. Mackie; and while it showed progress in the improvement of the grounds, it revealed the fact that the association was still somewhat in debt.

The following persons were elected delegates to the next Annual Conference: George Thomson, B. O. L. Rayne, W. B. Thomson, T. J. Reames.

Dr. Hunnicutt, the president of Centenary College, was present during the whole session. His address before the Conference, on "College Endowment," yielded the magnificent result of ten thousand dollars added to the endowment fund of Centenary. Rev. J. W. McLaurin, Agent of the American Bible Society, gave a short, but clear-cut account of what that time-honored and noble institution is doing to supply the world with the Word of God. By a unanimous vote the Conference decided to hold its next session at Plaquemine.

One feature of this session was the preaching each day at eleven A. M. This has not been usual here, but the results justified the course. We had some strong and practical preaching, which was edifying and refreshing, and full of power for good. Looking over the whole field as represented by the reports of the preachers, we think the cause of God in the district is moving forward. Let every Methodist in the district strive for the point at which the prophet stood when he cried: "For Zion's sake will I not hold my peace, and for Jerusalem's sake I will not rest until her righteousness go forth as brightness, and her salvation as a lamp that burneth."

Missionary Reunion.

Tuesday evening of last week we spent a delightful hour with the Felicity Street Sunday-school Missionary Society. The enterprising superintendent, Bro. E. P. Mackie, has started a quarterly missionary reunion of his school, and the one we attended was the first of the series to be carried throughout the year. The exercises, consisting in speeches, recitations and songs (all on the line of mission work), were quite interesting and entertaining. There was a good attendance for the first meeting of the kind, and the audience enjoyed the hour most delightfully. We like Bro. Mackie's new departure, and are sure that it will give new zest to the mission work of a school which has already done much good and attained high distinction on that line. For over twenty-five years this school has been sending money every year direct to China to educate native ministers; and this new movement of a quarterly missionary reunion will certainly quicken a zeal that is already commendable, and bring into the treasury of the Lord much money that might otherwise go into some other treasury. There is no better work for a superintendent to do than to familiarize his scholars with missionary obligations and privileges and methods of work. Train them up in this way, and when they are old they will be missionary Christians out and out.

Not the least interesting of the exercises of the evening was the report of what the different classes had done during the past quarter in missionary collections. The report showed quite an advance over the first quarter of last year. The collection for the evening amounted to a handsome little sum. We wish Bro. Mackie and his bright Sunday-school scholars and faithful teachers abundant success.

The Christian Newspaper.

We quote from one of our exchanges the following in regard to the influence of a good religious newspaper upon the habits and character of the individual Christian: "No Christian can hope to attain to any truly high degree of intelligent spirituality and comprehensive efficiency who passes through life without reading a good Christian newspaper. Such an one is necessarily narrow-minded and short-sighted with reference to the vast and varied issues which are being realized by the kingdom of Christ in its world-wide outreaches and magnificent achievements. He needs the Christian paper to be constantly informed of the various phases of the work which is being carried on all along the lines of Christian endeavor throughout the world. No Christian can pay to the best advantage without the helpful agency of the Christian newspaper. It is by means of such an instrumentality that hundreds of objects of prayer are brought to our notice. The wants of the kingdom of Christ and the needs of a perishing world are thus laid before us, and they invite us to pray to God to specially bless those objects, and to fill us with deeper desires to do more than ever for the support of his cause. And let me say, further, that no Christian father can afford to deprive his children of the reading and influence of such a paper. It is one of the very best educators of the family, and is worth ten times its actual cost to every household."

We endorse heartily every word of the above extract, and especially do we emphasize the last sentence. Several years ago Bishop Keener said that "the church will march into the kingdom of God through the beautiful gates of childhood." If the church will familiarize her children with the doctrines and precepts and facts of our holy religion, and with the simple and impressive services and ritual of Methodism around her family altars and in her sanctuaries of worship, and then will emphasize and clinch these lessons through the instrumentality of the church paper, she will anchor herself in the affections of childhood; and once anchored there, she will safely ride the crest of every billow and weather every storm. Readers of the ADVOCATE, is not that something worthy of our best efforts? Will we not do that much for the church of the future?

Dr. Hunnicutt's speech before the New Orleans District Conference, on "College Endowments," was an able exposition of that now prominent subject. The Doctor showed conclusively that no college now-a-days can do regular college work, and do it as it ought to be done, without an endowment fund. It is needed to procure first-class instructors, and to keep buildings in repair, and to maintain an apparatus for the illustration of the advancing science of the day, and to cheapen tuition. The Doctor presented these and other points so forcibly that when he came to call for subscriptions to the endowment fund of Centenary College, the audience responded in a short time with $10,000. Pretty good for one speech! One advantage of subscribing to the endowment fund of Centenary College is, that she has already a plant of magnificent buildings worth $75,000, and no money is needed, and none will be spent, for houses. New Orleans district has sounded the key-note, and now let the other districts take up the strain and waft its music along the valleys and over the hills of Louisiana and Mississippi. Let the preachers everywhere work like beavers to consummate the grand work so auspiciously begun in this city, and let the membership of our church rally as one man to push forward this important matter. There is plenty of room for two colleges in the territory of our ADVOCATE, and we trust the friends of each will work in a generous Christian rivalry, "provoking one another to love and good works," and thus build up the cause of Christian education. It will be a grand day for our church when we have two great colleges built and richly endowed by the generosity of the Methodists of our two great States.

Something to Think About.

We have been looking over the financial reports of our church in Louisiana, and find some things commendable, and some things not commendable, and some things alarming. We take the reports as published by Secretary Sawyer in the last Minutes. We have simply compared districts on one or two points. Hereafter we may return to the subject. The New Orleans District, with 2,617 members, raised $36,497, which is about $14 11 per member; Shreveport district, with 3,890 members, raised $17,250, which is $4 43 per member; Alexandria district, with 2,950 members, raised $9,619, which is $3 26 apiece; Opelousas district, with 1,891 members, raised $10,407, equal to $5 50 apiece; Delhi district, with 1,794 members, raised $9,262, which is $5 16 per member; Homer district, with 5,199 members, raised $13,643, which is $2 62 apiece. This includes everything reported in the Minutes.

On missionary contributions the districts stand thus: For foreign missions, per member—New Orleans, 58 cents; Shreveport, 24 cents; Alexandria, about 7 cents; Opelousas, 26 cents; Delhi, 23 cents, and Homer, 12 cents. For domestic missions, per member—New Orleans, 12 cents; Shreveport, 6 cents; Alexandria, 3 cents; Opelousas, 8 cents; Delhi, 8 cents; and Homer, 4 cents. So that last year Louisiana Methodists gave 25 cents apiece to evangelize the heathen abroad, and about 5 cents apiece to supply the destitute places at home.

Loyalty to Law.

No civic virtue is of more importance at the present time than that of loyalty to the law. We know nothing of loyalty to the persons of princes. To us there is more of majesty in the law, as the expression of the sovereignty of the State, than in any person however exalted. But the absence of the outward trappings of majesty, more especially to the view of our adopted citizens, who have to unlearn the impressions of the old world, has the effect of weakening the sense of obligation to obey the law. Lawlessness is the besetting temptation of our time. The freedom given to individual initiative in all pursuits, and facility of organization to bring a collective force to bear in any direction, alike tend to diminish the sense of responsibility. There is need of impressing, particularly on the minds of the young, a lesson of the sacredness of the authority of law, and of the rightful supremacy of the justice of the State. A league of good citizens to promote the impartial execution of salutary laws operates as a constant reminder that the statutes of the commonwealth are not a dead letter, but an expression of the public will, in forms authorized by the fundamental law, and under the sanction of him who is the author of society. "The powers that be are ordained of God:"—Watchman.

News has been received by Mrs. Kells, editress of the Mississippi White Ribbon, stating that Miss Frances E. Willard, president of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union, will be present at the Mississippi convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, on Friday, April 12.

Notes.

At a meeting of the Railroad Commissioners of the several States, in Washington City, recently, Commissioner Collin, of Iowa, stated that 6,000 men are killed or maimed every year by the pin and link coupler and the hand-brake. He recommended national legislation compelling the adoption of safety appliances.

"A vast majority of Christians are never safe, except when at work or asleep." That sentence occurred in the article by "Asterisk" in last week's paper. Have you thought about how much there is in it? And how much the one depends upon the other? And what a peril idleness is? Especially idleness in respect to the Lord's work? The command every morning is: "Go work to-day in my vineyard!"

It is wonderful how much wisdom some children do sometimes show when explaining their mistakes. Read this:

"Tommy, what are you going to do with that club?" "Send it to the editor." "What for?" "'Cause he says if anybody sends him a club he will send him a copy of the paper." "But Tommy, what do you suppose he wants with a club?" "I don't know unless it is to knock down subscribers who don't pay for their paper."

We are glad always to chronicle examples of good giving. A notable instance is given of a Methodist Church in New York City. The Advocate, of that city, says that in the morning the congregation gave $1,600 and at night the Sunday-school brought in their collection cards, and the amount footed up $1,401, making in all, in one day, $6,081 to the missionary cause. That simply shows what a church can do, and it also shows that very many churches are simply doing nothing.

Miss Frances Willard's new book, "Glimpses of Fifty Years," with an introduction by Hannah Whitall Smith, will soon be ready for the public. We have been permitted to look at the "preface." It is rich and gives promise of richness in the body of the book. The book will have seven sub-divisions to correspond with the seven stages of life. They will be the welcome child, the romping girl, the happy student, the roving teacher, the fireless traveler, the temperance advocate and organizer, the woman in politics. The book will close with silhouettes.

At a meeting of the ministers of the Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian and Congregational Churches in Chicago, recently, the following was passed:

Resolved, That we appoint a committee to meet with similar committees of similar bodies to consider the propriety of calling a mass meeting in Chicago to extend sympathy and help to States thus struggling to free themselves from the bondage and degrading influence of the liquor traffic.

There is nothing like "aid and comfort" to those engaged in the battle. Our brethren in several of the States are engaged now in battle with the saloon, and they need and will appreciate sympathy and help.

There is a good deal of talk about the "spiritual destitution prominent among the dwellers in our great cities." An exchange puts the case thus:

The "destitution" in question is not of places of worship or of preachers of the gospel, but, of workers to seek men out, and by patient and long continued visitation win them to the church-going habit.

That is exactly the case. Our city pastors can not do all the work needed to be done. They need, every one of them, helpers, and the cause of Christ is suffering and its progress hampered because this need is not met. When our city churches begin to put in their budgets an item looking to the support of helpers for the pastors they will be moving in a right direction.

One of our ablest and best papers announced, frequently, that no original poetry would be published in its columns, and those who sent such to the office were only wasting time, paper and stamps. But one of our Bishops sent in a poetical contribution which fairly took the wind out of the sails of the craft, and made the editor's hair stand on end. With great haste it went to the printer, and appeared in the best and most conspicuous part of the paper. Did the editor think it too good to be original?—Central Methodist.

The "revenges of providence" are sometimes very "grim!"

The editor of a Christian newspaper has this:

What a bitter-sweet business this editorial work is! It is taffy and tronneling in about equal measure, and alternate doses. When you mourn somebody wants to dance; when you pipe somebody laments. You write a temperance paragraph and somebody sends you the information that you are a fanatic, while the same man brings the flattering opinion that "them" will give old and comfort to the rum-sellers." You find out that you are at once a Sabbatarian and a secularist; an aristocrat and an anarchist; a radical and a dogy; a Republican, a Democrat and a "third-partyite." The luckless editor is thus worked bellows-fashion, alternately inflated and flattened. But may be it is this, after all, that keeps him blowing and keeps this glowing "at the flaming forge of life."

Personal and Otherwise.

It is said of Dr. John P. Durbin, that when he went into the pulpit he gave out the notices, and then said: "We will now commence the worship of God."

A brother who has been looking up the figures gives us the following: At the Louisiana Agricultural and Mechanical College, at Baton Rouge, board and lodging is $180 per session; St. Charles Catholic College, $300; Centenary College $123. So there you are!

The Evangelist says that Rev. M. D. Hoge has entered upon the forty-fifth year of his pastoral charge of the Second Presbytorian Church of Richmond, Va.

There are nine cables connecting Europe and Amorica, and they use 13,000 miles of cable. That is enough cable to reach around the earth four and one half times.

Justice Stanley Matthews, of the United States Supreme Court, died in Washington, March 22. He was sixty-four years old and was appointed Justice by President Garfield, in 1881, to succeed Justice Swayne, retired from the position.

Rev. J. F. Girault, of the Episcopal Church in this city, died at his residence here last week. He was a native of Natchez, Miss., and had just past his sixty-eighth year.

Fielding Marvin, the only son of the late Bishop Marvin, a lawyer by profession, has been licensed to preach.

The St. Louis Advocate is out in a new dress entire. We congratulate our friends. We have only been able to put on a new apron.

The time of holding the Conferences on the Pacific Coast has been changed to the spring. The Los Angeles, May 22; Columbia, June 12; Pacific, June 26. This makes the present Conference year about eight months long.

Rev. J. H. Collins, evangelist, of Fulton, Ky., will be at the call of any of the brethren of Mississippi to assist in revival meetings after April 1. So writes Rev. W. M. Adams from Waterford, Miss.

The address of Rev. J. E. Buck is Boone, Winston county, Miss.

Rev. B. F. Alexander writes: "I am pleased to write that the Alexandria district is prospering."

In addition to the $10,000 subscribed for the endowment of Centenary College in the Distrfot Conference, Dr. Haunleutt secured $1,200 more on last Sunday from the Rayne Memorial and Felicity Street Churches.

Rev. O. L. Savage will preach the opening sermon of the Greenville District Conference, Thursday night, April 25.

The Sunday Picayune published a picture under which were these explanatory words: "Rev. C. W. Carter, D. D., editor of the Southwestern Christian Advocate." That was a surprising piece of information to many, and to none more than to Dr. Carter. Considering that the Picayune office is just two blocks from ours, the accuracy of the statement is truly refreshing.

In our last issue we alluded to Mr. John A. Lewis, of Meridian, Miss., as a Sunday-school superintendent. He writes he is only an humole teacher in the Sunday-school.

Mrs. E. M. Haunleutt, the wife of President Haunleutt, of Centenary College, is having fine success in raising means to procure a library for the Young Men's Christian Association of the college. This laudable enterprise, when completed, will add to the interest and profit of the students of the college.

Postal Card Reports.

—Rev. J. D. Newsom writes as follows: "Duncan can not as yet be pronounced a regularly organized charge. Formerly the Mississippi river was the attraction; it created the centres of trade and was the thoroughfare of travel. The Valley railroad unsettled these established centres and changed the route of travel. As we are adjusting ourselves to these changes and are preparing to build churches, etc., we are arrested and unsettled again by the survey and locating a double to the main trunk of the present line, which is being built so near to us here as to suggest other stations and depots that may be greater centres and create greater attraction than the places where we have been trying to organize and build."

—Rev. R. Randle, presiding older of the Homer district, writes as follows: "The work is doing well. The quarterly meetings are spiritual and the attendance good, with few exceptions. There is a greater disposition to make reasonable allowances for the support of the ministry than has been, and the communion services are well attended, while there is an increased attendance upon prayer meetings and other social church meetings, with an advance in the enforcement of Discipline. May the Master still build us up! Pray for us."

—Rev. G. E. Green writes from Red River circuit: "The Campo Bello Church is nearly rebuilt, and will be ready for services in a few weeks. It will be a very neat and attractive country church, with vestibule, Gothic windows and tasty cupola. Mrs. Hutchinson, the energetic lady member who has pushed on the rebuilding, certainly deserves credit for her untiring efforts. The Red River parsonage will shortly be commenced."

—Rev. J. W. Malone writes from Minter City, Miss., March 18, 1889: "We set apart the second and third Sundays in this month to raise the Conference collections for the Minter City and Strathmore charge. When the call was made, after a missionary sermon, in less thue than it takes to write this the decks were cleared at each place with a total excess of $40. Over ninety-five per cent. of the entire collection was paid in cash. Now for revival power deep and sweeping in both churches!"

BOOKS.

CHRISTIAN WOMANHOOD. By Rev. W. C. Black, of the Mississippi Conference. Second Thousand. Publishing House of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Nashville, Tenn. Price, $1.

The first edition of this work was sold out in a little more than ninety days after it appeared. This shows the popularity of the subject treated. Dr. Black, in bringing out a new edition, has added a supplement, containing a section on the New Testament deaconess, and one on the office of deacone-s in the Methodist Episcopal Church. He argues for the establishment of this office in all the churches, that thereby women may be brought to assist in the great work of evangelizing the people, especially in the cities. We think the book has already done much good and will do much more.

GUILDEROY. By Oudda. J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia. Eyrich's 130 Canal St., New Orleans. Price, twenty-five cents.

FORCED ACQUAINTANCES. By Edith Robinson. For sale here by Wharton, 3 Carondelet, and Eyrich, 130 Canal St. Price, fifty cents.

This capital novel is the new volume in Ticknor's Paper Series. Here is a bright story that has an uplifting power. It widens the moral horizon while teaching the tenderest, truest lessons of right living. The story of this life runs on—simple, natural and very true and sweet in its chronicle of the every-day trials and the possible realization of better ideals of life. It is a thoroughly good story for girls, holding the reader in absorbed attention from the first page to the last, and leaving a girl with the feeling that noble standards for common duties are practicable.

PERIODICALS.

—Fashion and Fancy, for April. The editors say they have determined to make this magazine not only one of the best, but one of the cheapest, so they have reduced the price to $3. 610 Olive Street, St. Louis, Mo.

—Vicks' Monthly, for March. All engaged in gardening for vegetables or flowers will find this magazine full of topics and hints for opening and pursuing spring work. James Vick, Rochester, New York.

—The April Missionary Review of the World puts in an early appearance and presents a rich and varied table of contents. Among the ten articles in the Literature Section we note as of special value, Dr. Pierson's on Further Testimonies to Missions; Dr. Ellinwood on Canon Taylor's Question of Population; Prof. Harlburt on China Inland Mission; Dr. Ludlow's Historical paper. Ulphilas and the Gothic Bible; The Distribution of Missionary Agents, by the veteran author, Storrow; Sir William Hunter's Religion of India, and Starbuck's translations from the missionary periodicals of the world. Here is a wide range of topics, and they are all ably handled. Then there are abstracts of the last reports of ten Missionary Societies, Correspondence from various lands, the International Department, and the Monthly Concert, by Drs. Gracey and Pierson. The Monthly News literally gleaned from the whole world and skillfully arranged for use. The Statistical Tables are valuable and Editorial Notes specially so, particularly the one on Utah and Dr. Isaac G. Bliss. The number as a whole is one of intense interest, and fully sustains the high character which this Review has already achieved. Published by Funk and Wagnalls, 18 and 20 Astor Place, New York. $2 per year; 25 cents for single numbers. In clubs of ten, $1 50.

—Good Housekeeping, published by Clark W. Bryan & Co., at Springfield, Mass., has reached No. 100. It is held by some that there may be too much of a good thing, but in practice it is found to make a difference what the good thing is. There can not surely be too much of Good Housekeeping, nor of good housekeeping, and since one promotes the other, the more the better in a double sense—in a centuple sense, in fact, in the present case.

—The Book Buyer, for March, has as frontispiece a portrait of Charles Dudley Warner, with a sketch of the same. It gives a summary of recent American and foreign literature, the newest books, readings from new books, and a list of the books of the month. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. Price, $1.

—Wide Awake, for March, is as good and beautiful and interesting as any number which has preceded it. There are articles which will please all sorts of readers, young and old, and pictures to delight the eyes of everybody. The adventures of David Vane and David Crane reach the eighteenth chapter in this number, and Margaret Sidney's Five Little Peppers Midway have gone through the eighth chapter. We know of no monthly for young people better than Wide Awake. D. Lothrop Company, Boston. Price, twenty cents; $2 10 a year.

—A paper on Ragged Schools, Old and New, opens the April number of The Quiver. Then comes the month's instalment of the serial, Miss Hillary's Suitors, with its capital illustrations, Bishop Alexander's thoughts upon Christ's last words, About Sternhold & Hopkins's Psalms, The Name Christian, A Call by the Unknown to the Unknown, and Religion on Earth and Religion in Heaven, make up the more theological articles of the number, but the general reader will find enough to entertain him in the short stories and the descriptive articles. Among the latter are The Silence of the Woods, Christian Work Among the Eskimos, and an account of a visit to the Reverend Scientist, Dr. W. H. Dallinger. Poetry and music add variety to the table of contents and a bundle of well selected "arrows" brings the number to a close. Cassell & Co., New York; fifteen cents a number, $1 50 a year in advance.

—Christianity in Earnest. A bi-monthly, edited by A. J. Kynett, D. D. Published at Church Extension Rooms of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Philadelphia. Price, fifty cents.

The Campaign Continues.

At Crystal Springs, on the thirteenth, our collection for the college footed up $1,100. Several persons known to be interested in the movement were absent; hence it is confidently expected that the amount will be raised to, at least, $1,500. A meeting was held at Hazlehurst the next night. The amount we are authorized to report from there is $810, but more is expected. The three towns—Wesson, Crystal Springs and Hazlehurst—have given $1,275; and these are all in Copiah county. What county will eclipse Copiah? Will it be Hinds, Adams, Lowndes, Monroe or Montgomery?

W. C. BLACK.

JACKSON, Mississippi.

Notice.

To the Members of the North Mississippi Conference:

It may have escaped the memory of some of the brethren (as it does not appear in the published Minutes lately issued) that the Conference resolved that the collection for Christian education should be taken, if possible, before April 1, 1889, and forwarded to Rev. T. J. Newell, treasurer of the Grenada Collegiate Institute, at Grenada. Now, then, we desire to call attention to this, and to say that it is important that $500, at least, be in hand by April 1. A little attention to this important matter we feel is all that is necessary.

R. P. LAKE,
Sec. B'd Trustees, G. C. I.

Notice.

MR. EDITOR: Will you please publish the following notice in next week's ADVOCATE. All persons coming to the "Holiness meeting," at Waterford, Miss., must obtain from agent at starting-point a receipt for full fare paid to Waterford on a Southern passenger association "blank," which when properly filled out at meeting will be honored by agent at Waterford, for return ticket at one-third fare. This applies to the I. C. and K. C. M. and B. R. R. R. I hope you will put this short notice in our organ. If it were about education, no doubt you would; but as it is about Holiness, I am afraid I will not see it.

Your brother in Christ.

W. M. ADAMS.

Publisher's Department.

Gladstone, in giving his estimate of advertising, says: "Advertising is undoubtedly very effective; its power is enormous. If we consult those who have made successful use of this extraordinary instrument, it will be found that it depends upon making an impression by iteration, or by constant repetition of the same thing. This shows a great eagerness to compete for attention, and that no one gets it unless it is by giving, as it were, so many strokes of the hammer to compel people to notice what is going on."

Stationery drummer (to editor of religious newspaper): "Can't sell you some fine paper on which to write 'editorials?'" Editor: "No, indeed! You are mistaken, aren't you? You know I have my correspondents write on one side only; so I just write my editorials on the other side!"

Next to your subscription the greatest favor you can extend the ADVOCATE, in a business point, is to mention the paper to writing to advertisers.

It doesn't amount to anything, of course, but it's rather singular that a keen retort is usually made of blunt words.

CHANGES.—We have quite a number of orders to change the address of subscribers; some without signatures, and others who do not give the former address. Under these circumstances, change can not be made.

THE SUN.
FOR
And for the Democracy.

THE SUN believes that the campaign for the election of a Democratic Congress in 1890 and a Democratic President in 1892 should begin on or about the fourth of next March. THE SUN will be on hand at the beginning and until the end of the most interesting and important political conflict since the war, doing its honest utmost, as ever, to secure the triumph of the Democratic party and the permanent supremacy of the principles held by Jefferson, Jackson and Tilden.

The great fact of the year is the return to absolute power of the common enemy of all good Democrats—the political organization for whose overthrow THE SUN fought at the front for fifteen years, the memorable years of Grant and the Grand Hayes, and Garfield and Arthur.

It is the same old enemy that Democrats now confront, and he will be intrenched in the same strong position. It has been carried once by brave and hopeful fighting. Do you not believe with THE SUN that the thing can be done again? Wait and see!

The hope of the Democracy is in the loyal efforts of a united press, cherishing no memories of past differences in non-essentials, forgetting everything but the lessons of experience, and that victory is a duty.

Probably you know THE SUN already as a newspaper which gets all the news and prints it in incomparably interesting shape; which chronicles facts as they occur and tells the truth about men and events with absolute fearlessness, making the completest and most entertaining journal published anywhere on earth; and which sells its opinions only to its subscribers and purchasers at two cents a copy—on Sundays four cents. If you do not know THE SUN, send for it and learn what a wonderful thing it is to be in the sunshine.

THE MARVELOUS CANDLE CACTUS.

Words can not describe the charming beauty of this grand plant. It grows 2 to 4 feet high, branching like a tree, and producing hundreds of golden, yellow, sweet-scented flowers, large and double, like enormous roses, making a show which no plant can equal. The stems are covered with a net work of shining spines which reflect a luminous ray of light that can be seen for a long distance, hence its name—Candle. This plant has been known and eagerly sought in the wilds of Mexico for years, and seed is now offered for the first time. It germinates quickly and grows rapidly, soon making fine, large-blooming plants. Seed, per packet 20 cts. together with a new Everlasting Flower Free, and our Grand Catalogue. In ordering, ask for Catalogue if you do not already possess it. Order at once, before the supply is exhausted. You may never have another opportunity of getting this most rare and grand plant.

CANDLE CACTUS,

THE RAINBOW PLANT This is one of the most magnificent of all plants. It grows 2 or 3 feet high, in beautiful pyramidal spirals of thick foliage, which is of the most beautiful and intense colors, Scarlet, Rose, Pink, Amaranth, Yellow, Green, Orange, etc. Radiant like a Rainbow. It is one of the very easiest plants to grow, either in the garden or pots. Per pkt. 50 cents.

SWEET NIGHTINGALE The grandest of evening flowers, opening about sunset and lasting till noon next day. Flowers, pure white and enormous size, 6 inches long and 6 wide, its powerful and delicate perfume filling the air for a long distance. It grows and blooms freely all summer in any garden. Per pkt., 20c.

PANSY, THUNDER CLOUD A new sort with enormous coal-black flowers, which are bordered with a red and white rim; magnificent. Per package, 25 cents.

SPECIAL OFFER! For 60 cents we will mail one packet seed each of above five grand new flowers, together with our catalogue and another elegant novelty free.

Our Young People.

MAY AND HER PUSSY.

MAY.

Now, Pussy Gray,
Come here, I pray;
Listen to what I have to say.
Sit on the cushion at my side
And have your ribbon neatly tied.
You must not scratch, nor growl, nor bite,
And you must never steal nor fight;
But clear the house of rats and mice,
And keep your fur and whiskers nice.
The things that other pussies do
Would not be right at all for you;
You are my cat,
Remember that.

PUSSY.

O Mistress May,
Your Pussy Gray
Has quite as much as you to say;
You should not scold, nor pinch, nor strike,
Nor feed me only when you like;
Nor shut me out to freeze at night,
When you are tucked up warm and tight;
But treat me always in the way
You'd like if you were Pussy Gray.
The things that other people do
Are done the nearer right for you;
I am your cat,
Remember that.

—Wide Awake.

Mr. Editor: I am a little boy nearly eight years old. I have never been to school, but my mamma teaches me at home. I am reading in the second reader; commenced to study arithmetic this year, and geography, writing and spelling; but, as I don't write very well with ink, I will get mamma to copy my letter for me. I got a nice Bible the other day from the Bible House, with a dollar Bro. Manly gave me for a keepsake. I am reading in it. It has my name in gilt letters on the back, and is quite nice. Our pastor is Bro. H. S. Johns, and we all love him very much. We have no Sunday-school; there are so very few in our neighborhood who take any interest in it. I have a dog named Rock, and he has fits sometimes; but he is a good yard dog. I have a little garden, too, in one corner of grandpa's, in which I raise a few hills of different kinds of vegetables. I enjoy the children's corner in your good paper, but must say good-bye for fear I make my letter too long.

Your little friend,
THEO. MANLY ENOCHS.
Garland, Louisiana.

Mr. Editor: I thought I would write a few lines to the dear paper, as I have never written to it. I went to school last year. I am not going now. My older sister, Malia, is going to school at Meadville. She is well pleased with her teacher, Mr. Everett. I am a little girl ten years old. I enjoy reading the little cousins' letters. My mamma takes your paper. Papa lives four miles from Roxie station. Bro. Young is our pastor this year. We like him very much. I will close, wishing the Advocate and the editor great success.

Your little friend,
FLORENCE A. DAVIS.

Mr. Editor: We feel sure that some of your readers would like to hear from our "missionary quilt." We collected $6 on it; then mother bought it, paid $5 for it, and made our only brother a birthday present of it, with the understanding that he would be a worker for missions. We sent the money ($11) to Conference by Bro. Mellen, of Wesson. We trust Mr. Lambuth has it by this time. We are wondering now what plan to fall upon to raise money for missions this year. Wishing the editor and Advocate success, we are,

LILLIAN BEESLEY.
MABELLE BEESLEY.
Wesson, Mississippi.

Mr. Editor: As my papa has written to the Advocate, I thought I would write, too. I have two sisters and three brothers. The babies are twins, five months old. Ora and Winborn are their names. I am nine years old. I go to school to mamma and study fourth reader, arithmetic, geography and spelling, and take music lessons. Mamma says she heard you preach at a camp meeting, many years ago, near Delhi, La. As I have never written to a newspaper before, I hope this one will not fall in the waste-basket.

Yours respectfully,
MAMIE A. BALDRIDGE.

Mr. Editor: We were very sorry to hear of Bishop McTyeire's death. He was a friend of my Grandpa Currie's, and he was editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate when my grandfather gave an engine, costing $450, to that paper, and he wrote to my grandpa that he could have the paper free of charge for all time to come; and it is so nice now, that we are not very well able to pay for papers. Edgar M. Jones, you will find "washpot" in Psalms lx, 8. I do not have time to hunt out many of the cousins' questions, as I go to a day-school about a mile from home. On Saturdays I have lots of little jobs to do for mamma, and, then, you know a boy wants some time to hunt squirrels, birds, etc. I went to preaching last Sunday and heard Bro. Kimball preach a good sermon. Your friend,

GARDNER D. CURRIE.

A Little Logical Lass.—A girl six years old was on a visit to her grandfather, who was a New England divine celebrated for his logical powers.

"Only think, grandpa, what Uncle Robert says."

"What does he say, my dear?"

"Why, he says the moon is made of green cheese. It isn't at all, is it?"

"Well, child, suppose you find out for yourself?"

"How can I, grandpa?"

"Get your Bible and see what it says."

"Where shall I begin?"

"Begin at the beginning." The child sat down to read the Bible. Before she got more than half through the second chapter of Genesis, and had read about the creation of the stars and the animals, she came back to her grandfather, her eyes all bright with the excitement of discovery: "I've found it, grandpa! It isn't true, for God made the moon before he made any cows."—The Presbyterian.

Boy Character.—It is the greatest delusion in the world for a boy to get the idea that his life is of no consequence, and that the character of it will not be noticed. A manly, truthful boy will shine like a star in any community. A boy may possess as much of noble character as a man. He may so speak and so live the truth that there will be no discount on his word. And there are such noble Christian boys; and wider and deeper than they are apt to think is their influence. They are the king boys among their fellows, having an immeuse influence for good, loved and respected because of the simple fact of living the truth.

Dear boys, do be truthful. Keep your word as absolutely sacred. Keep your appointments at the house of God. Be known for your fidelity to the interests of the church and Sabbath-school. Be true in every friendship. Help others to be and to do good.—Child's Paper.

True Heroism—What an influence is often exerted over a group of young people by one strong decided character! In "Tom Brown at Rugby" we are told the touching story of the one little boy who dared to kneel at his bedside and say his evening prayers amid all sorts of interruptions and even insults from the larger boys. And it is related that as a result it soon came about that, whereas it had been the exception for any boy to pray at Rugby, it was the exception if any boy did not. These winter months at school or in social gatherings afford many opportunities for the exercise of moral heroism. Let us be true to our convictions of right, and we shall certainly have what is better than honor from men—the approval of God; and, if others do wrong, we shall not feel that we have influenced them to do wrong.—Methodist Young People.

Peruna.

After trying Peruna for a severe Cold and Cough, contracted through exposure, T. J. Ewing, of Catlettsburg, Ky., writes: "I have taken your Peruna with best results. My cough has entirely left, soreness is gone, and am increasing in flesh." Peruna is sold by all druggists. Only $1 a bottle.

Let our prayers, like the ancient sacrifices, ascend morning and evening. Let our days begin and end with God.—Channing.

Household.

SIDNEY SMITH'S WINTER SALAD.

Two large potatoes passed through kitchen sieve,
Unwonted softness to the salad give;
Of mordant mustard add a single spoon—
Distrust the condiment which bites too soon;
But deem it not, though made of herbs, a fault
To add a double quantity of salt;
Three times the spoon with oil of Lucca crown,
And once with vinegar procured from town.
True flavor needs it, and your puet begs.
The pounded yellow of two well-boiled eggs.
Let onion atoms lurk within the bowl,
And half-suspected animate the whole;
And lastly on the favored compound toss
A magic tea-spoon of anchovy sauce.
Then, though green turtle fail, though venison's tough,
Though ham and turkey are not boiled enough,
Serenely full the epicure shall say,
"Fate can not harm me—I have dined to-day."

A Man for the Kitchen.

A mother carefully taught her sons many details of work usually considered the sole province of girls, and concerning which boys generally grow up in utter ignorance. They washed and wiped dishes, learned to prepare plain meals, had practice in sweeping and dusting and putting to rights, and were taught to patch and darn neatly and to sew on buttons. Some of them learned something of the "higher branches."

When they went out into the world they had frequent occasion to bless the mother for these useful accomplishments, and when they became heads of households they had an intelligent practical knowledge of the details of the work of which their wives had charge and were able to make the burden easy in many ways where another man would have made it heavier.

No man worthy of the name permits his wife or any woman in his house to perform the heavy drudgery of carrying coal and wood, caring for furnaces and stoves, moving stoves or heavy furniture, beating carpets, and so on. But this need not be the limit of a man's usefulness about the house. There is no reasonable reason why a man should not be able to broil a steak, boil or bake potatoes, cook an egg, make coffee or tea and prepare other articles of food should an emergency arise to make it desirable (and such emergencies do often arise), and do it too without turning the kitchen and dining room topsy-turvey in the operation. Some men can and do accomplish such work, and even make biscuits, griddle-cakes and the like. A woman whose husband is in the habit of "taking hold" when needed in housework has been heard to say that she would rather have him to depend on in case of indisposition or other emergency than any girl that could be hired. He does not interfere when there is no cause for it, but he saves labor for his wife and expense for himself, and he is not at all ashamed of doing it nor afraid to undertake it. No man need be; rather any man should be ashamed of unwillingness and should regret inability to perform any ordinary household task on occasion.—Good Housekeeping.

"Home Duties First."—A girl of fourteen, who had lately been converted, asked God to show her what she should do for him, and what was her special work. After praying for some time, the thought came to her mind that she could take her baby brother, only a few months old, and nurse him for the Lord. So she took the charge of the child, and relieved her mother in the work and care of the little one. This was godly and Christ-like. Home duties and fireside responsibilities have the first claim upon every child of God. We need not go abroad for work, when God places work within our reach. "The daily round, the common task," provides ample opportunities for serving God, doing whatsoever our hands find to do.—H. Bonar.

The rest of Christ is not that of torpor, but that of harmony; it is not refusing the struggle, but conquering in it; not resting from duty, but finding rest in it.—F. W. Robertson.

Happy Homes.

Here's a health to the wives and the mothers
Who sit in our households to-day;
Who are glad when they brighten for others
The hours that go drifting away.
May their eyes keep the light of the gladness
That beams bold the fullness of bliss
That banishes shadows and sadness,
And what need we ask more than this?

But—how can this happiness be kept? What shall protect those we love,—those who make a Heaven of the Home,—from the ravages of disease that is often worse than death,—that is, in fact, a lingering death? The question is easily answered: Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription—the standard remedy for all of those peculiar diseases to which women are subject,—is what must be relied on to preserve the health of wives and mothers. It prevents those diseases, and it cures them. It is a blessing to women and therefore a national blessing, because it gives health to those about whom the happiness of home centers, and the strength of a nation is in its happy homes.

Dr. Pierce's Pellets, or Anti-bilious Granules; in vials, 25 cents; one a dose. Druggists.

The Safest

And most powerful alterative is Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Young and old are alike benefited by its use. For the eruptive diseases peculiar to children nothing else is so effective as this medicine, while its agreeable flavor makes it easy to administer.

"My little boy had large scrofulous ulcers on his neck and throat from which he suffered terribly. Two physicians attended him, but he grew continually worse under their care, and everybody expected he would die. I had heard of the remarkable cures effected by Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and decided to have my boy try it. Shortly after he began to take this medicine, the ulcers commenced healing, and, after using several bottles, he was entirely cured. He is now as healthy and strong as any boy of his age."—William F. Dougherty, Hampton, Va.

"In May last, my youngest child, fourteen months old, began to have sores gather on its head and body. We applied various simple remedies without avail. The sores increased in number and discharged copiously. A physician was called, but the sores continued to multiply until in a few months they nearly covered the child's head and body. At last we began the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. In a few days a marked change for the better was manifest. The sores assumed a more healthy condition, the discharges were gradually diminished, and finally ceased altogether. The child is livelier, its skin is fresher, and its appetite better than we have observed for months."—Frank M. Griffin, Long Point, Texas.

"The formula of Ayer's Sarsaparilla presents, for chronic diseases of almost every kind, the best remedy known to the medical world."—H. M. Wilson, M. D., Wiggs, Arkansas.

HODGENS—On December 5, 1888, in Mobile, Ala., there passed from earth to heaven the spirit of my precious mother, Mrs. E. J. HODGENS.

Although for two years we had watched with painful anxiety her failing health, she was called away sooner than we expected, and we were left with broken hopes and plans. In early girlhood she consecrated her life to the service of the Master, and through a long life, in her own quiet, unassuming way, served him faithfully. She was a woman of prayer and faith, and thus she was given grace to bear, patiently, many afflictions, and never to lose an active interest in and enjoyment of the duties and privileges of life.

The faithfulness that marked her as a Christian entered into all the relations of life, performing every known duty, and fulfilling every promise. All who knew her felt that they could safely confide in her. Born of gentle blood, the high-toned sentiments of honor and fealty she maintained so carefully were her birthright. She was candid and sincere, just and charitable; unjust criticisms and slighting remarks of the absent were always displeasing to her.

Her tender compassion and sympathy made her many friends among the poor and distressed. She was endowed with a clear, practical mind, keen perception and good judgment, hence she was a wise and safe counselor. Timid, sensitive and retiring in her nature, she was most loved and appreciated by those who knew her best. How inexpressibly sad the thought that we will never have her gentle, thoughtful, helpful presence with us again. How can we do without her? To her few remaining children the memory of her character and life is an inspiration, and she "being dead, yet speaketh."

"Our hearts shrine many a picture
Of her life deeds fair and bright;
We love to pause and recall them,
Though she is beyond our sight.

"Missing, not lost, we'll remember,
As we bow to the chastening rod,
In our Father's house we'll find her,
Safe in the presence of God."

L. F. W.

IRELAND—The subject of this sketch, STEPHEN IRELAND, was born in Calvert county, Md., about fifty miles from Baltimore, July 1, 1811, and died at his residence, in Adams county, Miss., ten miles from Natchez, just after day-dawn, on January, 12, 1889, in the seventy-eighth year of his age. When but a young man, he came South and settled in Mississippi, and in a short while was married to Miss Blue, of Louisiana. She lived only a few months, leaving him alone for several years, when he returned to Mississippi, and was then married to Miss Martha Owens, of Calvert county, January 31, 1815. He came back to Mississippi, and after living a short while in Jefferson county, he settled in Adams county, where he lived till he ceased at once to "work and live."

His union with his last wife was a long and happy one, being blessed with most affectionate and obedient children, four of whom survive him. He united with the church late in life, under the ministry of Rev. J. W. McLaurin, just ten years ago; but those ten years were spent in service for the Master, in doing what he could. He was steward for several years, and a true one to his church did he prove to be. In him his pastor had a congenial, trustworthy and constant friend. These facts are obtained from those who knew him and his worth. One said, after he had passed over the river: "Mr. Ireland will be greatly missed in the church and community."

His last sickness closed with the dawning of the seventh day, and his spirit was wafted by a celestial host who were commissioned for that one end. We buried him in the Church Hill Cemetery, on the evening of January 13—Sunday—and I must say, from the number of people who were assembled on the roadside, both black and white, that surely a good and influential man has gone; but from the concourse of people, and from the comments passed, his entrance into the pearly gates was grand and glorious. I knew him only two weeks, though what I have written can be substantiated.

His loved ones weep, but their weeping will all be turned into a jubilee and hallelujah "after awhile." Their faith in the resurrection and heavenly recognition is abiding!

ROBERT SELBY.

GARRETT—Little URSULA GARRETT, daughter of Zay and Emma Garrett was born near Franklinton, La., February 11, 1886, and died at their residence, in Washington parish, La., November 11, 1888, aged two years and nine months. She was a sweet little angel in the household of Bro. Garrett, and evidently saw the angels that came to accompany her to the spirit-world, judging from her last act and expression. Calling her mamma to her, she kissed her on both cheeks, and said, "Oh, mamma, I see them; ain't they pretty?" She called all the children around her as if to bid them good-bye till we meet.

We sympathize with this family in their loss, but trust this precious little tie shall bind them more to the service of their Master, so that after awhile they may make a united and unbroken family in heaven.

A. C. FLOWERS.

ONEAL—The committee on memoirs in the Haughton Sunday-school, South Bossier circuit, respectfully submit the following report and resolutions:

Mrs. LAURA W. ONEAL fell on sleep in Jesus, February 23, 1889. In her life the church had great hope as an earnest, influential, useful and willing worker, ever ready to engage heartily in whatever work for the Master was assigned to her; but in the Sunday-school, among the young, she shone the brightest. Many children, together with her co-workers in this and other departments of church work, will long remember her walk in the Lord, her bright and pleasant Christian face with her hope-inspiring words and looks. She was a consecrated woman, whose life was devoted to Christ. We feel, therefore, that the tribute which we offer to her worth is small; yet as the officers, teachers and children of the Sunday-school and members of the church at Haughton, which she so dearly loved, we desire to give vent to our feelings in this expression to her memory, and at the same time to offer words of condolence and expressions of sympathy to the bereaved husband and orphan children.

While we bow with reverence and humble submission to the wise and merciful hand of our Heavenly Father in taking the sweet spirit of our deceased sister to himself, we can but sorrow and mourn our great loss; but we bless and praise God that our mourning is not as those who have no hope, for we feel the assurance that what is our loss is her gain, and we willingly leave her spirit with him who saith: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

Resolved, That in token of the appreciation and love which we bear for our deceased sister, Mrs. Laura Oneal, we the officers and teachers and children of Haughton Sunday-school will each wear, conspicuously upon our person, for thirty days a badge.

Resolved, That the secretary be requested to furnish the bereaved husband and family of the deceased a copy of this memorial.

Resolved, That the secretary be requested to furnish a copy of this memorial to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde.

Since that delightful author, Mr. Stevenson, has so suggestively written of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde we find ourselves holding our natures in closer regard, and we discover other lurking Hydes to mar the sweetest disposition and turn the most earnest and direct of us away.

Disease takes up its residence in us and develops into the most malignant and destructive of lodgers, cruel, obstinate and defiant. We will not recall the various and expensive expedients to which you have vainly resorted in the desperate endeavor to expell this obnoxious tenant, but briefly call attention to a most effective agent to drive away the vandal Hyde.

We refer to Compound Oxygen already known to be curative and restorative to that delightful degree so long sought by the invalid, as the following would indicate:

The Use of Oil to Still the Waves.

Under the above title Lieutenant W. H. Beehler contributes to the March Century an account of the experiments made with oil in rough water. We quote the following account of two rescues: "The captain of the ship Martha Cobb, loaded with petroleum, fell in with a sinking vessel during a heavy gale in the North Atlantic, in December, 1886. The signal made stated the vessel was sinking and that all her boats had been stove. The Martha Cobb had lost her large boats, her bulwarks washed out, and decks swept in the same storm; the only boat left was a small sixteen-foot dingey, which could not possibly live in the sea that was then running. The captain says he was puzzled and lay by for some hours hoping that the gale would moderate; but as there was no appearance of better weather and night coming on, he decided to make an attempt to rescue the crew of the sinking vessel. The Martha Cobb had a cargo of petroleum, some of which leaked, and the captain had noticed that the sea in the wake of the ship was much smoother when the pumps were worked.

"He signaled to the other vessel to haul by the wind while he luffed to get to windward, and at the same time started the pumps; but the ship drifted faster than the oil, and, while the oil made the sea comparatively smooth to windward, it did not cover the sea leeward. He then ran down across the other vessel's stern, hauled up close under her lee, and started the pumps again; at the same time also he emptied a five-gallon can of fish oil down the scuppers. The effect was magical. In twenty minutes the sea between and around the vessels was broken down. The long heavy swell remained, but the combers and breaking seas were all gone. The little dingey with three men had no difficulty in pulling to windward, and the crew were saved. The boat was deeply loaded and did not ship any water, although the sea was breaking fiercely outside of the 'charmed' space in which the vessels lay on oiled seas.

"In June, 1885, the British ship Slivemore took fire and had to be abandoned when eight hundred miles north-east of the Seychelle Islands, Indian Ocean. The people took to the boats and made for Seychelle Islands. The third day after leaving the vessel a cyclone came up, and no one believed that the boats would live through it. Before they left the ship the boats had been supplied with oil for just such an emergency. Each boat had got out a drag made of spars and oars lashed together, for what is known as a sea-anchor. Oakum saturated with paraffine was stuffed in long stockings hung over the bows of the boats. Before the oil was used the boats had been several times nearly filled with water and the occupants had to bail for their lives; but when oil was applied no further trouble was experienced. An oil-slick formed around the boats, which rode in perfect safety on tremendous swells which took the place of the previously breaking seas. Little, if any, water came over the sides of the boats, and the occupants could lie down and sleep. The boats eventually reached the islands, but every soul would have perished except for the forethought of Captain Conby, the captain of the Slivemore."

It has been the usual impression that the horns of the elk and of deer, while useful for purposes of defense, were in the creature's way while threading dense woods or underbrush. Sir James Hector maintains that the chief use of the antlers is not so much for fighting as for facilitating the progress of the stag through dense woods. He had had considerable experience with the elk, and found that by throwing up the head, thereby placing the horns along the back, the animals were enabled to go forward with great rapidity and follow the hinds. Mr. Fortescue added that in New Zealand he had observed that the antlers assisted the stags in penetrating dense forests, and Mr. Higginson bore out this statement from his experience in India.

"Is that really true?" Druggist:—"Yes, madam. Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup is only 25 c."

A bruise may result in an abcess if not promptly attended to. Apply Salvation Oil.

CHEAPEST FURNITURE HOUSE IN NEW ORLEANS
J. G. GRANT
50 and 52 Baronne Street,
OFFERS THE FOLLOWING SUGGESTIONS:

THERE are two ways to make money. One is to earn it; the other is to save it. There are two ways of saving money. When you save a dollar by putting it in the bank you do well, but when you save a dollar by shrewd purchasing you do better. The first is saving; the second is in reality earning. So there are two ways of earning money--by labor and by wise purchasing.

LET ME SAY A WORD ABOUT PURCHASING:

The FIRST THING to learn in order to become a successful purchaser is that price means nothing until you have seen the goods. The fact that Bedroom Suits, for instance, cost $100 in one store and $65 in another tells you nothing. The $100 suit may be worth $125, while the $65 suit may not be worth carrying away. It is only when you have compared the goods as well as the prices that you are in a position to judge of what is cheap and what is not. Goods may be too cheap sometimes. Prices don't always tell the whole story. Either know the goods or know the dealer. If he has a reputation for liberality and straightforward dealing, people soon find it out. When you learn that he is carrying a larger and better stock, and that his trade is increasing rapidly, both in the city and the adjoining states, why it means something. It means that his business methods have been approved, that people have discovered his liberal ways and taken advantage of them, and it points you the direction for your next purchase.

The SECOND PRECEPT in successful purchasing is that the best is always cheapest in the end. Many people who have never visited my warerooms have the idea that only cheap goods are sold because I do not put on much outside style and occupy a showy and very high priced store, but one visit will prove that this is a great mistake. Remember that there is a big difference between CHEAP GOODS and GOODS CHEAP. Go elsewhere for cheap goods, but come here for goods cheap. The man who sells cheap goods sells his customers at the same time. I am not in that line of business. The public are beginning to understand the difference, and my trade proves it very clearly. A word to the wise is sufficient. Call and see how cheap fashionable furniture of the best quality can be sold.

J. G. GRANT.

Consumption Permanently Can Be Cured.
Some cases of this dread disease cannot, of course, be cured at all. But when taken early enough in its career PE-RU-NA will not fail to cure it, and it often cures it when all other medicines have failed and when the doctors have given the patient up to die. A number of remarkable cures are recorded in Dr. Hartman's "Fits of Life," CONSUMPTION which is sent free to any address by the Pe-ru-na Medicine Co., Columbus, O. That of Mrs. T. S. Eberlein, who was literally snatched from the grave by PE-RU-NA, will be read with special interest. PE-RU-NA is sold by all druggists. Only $1 a bottle; 6 for $5. Manufactured by THE PERUNA MED. CO., Columbus, O.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

An explosion occurred in the mixing room of the United States Dynamite Company, eight miles from Lakewood, N. J., on March 21. Two men, the only occupants of the room, were killed.

The great scheme of Henry Villard, whereby the Edison electric companies were to be consolidated into one gigantic concern, is reported to have collapsed.

Barnum's hotel, Baltimore, founded in 1825, and made famous by Dickens, who said it was the best hostlery in America, is to be closed and sold April 4.

The Grampus, the fish commission schooner, is at work in the Gulf of Mexico, and in connection with the Fish Hawk, is making a thorough investigation of the gulf fisheries, both as to their present condition and their possibilities from an economic standpoint.

Associate Justice Stanley Matthews, of the Supreme Court of the United States, died on March 22.

It is said Hon. Chauncey M. Depew, of New York, has been selected, by President Harrison, for the British Mission.

The treasury surplus has been steadily increasing. On March 22, it amounted to $50,200,000, or $5,000,000 more than it was ten days previous. This increase is due to the great excess of receipts over disbursements since the first of the month.

Miss Frances E. Willard and Miss Anna Gordon left Chicago, on the twenty-second, for a six weeks' trip in the South, during which time they will attend the annual W. C. T. U. conventions and visit the leading cities in Georgia, South Carolina, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas and Indian Territory, returning via St. Louis early in May.

Rev. John Francis Girault, D. D., rector of St. Anna's Church (Protestant Episcopal), in this city, died on March 22.

A prominent merchant in Vicksburg, Miss.—G. S. Irving—has donated a site for a Presbyterian Church in that place.

Natural gas has been discovered in the vicinity of Aiken, Miss. A natural gas and oil company is about to be formed with a capital stock of $1,000,000.

The employees in the machine shops of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company were notified on March 23 that hereafter nine hours would be considered a day's work, with a half holiday Saturdays. This affects about 4,000 men.

A large party of tramps boarded a freight train on the Pittsburg and Lake Erie railroad near Alliquippa, Pa., on the twenty-third, and for five hours held the train, refusing to allow the crew to move the train unless permitted to ride on it.

The Democrats of Brooklyn have determined to erect in that city a building similar to Tammany Hall, of New York. They will expend $50,000 for a site and $100,000 for the building.

FOREIGN.

Russian officials have tested and reported favorably upon a Russian invention for applying the revolver principle to the Barrets-of-Borden rifle. By this arrangement a machine gun is obtained which will fire 480 shots a minute.

Fourteen of the largest paper makers in England have formed a syndicate for the purpose of raising prices. The capital of the syndicate is £2,000,000.

The American pilgrims will leave Rome for Naples, en route to Alexandria. They will reach Palestine in holy week.

The Mexican government has taken steps to prevent the introduction into Mexico of American lard, owing to the official announcement that it is deleterious to health.

It is understood that the French agent at the Vatican, in obedience to instructions from his government, has made a complaint to the Pope of the support which is given General Boulanger by the French clergy.

Count Herbert Bismarck is stopping at the residence of Lord Roseberry, in London. He declares that his visit to England is of a private nature.

A French torpedo boat foundered off Cherbourg in a hurricane, on March 23. Her captain and fourteen of the crew were drowned.

England has demanded of Morocco £50,000 indemnity for the massacre and pillage of the Mackenzie factory at Cape Juuby in 1888.

Cholera has broken out at Zambsangai, in the Philippine Islands. There have been over 500 deaths so far.

Ex-President Cleveland and party arrived safe in Havana on the twenty-third. Crowds of people gave the travelers an enthusiastic reception.

Pope Leo is said to be suffering with fainting fits, which have become more frequent of late.

Serious inundations are feared in east Prussia. The Vistula has overflowed its banks, and the bridge at Lublin has been destroyed. All the rivers in Silesia and Hanova are rising rapidly.

Dispatches from St. Petersburg say that a large number of foreign Jews have recently been expelled from Kieff.

The labor movement is spreading throughout Germany. Many strikes are reported in the provinces.

TIBBEE, MISS., Oct. 16, 1886.
Messrs. A. T. Shallenberger & Co., Rochester, Pa.
Gents:—The bottle of Shallenberger's Pills sent me in February last I gave to W. G. Anderson, of this place; a long standing case of chills and fever. He had tried everything known without any permanent good. In less than ten days after taking your Antidote he was sound and well, and has gone through the entire season without any return. It seems to have effectually driven the Malarious poison from his system.
Yours truly, V. A. ANDERSON.

The postmaster general is receiving about 2,000 applications a day for postmasterships.

The clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policy-holders. The Episcopal Diocese of New York has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and The Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.
A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

East Tennessee, Virginia & Georgia R. R.
Well known as the Great Kennesaw Route, is now making twelve hours quicker time to Washington via New York and eastern points, with Pullman Buffet Sleepers from New Orleans to Washington without change. The mountain resorts of East Tennessee are reached in twenty-four hours, and Virginia resorts in thirty hours. For tickets, sleeping accommodation, circulars, schedule, etc., call at Kennesaw ticket office, 22 Carondelet street.

All Ladies
Will appreciate the liberal offer made in another part of this paper by Dr. Scott, New York City. In order that he may quickly introduce into every neighborhood his new and beautiful Electric "High Hip" Corset. These Corsets are a new invention combining quality of material and finish with French style. A dressmaker can make a lady's dress fit perfectly who wears this Corset. The Doctor offers a very handsome little Curler to anyone who name this paper and buy his excellent Sateen Corset. For full details see advertisement headed "Dr. Scott's Hair Curler Given Away."

Our readers should notice the Advertisement of J. L. Childs, Seedsman and Florist, Floral Park, N. Y., in this issue.
Mr. C. is one of the largest Seedsmen in the country (or the world), and those who entrust their order to him are sure to be more than satisfied. His catalogue for this year is one of the most beautiful ever issued. The new Candi-Cactus which he advertises is a most curious and beautiful novelty.

From Rev. Dr. McAnally, editor of the St. Louis Christian Advocate.
"I have tried J. A. Maguire's Cuadurango on myself and others, and it is my opinion that it produces a healthy and safe action on the Liver, Kidneys and secretions generally, there is not a better medicine known, and for persons of bilious or Coalive habits its action is most effective and salutary." A Blooming Flower Garden!
Who of our lady readers would not like to have one this coming summer? Surely not one, especially as it can be had without any expense whatever. All lovers of flowers will fail to take advantage of the liberal offer made by S. H. Moore & Co., New York City. In the issue of our paper, will miss a really good thing. This publishing firm is old-established and thoroughly reliable; and the offer they make to give away 200 varieties of Choice Flower Seeds with a three-months' subscription to their charming ladies' paper—The Ladies' World—for the insignificant sum of twelve cents, is indeed the good a bargain to be slighted by our readers. See advertisement in another column.

The remarkably rapid sale of the "Life and Times of Bishop Pierce" is phenomenal in the history of biographical literature. 850 copies were sold in January. It is a charmingly attractive work, and remarkably cheap.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure.
This powder never varies. A marvel of purity, strength and wholesomeness. More economical than the ordinary kinds, and can not be sold in competition with the multitude of low test, short weight, alum or phosphate powders. Sold only in cans.

TREASURE.

The flowers I planted in the flush of spring,
Have budded, bloomed, and withered long ago;
The grain my lavish fingers used to throw,
Long since was reaped for others' garnering;
Yet I am rich amid my nature dearth;
My gold is where the rainbow touches earth.

My wealth is molten of full many an ore,
Dug from the sacred caverns of the past;
Stored where the present's quiet light is cast;
Piled in the promise-land that lies before.
All blent together, all of priceless worth,
All hid just where the rainbow touches earth.

And Memory, Faith and Hope its guardians are,
As holding Love's strong hand I make my way,
Knowing I near a little every day,
The one sure goal where, passing o'er the bar,
I find, in all the glow of second birth,
My treasure, where the rainbow touches earth.

All The Year Round.

The Best Manner of Taking Up the General Collections.

A PAPER READ BY REV. JOHN T. SAWYER AT THE NEW ORLEANS DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

How shall we most successfully take up in the Sunday congregation the general collections ordered by Conference? For instance, How shall we raise our foreign missionary collection? The district stewards have assessed B. station $250 for foreign missions. The pastor, intent upon doing his duty, fixes upon a certain Sunday early in the year for the purpose of raising his full assessment. He prepares with great care an appropriate sermon for that day. Based upon the positive commands and demands of God in his Word, and the consequent obligations of Christians to do their part, vertebrated with sound and weighty arguments, and bristling with facts and figures, the sermon reaches a natural and logical conclusion, to be impressed by a short, pointed and burning exhortation to give cheerfully and liberally for the saving of the world. Believing prayer is always a necessity to the preparation of a sermon that is to do execution. Such a sermon of sound doctrine, facts, figures, convincing logic and warm exhortation, thoroughly impregnated in the study with the prayers and even tears of the pastor of B. station, will be sure, at the appointed time, to come to its delivery with manly energy and the divine unction from above. The sermon preached, the pastor stands face to face with a duty from which many ministers shrink. Having faithfully preached the Word, the pastor must be as faithful in raising the collection. He should feel, first of all, that in asking for money for the Lord, he is doing something thoroughly honorable, and of which he has no need to be ashamed. He should go at it with as much heart and purpose to succeed, as in the preaching of a sermon or talking to mourners. He should fully realize that he is in the line of duty as a collector of money for God. Apologies, such as are sometimes made by brethren, are out of place at such a time. He should not, either by word or manner, make the impression upon the people that he is going to do a disagreeable duty and take up what money they may please to give, just because he must, his Conference having so ordered, and he, therefore, being without option in the matter. He must not join his officials nor his church at large in the cry of excessive assessments; but, if the district stewards, whose right it is, have raised the amount higher than the previous year, he should feel that his church has been greatly honored by the increase, and he should himself catch inspiration from the fact that he is expected to bring up to Conference a larger amount than before. We presume that it has been the experience of every man who has been a presiding elder or a pastor any length of time, that a church is rarely found that does not think, if a raise is made in the assessments, that the burden is too grievous to be borne. The officials and the people need no helping on the part of their pastors in the matter of nursing their feelings of poverty when asked to give liberally. We honestly confess it to-day, that we have never had a single twinge of conscience in the effort to take the full assessments, and largely over, if possible, from the people. The audience in most any church that sits before a preacher about to take a collection have, in themselves, such a wonderful supply of conservatism that they are not likely to be reckless and improvident in their responses to his appeals. None of us ever saw an individual church, nor an individual church member, either, who were bankrupted by giving of their substance to God. What if a church that pays for its expenses of preacher and sexton and incidentals $3,000 per annum, should be assessed $3,000 for foreign missions? The pastor would soliloquize: "Surely, now, I must apologize for the blunder of those church assessors;" and he would likely feel, if one-fourth of the amount only were raised, that his people would have met the measure of duty. Ah! what low estimates have we of the actual value of human souls! The $3,000 for foreign missions, raised by a church of $3,000 of running expenses, would go far to bring that church, in its love for souls, into the neighborhood of that infinite love which poured out its richest treasure to save men. And yet the fact is, doubtless, that those who can afford a church of $3,000 or $5,000 expenses, can, if their bank accounts and real assets were ascertained, afford to give for missions yearly an amount greatly in excess of $3,000. We ought to pay at least as much for the saving of the millions in heathen darkness as we do for the saving of ourselves and our children at home. A preacher can not damage his congregation by asking of them the full assessment, and then doing his best to get it. Prayed over, wept over, preached about, a plain statement should be made, and then the preacher should lift the collection.

His style of doing it should be his own, and it matters little whether he calls for responses, or sends out the cards, or goes down among the pews and gets from each his amount. He may be better suited to one of these methods than to the other two, and, at any rate, he should use that method by which he can succeed, always providing that it be honest and manly. The public collections are apt to secure the money, while, at the same time, they act as an educative force. These collections make the people think, and, if some dollars are gotten from them, they are helped by that much to think intelligently ever afterwards on that cause to which they gave. It would be a sad day for us if all the money we need for God's cause should have to be gotten by a still-hunt. In certain enterprises, of course, it is important to go to a man and get him to give right in the midst of his cotton, or sugar, or at his desk at work, or after his good dinner at home. The general collections, however, should be given the chance of a tug at the hearts and purses of the people in the great congregation.

If we take them by card, or by responses, or other way on Sunday, at the eleven A. M. service, we should be careful to hold back the hat until there is nothing left to be gathered but the fragments. Tell your people, without the least tremor in your voice, that you have the amount to raise, and you confidently expect them to help you; and, then, doing your own part, and leading off, if necessary, lift the collection in any honest way that suits your genius. Of course, some will object to your way, whatever method you adopt. The brother who preceded you, or some other, did it differently. However, don't be dismayed nor switched off, and take a panic; for have there not been objectors from the beginning? Set your face as a flint to get the assessment, but do not let that face of yours betray any over-anxiety, nor let not the least shadow of doubt flit over your features. Determine to have it, and your audience, though possibly indisposed at first, will presently be found helping you along—slowly, perhaps; and yet you are moving to the point from which you can see the successful end. You do not need to tell any hog stories, nor make a buffoon out of yourself, to get God's money from God's people. You can be pleasant withal and genial, and show your utmost confidence in the ability and willingness of your audience to put the collection through. There sometimes comes a lull—a sort of shallow place—where the keel scrapes the bottom. Don't lose your temper, but smile and wait, and talk a little, too, and keep on asking, and your good humor and splendid patience will win at last. If you get mad or tired, the people will press their lips together and doggedly give you over to your fate. The darkest hour is just before the dawn, and so the lull in the responses and the scraping keel of your vessel are simply preludes to success—if you are patient and keep your temper. We verily believe that the full assessments on all our charges can be gotten if we will inform ourselves about the causes for which we plead, tell it all out plainly to our people, ask them to give, using manly words, and in a manly, straightforward spirit. The inking of a collection with a sepulchral voice and a hang-dog look never did succeed. Pray to God about it, and he will help you. Then, like a true man, ask for all the assessment, and work your own plan in a thoroughly manly way. Thank God that the public collection in the Sunday congregation still remains one of the glories of Methodism! He gave himself for us—what are we doing and giving for him?

New Orleans City Mission.

ATTAPER READ BY DR. J. D. A. ANDENS BEFORE THE NEW ORLEANS DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The mission field in our city is as vast as it is important. Among the 260,000 human beings domiciled here, only very few enjoy experimental religion. Of the 85,000 Americans and Irishmen, fully one-half are Roman Catholics. With scarcely any exception, our 70,000 Frenchmen have vowed fealty to the Roman Pontiff. The 30,000 Germans are about equally Roman Catholics and Protestants; among the latter the High Church Lutherans being largely in the ascendant. Of the 50,000 negroes, fully one-half are irreligious. The other half is composed of Baptists, Methodists, Congregationalists, with a small percentage of Romanists. Of the Hebrews, about six thousand have their home among us. Of these, only a few are orthodox Jews, though all, including rationalists, are religiously strictly exclusive. The Italian colony has, of late, received large additions. About 8,000 of the degenerate descendants of Cicero follow their favorite avocation in our city. The majority of these are anti-Romish; have discarded all religion. Our white population numbers about 190,000. How many of these are scripturally religious, having been truly converted, enjoying the witness of the Holy Spirit? Five thousand? Less? A thousand? I dare not guess farther. But, according to Methodist doctrine, all classes of humanity who are devoid of experimental religion constitute legitimate mission ground. Is not our field a large one?

How work this field? Nationalistically to shut ourselves self-complacently up in the narrow limit of our kin is as unscriptural as it is unwise. The various nationalities in our country, now a heterogeneous conglomerate, will, in the course of a few decades, constitute one compact nation. Many, now rich and influential, will be reduced to penury, as many who are now poor will be opulent. The rich American banker's son, married to an Italian lady, reduced to indigence, may be glad to secure a subsistence by cleaning our gutters. The poor Irishman's son, wedded to a German girl, may, ere long, be mayor of this city, or governor of our State. It is, hence, our solemn duty to know no man after the flesh. We must save sinners, all sinners, no matter from whence they are. Physically aristocratic exclusiveness has invariably resulted in scrofula; nationally, in the Chinese queue; ecclesiastically, in spiritual putrefaction, dearth and death.

Yes; but how reach these perishing thousands? Of the various nationalities mentioned, the French and Irish Roman Catholics are most difficult of access. No matter how irreligious and worldly the former may be, upon evangelical religion they have learned to look with utter abhorrence. If I mistake not, we could operate successfully among the Italians, Scandinavians and Germans. But to organize the immigrant converts into separate congregations does not seem wise to me. We ought to prevail upon them to identify themselves with our American work. Separate organizations may seem expedient; but, ere long, it will be discovered that the clannishness thus fostered more than counterbalances the temporary benefit.

Here, though, we encounter many difficulties. The chief of these is the over-nicety and chilly reservedness of our membership towards strangers. Churches in which the sun-bonnet on a woman's head and the blouse of the mechanic are marks of depreciation—if not cause for merriment among gay damsels and sap-headed youngsters—such churches can not expect an acquisition of new elements. As recruiting officers, we want soldiers. Captains, colonels and generals we have more than enough. Our churches need the infusion of new blood, even though that new blood be not blue blood. At any rate, we must seek to win sinners for Christ, sinners wherever found. If we fail in this, we are recreant to our Master, who has instructed us not to neglect the "lame, halt and blind" in our call for guests to the gospel feast. The unconverted around us will die in their sins and be lost; but can we be saved if their loss is attributable to our neglect? Satan can not bring greater disaster to God's people than by instilling the belief that by annually contributing five or ten dollars towards the missionary cause, they are absolved from further obligations to the unconverted. Oh! for the true spirit of the Master in our congregations, where everybody deems it his duty to win souls for Christ, and where the poor seamstress is not less honored than the wife of the merchant-prince.

Much good is being accomplished by organizing and supporting mission Sunday-schools, and by outdoor preaching. A gospel song attracts the loitering masses. A pithy sermon, whose theme is Jesus and his love, never fails in accomplishing much good. Here, though, lack of wisdom is sometimes displayed. Have heard it said that this teaching and preaching should solely aim at the evangelization of the people, without ulterior ecclesiastical design. Seek the conversion of the godless, and therewith be content. I hold that said mission Sunday-schools and platforms for outdoor preaching should be utilized as advertising mediums by way of making iterated mention of our neighboring churches, the pastors at work there, and the time for public worship. Our spirit is no more in need of our body for life sublimer than spirituality is in need of healthy ecclesiasticism. In a word, we must win the people for Christ, and for his church as well.

Let us be up and doing! Be city pastors less and true missionaries more. We ought to devote less time to those already saved, and, with the Good Shepherd, be often found in seeking the lost sheep!

Irrelevant Cerebration.

We commend to the consideration of some of our readers the following paragraphs from a communication in the Wesleyan Christian Advocate, signed "Zed." Speaking of the different sorts of writing appearing in our church papers, he says:

There is another sort of writing seen often of late much like that referred to above. If one urges the necessity of education, another answers him: "Education won't save souls," as if this were an objection to education. No friend of education, taking the word in its ordinary sense, supposes it is a substitute for religion. So far as my knowledge goes, those who contend most for education, are in the forefront of those who urge religion. It is a curious state of mind that can reply to an appeal for intellectual enlightenment—"Get religion." As if one should urge farmers to raise more corn, another should imagine he replied by saying, "Man can not live by bread alone." Verily, but bread is good, even necessary. What does it all mean? Do some believe that knowledge is in itself evil? That light is friendly to deeds of darkness? Then the persecuting inquisition was right and "ignorance is the mother of devotion." Some go almost to the point of advocating the essential blessings that inhere in ignorance. Why don't they go the full length? Shame, probably. But if they believe that knowledge is per se unfavorable to virtue—that it is per se favorable to vice, they ought to join the old-time Romanists and stop the people from reading—the Bible and all books. If they are right, idiocy is the summum bonum.

It puzzles me much what sort of cerebral action is that which meets an appeal for education by an exhortation to seek religion? And that will be tempted to answer this question by calling it "a sneer at the emotional in religion." If knowledge is in itself bad; if ignorance is in itself good, let us imitate the fierce Arabs that burned great libraries as an act of piety; let us close up colleges and schools; let us stop the press—except as it may denounce knowledge; let us seek a conference of ignorant preachers; in a word, let us revert to barbarism. It is in harmony with the notions of some who oppose missions to the heathen on the ground that "giving the heathen light will increase their responsibility."

Why readers should complain at the papers for endeavoring to arouse the church to the importance of educating her children, is one of the strangest of all strange things. We are sorry to say our paper has not escaped these complaints. In regard to this point "Zed" makes this remark:

Some complain at the editor, and do it in shocking English—"as she is spoke"—for printing so much about "education." What would please them? The paper is large; one year with another obituaries take up vastly more space than education. Let the anti-education subscribers console themselves with the obituaries.

The Public Schools Must Go!

THE FIAT HAS GONE FORTH FROM THE VATICAN.

POPE PIUS IX.,

Than whom neither council nor Bishop has spoken as plainly on public education,—in the 45th proposition of the Syllabus issued by him in 1804, declares, "That the Romish Church has a right to interfere in the discipline of the public schools, and in the choice of the teachers for these schools." And in proposition 47th that "public schools open to all children for the education of the young, should be under the control of the Romish Church, should not be subject to the civil power, nor made to conform to the opinions of the age." While in proposition 48th he says, "Catholics can not approve of a system of educating youth which is unconnected with the Catholic faith and power of the church."

Such a system he declares in his Apostolic Brief to the Archbishops of Freiburg, 1864, "must necessarily be guided by the spirit of error and lies."

"Peter having thus spoken—to use the words of the Irish Bishops—through Pius, the question is settled; as in him (the Pope) all speak, all affirm, all deny; for he is the infallible doctor and pastor of all Christians." But, in the words of Father Jenkins, "We feel inclined to pile up the evidence on this subject to the very skies." So we quote the testimony of Cardinals, and Councils, Archbishops and Bishops, priests and press. Listen to who was verily "the power behind the throne." To Mr. Dexter A. Hawkins, who, some years ago, investigated under a commission the conditions of the public schools in the papal states, the Cardinal said, he "thought it better that the children should grow up in ignorance than to be educated in such a system of schools as the State of Massachusetts supported; that the essential part of the education of the people was the Catechism;" and, while the arithmetic and geography, reading and writing and other similar studies might be useful they were not essential."

The public schools must go! So say

THE COUNCILS OF ROME.

The Sacred Congregation of Propaganda in its instructions to the American Bishops, 1875, assigns as a reason why the Roman Catholic Church is hostile to the public schools, that "teachers indiscriminately of every sect, are employed—who are left free to sow errors and the seeds of vice in tender minds."

The Second Plenary Council of Baltimore, 1866, ascribed to the public schools "that corruption of morals which we have to deplore in those of tender years."

The Second Provincial Council of Oregon, 1881, said that "swearing, cursing and profane expressions are distinctive marks of public school children," and all were enjoined to preserve the little ones from the poisoned atmosphere of these godless institutions."

ARCHBISHOPS

declare the public schools must go!

Archbishop Segher, in his lecture on the "Secular School System," says, "It is grossly and monstrously immoral;" it is "a blot, a blemish, and a disgrace on this country, a living scandal and an opprobrium which covers its promoters with shame and infamy."

Archbishop Williams, of Boston, when a committee waited upon him to complain of Rev. Mr. Scully, of Cambridgeport, refusing to give absolution to parents who sent their children to the public schools. The Archbishop "sustained the priests and gave the rebels to understand that their Bishop considered himself insulted by the bare suspicion that they would find any support from him as favorable to public schools."

The public schools must go! So say

THE BISHOPS.

Bishop Gilmour, of Cleveland, in his Lenten pastoral of 1873, authorizes confessors to refuse the sacraments to parents who send their children to public schools.

Bishop St. Palais, of Indiana, in a pastoral, of 1872, "objects to the public schools on account of the infidel source from which they originated."

Bishop Baltes, of Alton, in his Lenten pastoral 1870, calls our public schools "seminaries of infidelity, and as such most fruitful sources of immorality."

The public schools must go! So echo

THE PRIESTS.

Father Walker, on the evening of Sabbath, March 14, 1875, said in St. Lawrence Roman Catholic Church, 84th St., New York: "The public schools are the nurseries of vice. They are godless schools, and they who send their children to them can not expect the mercy of God. . . . I would as soon administer the sacraments to a dog as to such Catholics."

Priest Phelan, at a convention held at St. Louis, October 17, 1873, said, "The children of the (public) schools turn out to be learned horse thieves, scholastic counterfeiters, and well versed in all shemes of deviltry. He frankly confessed the Catholics stood before the country as the enemies of the public schools. They would as soon send their children into a pest-house, or bury them, as let them go to the public schools. They were afraid the child who left home in the morning would come back with something in its heart as black as hell."

The Roman Catholic Priest Capel, according to a newspaper report of a conversation, which was widely circulated and never contradicted, said, "The time is not far away when the Roman Catholics, at the order of the Pope, will refuse to pay their school tax, and will send bullets to the breasts of the government agents rather than pay. . . . The order can come any day from Rome. . . . It will come as quickly as the click of the trigger, and will be obeyed, of course, as coming from God Almighty himself."

The public schools must go! So voices

THE ROMAN CATHOLIC PRESS.

Catholic Telegraph, of Cincinnati, says, "The secular school is a social cancer presaging the death of national morality. . . . The sooner it is destroyed the better; it will be a glorious day for Catholics in this country when under the blows of justice (?) and morality (?) our school system will be shivered to pieces."

The Freeman's Journal, of Dec. 11, 1869, exclaims, "Let the public school system go to where it came from—the devil."

The Catholic World, January, 1870, says, "We are opposed to the common schools as they are, because our church condemns them." This same magazine for April, 1871, says: "We do not indeed prize so highly as some of our countrymen appear to do the simple ability to read, write and cipher. . . . The best ordered and administered state is that in which the few are well-educated, and lead, and the many are trained to obedience, are willing to be directed, content to follow, and do not aspire to be leaders. . . . We believe the peasantry in old Catholic countries two centuries ago were better educated, although for the most part unable to read or write, than are the great body of the American people to-day." Thus Father Hecker echoes the sentiments of Cardinal Antonelli, and would have the public school give place to the reign of the "dark ages."

COMMITTEE OF ONE HUNDRED.

Some Presbyterians See the Opportunity.

If the Methodists neglect to respond to Rev. P. A. Johnston's proposition to raise a loan fund to aid young men seeking an education at Centenary College, Presbyterians do not fail to avail themselves of so good an opportunity to help the worthy.

Bro. Johnston writes me that while not a Methodist has proposed to join him in raising the loan fund, two Presbyterians voluntarily offered to become subscribers to the fund. This is, perhaps, not the only instance in which other denominations have seen our opportunities better than we have seen them ourselves. What better use can a man make of money than with it to help young men to prepare themselves for great usefulness in the world? Has any man fulfilled his mission in life until he has equipped another for greater achievements for God and humanity than his own have been? Let the loan fund be raised. Some of our choice young ministers are, at this very time, being driven from college for lack of just such aid as this fund is intended to afford. Brethren, help the loan fund, or the endowment, or both. Some are doing this now, and others will when they get their minds screwed up to it.

THE SWEET OLD STORY.

Tell me about the Master!
I am weary and worn to-night.
The day lies behind me in shadow,
And only the evening is light!
I gild with a radiant glory
That lingers about the West.
My poor heart is aweary, aweary,
And longs, like a child, for rest.

Tell me about the Master!
Of the hills he in loneliness trod,
When the tears and blood of his anguish
Dropped down on Judea's sod.
For to me life's seventy milestones
But a sorrowful journey mark;
Rough lies the hill country before me,
The mountains behind me are dark.

Tell me about the Master!
Of the wrongs he freely forgave;
Of his love and tender compassion,
Of his love that was mighty to save;
For my heart is aweary, aweary,
Of the woes and temptations of life,
Of the error that stalks in the noonday,
Of falsehood and malice and strife.

Yet I know that whatever of sorrow
Or pain or temptation befall,
The infinite Master hath suffered,
And knoweth and pitieth all.
So tell me the sweet old story,
That falls on each wound like balm,
And my heart that was bruised and broken
Shall grow patient and strong and calm.

Sanctified Ambition.

THE WOMAN.

The girl is not born without ambitions impulses. The effort to outdo in her childish plays, to excel in her school-girl studies, to lead in her classes, develop the same motives common with boys. It does seem that to the average girl the theater of this world on which she is to display her genius, her talent and capabilities is far narrower than that presented to the average boy. At any rate, it looks so from the standpoint from which the life-duties of the woman are at present reviewed. The boy takes in all the probabilities, and even the possibilities, too, with but little thought of failure in his plans. When one seems impracticable, another is adopted. The varied changes of home and duties abroad—of field, of woods, of stock and herds, of the stir of travel and clatter in business life—will serve to keep alive within him the cherished objects of his ambitious aims. The girl has so little change, except in that which comes up in the regular routine of every-day domestic life—sweeping out and dusting the same rooms, probing into the same recess and corners after dust and "litter," only occasionally varied with a new broom or a rearrangement of furniture, which is often too well fixed or too scant to admit of much change; the dish washing, the handling of the same cups and saucers, the same knives, forks and spoons; their jingle and clatter growing more and more monotonous as the days go by. Some years since I occasionally visited a family where one dish had been in the family for more than fifty years. It had all the time belonged to the same person, and had been handled almost exclusively by the same woman. No wonder when a slip or a crash occasionally comes, as the pieces are gathered up, the reflection is made: "Well, I am done for that dish; hope now I shall get to handle something new and better looking." These unvaried rounds of duty have a tendency to too greatly moderate a legitimate ambition, and narrow down woman's views of life's duties.

Her build, her natural strength never designed her for the regular hard toil of the farm, nor for the rougher and severe labors of the woods. Certainly she is not so well adapted to these as the man whose brawnier muscles show his better adaptation to them; yet the force of circumstances has compelled the woman to the plow and hoe of the farm, and to wield the ax and maul to provide bread for her children. The history of nations seems to indicate that Divine Providence never meant, as a rule, that she should lead soldiers in battle, rule empires, nor reign over kingdoms. The Sacred Scriptures, too, seem to sustain this idea; yet the force of circumstances and the force of character have placed her at the head of armies and seated her upon thrones. It would be difficult to show that Heaven ever administered a reproof to the woman because she occupied such position. The success of her military campaigns, the prosperity of her reigns, the peace and growth of her rule, her wise counsels in state indicate that an all-wise Providence acknowledges her right to these positions and her fitness for the same.

Without elaborate argument, we may assume that, in the main, it is not intended for woman to strive for these places of preference, nor to wear her laurels gathered from these earthly heights, but to be as she was created—the helpmeet of man. I do not mean by this that she is to marry the man—not by any means, to marry, whether or not; but to save the man from the ruin to which he sinks in every land and from all ranks of society. To consecrate her aims to this object, her every ambitious motive sanctified to this purpose, her work ——"more than fills an angel's hands—

It filled a Savior's heart."

It looks for its attainment not in wreaths woven by mortal hands, but for glory and for a crown prepared by the Savior. To change the word a little—that she is the companion of man is shown by her association with him on every moral plane on which he moves. The man has never descended to such a low estate of infamy but what the woman went down to stand beside him. The average woman repudiates and forever proscribes her sister-kind who has fallen into these low estates of shame, but will receive the man fresh from her polluted embrace in polite society, with smiles and signs of recognition and welcome, giving him an assurance that he has lost nothing, while the sister has lost all; not that she is the greater sinner by any light that can be thrown on the case by the law, the prophets or the gospel. Could this uncompromising proscription on the one part, and this incongruous toleration on the other, be adjusted to such lines as could be defined by the most sanctified motives, working according to the varied tempers and dispositions of women made holy, the man might be arrested and saved at his first step downward lured, or compelled back from these nameless vices of shame. Then it is plain that the wayward sister, too, would be saved.

There is no one instinct developed earlier nor stronger in the girl than motherhood. The doll is one of the first, the most constant and longest cherished toys. There is a tenderness and earnest solicitous care rarely, if ever, found in the boy, but comes up so natural in the heart of the girl as she so fondly and so untiringly plays mother. Take in connection with this the oneness of the husband and wife—"one bone and one flesh;" one in name; one in fortune or disaster; one in honor, and one in ignominy and shame. The wife may contribute much help in counsel and force of character as the husband climbs to fame, or sinks to ignominy. Her counsels and economy go far in the amassing of wealth, while her profligacy and her spendthrift go as far to drag or press down to poverty. The unselfish wife seldom thinks that it is mainly her push and support that have pressed her husband to place and position; her economy and saving housewifery which have raised him to large wealth. This oneness and community of interest we may regard as the legitimate offspring of ambition. If this sentiment, so common with women, could be so entirely sanctified as to make her a truly spiritual helpmeet, hanging all her help and attainments on the cross, using this push and support as helps to the attainment of a glorious heaven beyond, and waiting for her commendations and encomiums from the lips of the Savior, no aim in earth or heaven can be higher than this; no attainment can be more. Woman was made to be the companion of man, his equal and associate. It was never meant that he should stand above and beyond the woman in heaven, having more of its glories, as he claims and takes more of the glories and honors of this world than he allows her.

The son is but a little removed from the mother beyond the husband. She can and does, in some sense, give her own eyes and her own brains to him; his success is hers. She is willing to sit in the shadows neglected, lest a knowledge of her presence might mar the interest of the hour, and see her son caressed and honored. She would not so much as say, "This is my son," if saying it detracted one iota from him. If this motherly ambition could be so sanctified as to look through the shell of his humanity and earthly nature to his greater spiritual life, and bring every other interest and solicitude to contribute to this higher spiritual life, regarding anything and everything else attained, if achieved at the expense of this heavenly life, as a most disastrous failure. Could these earthly honors, rewards and emoluments be looked through and beyond to the higher attainments of a life in heaven, and all these conscripted and made to contribute to the attainment of a crown and kingdom in glory? If the mother can thus bide her time and "possess her soul in patience" when she sees her son robed and crowned and sceptered and enthroned by the Savior in the kingdom of the Father, the mother realizes, as she never could on earth, what are the rewards of a holy and sanctified ambition.

In Memoriam.

Rev. Charles Tompkins French was born at Laurenceburg, Ind., February 11, 1822.

He was blessed with religious training and example, and early gave his heart to God, and became a member of the church. He soon felt the call to the ministry of the Word; and before the completion of his twentieth year he was licensed to exhort, and not long afterward to preach. In the providence of God he was led southward, and came to Mississippi in 1843. For some months he engaged in secular business; but all the while feeling the pressure of duty, he hastened to begin what he had chosen as his life-work by entering the Mississippi Conference, December, 1844, in Port Gibson. His connection with the Mississippi Conference continued for twenty-six years consecutively, during which period he received and filled appointments in different parts of the Conference. These appointments make up a record of arduous and faithful labor, and the mention of them may not be without interest to those who knew him. They are, for 1845–'46, Leaf River circuit; 1847, Decatur; 1848, Paulding; 1849, Deer Creek, Hill's Plantation; 1850, Hampton's Plantation; 1851 and 1852, Covington, La.; 1853, Grand Gulf; 1854, Fayette; 1855, Paulding; 1856, Rocky Springs; 1857–'58, South Jefferson; 1859 and 1860, Greenwood; 1861 and 1862, Bayou Pierre; 1863, distributing literature in the army; 1864 and 1865, Cayuga; 1866, Burtonton (colored charge); 1867 and 1868, Steel Chapel (colored charge); 1869 and 1870, Rocky Springs. At the close of the year 1870 he located.

His friends knew how much it cost him in feeling to retire from a work and association in which he so much delighted. But his retirement from the itinerancy was not a cessation from labor. He engaged in useful work through all the years since until the end. His interest in the cause of Christ, his love for the church, knew nothing of abatement, but rather increased till the last.

As a citizen, he was public spirited, active, useful and patriotic. He had strong convictions, and uttered them boldly. He never for a moment made it his aim to be merely popular; never seeking to know which way the multitude was going, though properly esteeming the good opinion of his fellow-men. He inquired only on which side the right lay. His was not one of those timid, cautious natures that spread their sails to every shifting breeze, and who would not rebuke or speak a bold word if the most solemn interests depended on it. He was diligent in business, and earnest in all things to which he applied himself. He was well endowed with all those qualities that secure success in life. He had a vigorous intellect, a commanding figure, and such a natural force of character as would have prevented him from being obscure anywhere. He impressed himself strongly on the community where his latest years were passed. His preaching was wholesome, interesting and thoughtful. During the last few months, it was observed that he was growing ripely, in love, and in heavenly mindedness. He met death with that firmness and composure that faith alone can impart.

On January 10, 1889, at his home in Claiborne county, Miss., after a few days of sickness, he quietly fell asleep in Jesus, and entered into the rest that remaineth for the people of God. His wife, and three sons, all grown to man's estate, survive him.

Help for Needy Sunday-Schools, and How to Get It.

There are many places where Sunday-schools can be organized and maintained only through outside aid. The sole object of this communication is to direct the attention of pastors and superintendents to the resources at their command, and to the channels through which such assistance is made available. Ample occasion for offering suggestions in this line is furnished by the lamentable want of information known to exist on the subject, as well as by a most sincere desire to see God's humble poor made participants in the riches of his grace, through a knowledge of his Word. It is hoped that the following statements will make the matter plain:

1. At the General Conference, held in Richmond, Va., May, 1886, the following (Report No. 5 of the Committee on Sunday-schools) was adopted:

Resolved, That the third Sunday in May be set apart as "Children's Day," to be observed throughout our church with appropriate services, and on that day a collection be taken up for the aid of needy Sunday-schools, 10 per cent. of the money collected to be forwarded to the General Conference Sunday-school Committee, Nashville, Tenn., and be distributed by said committee in the same manner and under the same regulations as the interest accruing from the "Centennial Sunday-school Aid Fund." A suitable programme shall be prepared by the Sunday-school Editor for "Children's Day," having special reference to the character and objects of the day.

This order, wherever obeyed, has created in each Annual Conference a "fund for the aid of needy Sunday-schools" within its bounds. This fund is controlled and disbursed by the Sunday-school Board of the Annual Conference in which it is collected. If any Annual Conference is destitute of such fund, it must suffer the consequences of its own culpable negligence of duty. The most serious aspect of the case, however, is the suffering of the innocent for the guilty.

II. As indicated in the resolution quoted above, the General Conference Sunday-school Committee at Nashville have at their disposal for the use and benefit of needy schools the interest accruing from the "Centennial Sunday-school Aid Fund," and 10 per cent. of amounts collected annually on "Children's Day" throughout our church. As will be observed, 90 per cent. of all "Children's Day" collections made in each Annual Conference goes into the treasury of the Sunday-school Board of that Conference, for distribution among its needy schools, under such rules and regulations as the Conference may adopt.

This provision being considered fully adequate to the wants of all self-supporting Conferences, the fund at the disposal of the General Conference Sunday-school Committee is devoted wholly to Mission Conferences, by which is meant Conferences, whether home or foreign, that are sustained by appropriations from the Board of Missions of our church.

III. As to the proper method to be pursued on the part of those seeking aid for needy schools.

1. Application should, in every instance, be made first to the Sunday-school Board of the Conference in which the school is located. This is, of course, to be done through the officers of said Board. If through negligence or otherwise the Board of a self-supporting Conference is unable, by reason of an empty treasury, to grant the desired aid, the application "goes a-begging"—to the detriment of souls and to the damage of the church's professions of regard for immortal interests.

But in Mission Conferences, as explained above, if the application to the Conference Board fails, then—

2. Send to Mr. D. M. Smith, Treasurer, Nashville, Tenn., for a blank "Application for Aid." Fill it out and return it to him, and if on examination it is approved by the disbursing committee of the General Conference Aid Fund, the grant will be cheerfully made, and supplies will be promptly forwarded.

I take pleasure in stating that many schools have received substantial aid from this general fund, that an increase in the number of applications of late indicate the great value of this stimulus to activity in behalf of the destitute, and that the committee desires to enlarge the sphere of its beneficent work.

That my Annual Conference should be blind to the blessed opportunities of "Children's Day," and that any pastor should have money at command and missionary ground without a Sunday-school, are suggestive of facts which demonstrate the truth of the Scriptures, as it is written, "The children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light."

From the Work.

KOSCIUSKO CIRCUIT, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: This year, so far, has been one of marked improvement and success on this charge. The Kosciusko circuit, alias Newtonville circuit, alias Labaucha mission, is not what it once was. The time was when the preachers who knew anything of Labaucha country had an aversion to it, and dreaded to hear the reading of their appointment, for fear this might be their field of labor. And really it has had a hard name abroad. Whether the actually existing circumstances rendered both preachers and people justifiable in their conclusions, or whether unfounded prejudice has given rise to the manner of speaking disparagingly of this work and section of the country, is unknown to the writer. Judging from statements made to him since his appointment here, he is a little inclined to the former opinion; but by the earnest and faithful work of former pastors, directed by a divine hand, the work has not only gotten to itself a better name, but has a large credit in the Lamb's book of life.

My appointment to this work was not a surprise to me. I felt that, having served the same charge two consecutive years, and that appointment, being my first in the itinerancy, the probability was that I would move. Trusting my case to the Lord, with the determination to accept my appointment as coming from him, I would not have been surprised at going anywhere. Thank God for the itinerant system! It's good for all parties concerned, making us more trustful. Upon my arrival on the work I found a kind people, ready to minister to the wants of the pastor in any way possible. But no home for the preacher! A week's hard riding and earnest efforts to secure one, availed nothing. Then came some of the troubles peculiar to a preacher's life. When it was "noised abroad" that I would locate outside the circuit, the words, "We will build a parsonage," rang out through the charge, and in a few days plans were formulated, committees appointed, and the work begun in earnest.

On February 27 the preacher, with his family, moved into the new home; and, notwithstanding the house is yet unfinished, it is comfortable and convenient. We are assured that it will be completed in summer. While waiting on the building of the parsonage, we were taken and highly entertained in the home of the parents of one of North Mississippi's most promising and useful young preachers. God bless those noble and loyal veterans of the cross! On the day of our arrival at the parsonage, and on every successive one, almost, tokens of appreciation have been presented by the good people of the charge. Pantry and barn are stocked with articles necessary to the subsistence of man and beast.

The spiritual interest is better than usual. My predecessor left the work in fine condition in this respect. Prayer meetings and Sunday-schools, with one or two exceptions, did not go into winter-quarters. Fasting weekly is characteristic of one neighborhood in the bounds of the work. The erection of two churches evidences the determination to have more comfortable quarters for the Lord.

Our first Quarterly Conference, which convened on February 16 and 17, was a benediction to us all. Bro. Wheat, our beloved presiding elder, was on hand, full of faith and the Holy Ghost. His preaching was such as this people rarely ever heard. Reports in the Conference assured both presiding elder and preacher in charge of success. For the support of the pastor a larger assessment was made than for the pastor of any former year, and a larger proportion of this was reported paid at the first quarter than formerly. The Bishops' Fund and some on other claims has been collected. An increase in membership of thirty-four (by letter and otherwise) marks the progress along that line. The ADVOCATE is not as generally read as it should be; but no efforts on my part shall be spared to widen its circulation, knowing that, while the readers derive incalculable benefit, the pastor is aided both in his pastoral work and in taking his collections.

The Minutes of our last Annual Conference came up in good shape, except a failure, on the part of the editor, to record therein the proceeds of the "week of self-denial and prayer," and of the "Ministerial Aid Societies" (of some of the districts). It seems to me that the amounts thus collected should be printed in the financial report. The laity, who are the contributors of these amounts, are interested in the results of their efforts, and would like to see, at a glance, what is doing. When I refer to "Ministerial Aid Societies," I mean those who have organized themselves for the purpose of aiding young ministers in procuring an education.

A Lost Opportunity.

MR. EDITOR: I have read with interest the article by Rev. A. D. Miller in the ADVOCATE of March 7. He has certainly made a very liberal proposition for the good of the Indians of our State, who have been so long neglected. But, Mr. Editor, in my humble opinion, we have lost our opportunity. It is now too late—at least, too late to attempt to organize Methodist societies among the Indians of our State. And it would be an unwise expenditure of means to attempt this by a missionary from the Territory.

About ten or twelve years ago, Rev. J. A. Vance, of our Conference, made an earnest appeal to our church in behalf of the Indians in our midst, at which time our Conference agreed to procure the services of a missionary from the Territory, and arrangements were made accordingly; but, for some cause or other, this plan failed, and just at this point the Missionary Baptist Church, of our State, seeing our failure, entered the door of opportunity and sent for an Indian missionary from the Territory. He came, his health failed, and he died. They sent for another; he came, his health failed, and he returned. These were here long enough, however, to plant a church and ordain some native preachers, and through the native preachers the Baptist Church is doing a fine work among the Indians. They have several churches in this part of the State; one in four miles of Walnut Grove, with a membership of forty or fifty.

Now, in conclusion, I say we ought to do something, and we will be held responsible if we do not do something. But my plan is this: Let us give our mite and encouragement to the Baptist Church, and help them to help the Indian, for the Indian population of the State is too small to be divided among different denominations, and, besides, I believe this would be a confusion to them instead of an advantage, for they are a peculiar people, and are one, and, therefore, disposed to believe alike.

Call for Help.

Last August the storm blew our church down at this place. We are now trying to build it up again. I wish to ask, through your good paper, for 100 Methodists to give us 50 cents apiece. They can give as much as they wish to, but I only ask for 50 cents apiece. May the Lord bless you and the dear old ADVOCATE!

Correction.

In the published Minutes of the last session of the Conference my pastoral charge is reported as paying $6 43 foreign missionary money. I reported $6 45. In a report that I read before the Conference I see two "t's" not crossed and one "i" not dotted.

What Are Your Children Reading?

BY PRESIDENT J. H. CARLISLE.

This question can be answered if you will tell us what you are giving them to read. They will scarcely rise much above the fare you spread for them. If you provide nothing for them, some one else will furnish them, cheaply, freely, with that which is worse than nothing. If you do not feed their young minds, some one else will poison them. A good book now may be worth more for good to your boy than a share in any bank or railroad ten years hence. The fortune may come too late.

A few years ago an official in our Publishing House said, in substance: "Everybody praises our books, but very few people read them." Good books unread differ very little from blank books. Let us hope that times are changing in this respect for the better. We ought to aim not only at the increase, but at the diffusion of good literature. A large supply of salt safely stored away in a splendid warehouse is not all that we need. It is wanted in ten thousand smoke-houses all over our land. Good books and good newspapers are wanted in all the homes of our populous, restless country. The father must be rather exacting who can not find in recent issues from Nashville a good supply of reading for himself and family. Get the Life of David Livingstone for your son. Read it with him. Talk it over with him. Let him hunt lions with the bold Scotchman, and then follow him as he turns to hunt more savage men, to train them by the gospel which he carried to them. The dollar spent for the book may yield its rich dividends to your household for years to come. This beautiful volume is from the ready pen of a Georgia lady, Miss Annie Maria Barnes.

Perhaps another question may be asked: "What are the grown people under your roof reading?" At one time our network of itinerant preachers covered the land with active book agents, who dealt in books that were safe and good. The Methodist family one hundred miles from a good bookstore had new books brought to their door once a month. It is not so now. We may assume this as a fact without stopping to express regret or censure. But the condition calls for effort somewhere to supply our people with good reading. If the changed circumstances of our people make it no longer necessary or convenient for the ministers to carry books around, their office still gives them the privilege of helping our members to wider acquaintance with a healthy range of reading.

There lies before me a book (Howie's History of the Church, Vol. I.), from the college library, which bears on a blank leaf this inscription, in a very uniform hand: "The gift of Francis Asbury to Daniel Asbury, with a condition that he may lend them to other preachers for a short time, provided they are preserved from damage." This was one of the many ways in which the untiring, faithful Francis Asbury tried to sow beside all waters and to put all his capital out actively at interest.

A few months ago, when visiting a retired country family, among other good old books was one with a label on it, stating that the volume was never to be sold, but must be circulated freely, a fund for that purpose having been given by ——. I would gladly give the name if I could trust to memory. I think it was the name of a Presbyterian pioneer in the beginning of the century, or even earlier. The good man's name is indelibly recorded where it will not be forgotten or misquoted.—Southern Christian Advocate.

"WHAT DOEST THOU HERE?"—How often is that question put still! When a Christian worker, surely needed, deserts his post, because of some unforseen difficulty, or to secure selfish gratification and ease; to that couch of indolence, or to that forest glade where soft breezes blow, the question comes, "What doest thou here?" When a child of God is found in the theatre, the dancing saloon, or the place of evil companionship; sitting in the seat of scorners, or walking in the way of the ungodly, again must the question come as a thunderbolt out of a clear sky: "What doest thou here?" When one endowed with great faculties digs a hole in the earth, and buries the God-intrusted talent, standing idle all the day long among the loungers in the market-place, again must the inquiry ring out: "What dost thou here?"

Life is the time for doing. The world is a great workshop, in which there is no room for drones. God himself worketh as the great master-builder. All creatures fulfill their needful functions, from the angel that hymns God's praise to the insect that floats in the air. There is plenty to do; evil to put down; good to build up; doubters to be directed; prodigals to be won back; sinners to be sought. "What doest thou here?" Up, Christians, leave your caves, and do. Do not do in order to be saved; but, being saved, do.—F. B. Meyer.

LESSON II.—April 14.

THE REJECTED SON

Mark xii, 1-12.

GOLDEN TEXT.—He came unto his own, and his own received him not.—John i, 11.

TIME.—A. D. 29. The Tuesday before the crucifixion.

PLACE.—The Temple.

PARALLEL PASSAGES.—Matt. xxi, 33-46; Luke xx, 9-19.

1. He began to speak unto them by parables—The parables of Jesus up to this time were parables of compassion and mercy, intended to stimulate their thought, and, if possible, to awaken them to repentance, but now his parables are of judgment. They are direct and terrible, and he compels them to interpret them and bring themselves in guilty and condemned. A certain man—The head of the family. Planted a vineyard—A symbol of the field of duty and service of God, customarily used in both the Old Testament and the New. It is often used to represent the church of God, as a place cultivated and valuable. It is used here to represent the Jewish people: the people chosen of the Lord, cultivated with care, and signally favored; or, perhaps, more definitely, the city of Jerusalem. Set a hedge about it—The hedge about them is the law, separating them from the Gentiles. By their circumspection through the law (Ephesians ii, 14) the Jews became a people dwelling alone, and not reckoned among the nations, that law being at once a hedge of separation and of defense—a wall of fire, which, preserving them distinct from the idolatrous nations round them and from their abominations, gave them the pledge and assurance of the continued protection of God. Place for the wine-fat—The wine-vat, which was a square or round vat or pit excavated in the earth, mortared and plastered so as to make it tight like a modern cistern. Over this vat was the wine-press, into which the grapes were heaped, and when the juice was trodden out it flowed into the vat. Built a tower—In eastern countries at present these towers are often eighty feet high and thirty feet square. They were for the keepers who defended the vineyard from thieves and animals, especially from foxes. These circumstances denote in general that God had taken proper care of his vineyard—that is, his people. Let it out to husbandmen—The letting out to husbandmen was probably that kind of letting when the tenant pays his rent in kind, although the fruits may be understood of money. Went into a far country—As St. Luke adds, "for a long while." The hiring out and the departure are, of course, not to be pressed, but understood as circumstances introduced in order to describe God as sending and the people as refusing.

2. At the season—All time is the time of fruit with the individual and with the nation. God continually seeks for fruit. A servant—And when the fruit season drew near, he sent his [illegible] to the husbandmen that they might receive for him his fruits. The husbandmen were the leaders and chief rulers of the people; the servants were the prophets. The successive missions point, perhaps, to the earlier and later—Elijah and Elisha, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and the Baptist. All were received with persecution and death. The fruit of the vineyard—The fruits were obedience, love, righteous living, teaching the true God to the nations. These fruits which are demanded are in nowise to be explained as particular works, nor yet as a condition of honesty and uprightness, but much rather as the repentance and the inward longing after true inward righteousness, which the law was unable to bring about.

3. They caught him—Mark minutely describes the gradual climax of their advancing villainy. This servant was only beaten and dismissed empty—that is, without any payment or rentage. They at first scarce dared little more than the withholding the due. The second servant is so wounded in the head and shamefully treated that it seems not worth while to add that he departed unpaid. The third, with his retinue, undergoes beating and slaughter.

4. Cast stones, and wounded him in the head—This was among the Jews a common way of punishment.

5. Him they killed, and many others—The conduct of "the lord of the vineyard" is a vivid representation of God's dealings with man. It is a faithful picture of his merciful dealing with the Jewish Church. It is a no less faithful picture of his gracious treatment of the Gentile Churches. Beating some and killing some—The word here translated beat properly means to flay, or to take off the skin; hence, to beat, or to whip, so that the skin in many places is taken off. Isaiah is said to have been put to death by sawing him asunder.

6. One son, his well beloved—Who does not see that our Lord here severs himself by the sharpest line of demarkation from all merely human messengers, and claims for himself sonship in its loftiest sense? They will reverence my son—These words represent God's rightful expectation—that is, the expectation he has a right to have. If a human householder would have such an expectation, much more God has a reason and a right to expect reverence for his Son.

7. Come, let us kill him—This resolution had actually been taken (see John xi, 53), and that immediately after the manifestation of his power as the Son of God in the raising of Lazarus, and also immediately after Caiaphas' prophecy. The inheritance shall be ours—By the design of the husbandmen, and their reckoning on the inheritance, the heir being killed, we may understand the vain hope entertained by the Jews of reserving to themselves the glory of the law after they had slain Christ.

8. Killed him, and cast him out of the vineyard—This is partly to be understood of our Lord being given up to the heathen to be judged, but also literally, as related by all three evangelists.

9. He will come and destroy—The answer was followed by a deep "God forbid!" from several voices. The dignitaries thus addressed could not, in the presence of the crowd listening to all that had passed, refuse the only possible answer: "He will come and miserably destroy these wretched men," said their spokesman, "and give the vineyard to others, who will render him his fruits in their seasons." The reckoning of the parable had already flashed on the minds of some of them, and the answer was followed by a deep "God forbid!" from several voices. The "God forbid!" which, according to St. Luke, the people uttered when they heard the terrible doom of the husbandmen, gives evidence that the scope of the parable had not escaped their comprehension, that they had understood it, even before its plain interpretation at the last.

10. Have ye not read this Scripture—The quotation is from Psalm cxviii, 22, 23, a Psalm which the Jews recognized as applying to Messiah, and of which there is a like application at Acts iv, 11; I Peter ii, 7; and an allusion somewhat more remote, Ephesians ii, 20. In the primary meaning of the Psalm the illustration seems to have been drawn from one of the stones quarried, hewn, and marked, away from the site of the temple, which the builders, ignorant of the head architect's plans, or finding on it no mark (such as recent explorations in Jerusalem have shown) to have been placed on the stones of Solomon's temple in the place where they were quarried; to indicate their position in the future structure fabric), had put on one side, as having no place in the building, but which was found afterward to be that on which the completeness of the structure depended, on which as the chief corner-stone the two walls met and were bonded together.

11. The Lord's doing—Our Lord here interrupts the transition of the figure to declare, from Psalm cxviii, that this exaltation of himself was from God; and thus their question as to his authority is completely answered.

12. Feared the people—They saw now, more clearly than ever, the whole bent and drift of these parables, and longed for the hour of vengeance! But, as yet, fear restrained them; for, to the multitude, Christ was but a prophet.

PRACTICAL LESSONS.

This parable was exactly adapted to the case of the people who heard it. Consciousness of the approach to hatred, revenge, betrayal, and death, seemed to urge on to the closest application of the truth, accepted by Jesus, but rejected by the people.

Christ, in this, takes clear the connection between the Old and New Testaments. He points out once more the unity in the work of prophets, priests, apostles, and himself. The most telling and convincing of all religious teaching is that into which personal experience is wrought, even though it be sad beyond expression. It is always Christ-like to make or attempt to make one's personal misfortunes the means of grace or the salvation of others, particularly when those others are involved as the authors of the misfortune. The most marvelous part of the plan of our salvation is the humiliation and the exaltation of Jesus. The rise and fall, the prosperity and adversity in men's lives is also one of the things greatly wondered at. It is also the Lord's doing. Many men in whose heart there is none of the fear of God, yet are kept from violence and crime by the very force of public opinion. What the people think has weight.

Missionary.

A Comparative View of Christian Work in the Home and Foreign Fields.

OUR HOME FIELD.

Proportion of Ministers to Population.—Population of the United States (est. 1886), 60,000,000; total Protestant ministers in the United States (1886), 78,861; in United States average one minister to less than 800.

Proportion of Christian Workers to Population.—Ministers in United States (1886), 78,861; lay preachers, 31,991; Sunday-school teachers, 1,107,170; total Protestant workers in the United States, 1,218,025. Population, 60,000,000, an average of one worker to each forty-eight persons.

Proportion of Church Members to Population.—In 1886 there were in the United States 11,560,396 Protestant ministers and church members, or nearly one in five of the entire population. These are so thoroughly distributed throughout the country, that the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ could be preached to the whole population every week.

Amount of Money Expended.—Annual expenditure for Christian work in the United States by Protestant church members, $80,000,000. This $80,000,000 is expended for the evangelization of 60,000,000 people—$1 33 each.

THE FOREIGN FIELD.

Proportion of Missionaries to Population.—Total population in the foreign field—heathen, 856,000,000, Mohammedan, 175,000,000, Catholic countries, 150,000,000—1,181,000,000; total ordained Protestant missionaries in foreign field, 2,923; average, in round numbers, one missionary to 400,000.

Proportion of Christian Workers to Population.—Ordained missionaries, 2,923; lay, 763; women, 2,420; ordained natives, 3,216; all other workers, 28,382. Total workers in the foreign field, 37,704; population, 1,181,000,000; an average of one worker to each 31,322 persons.

Proportion of Church Members to Population.—In 1886, in the foreign field there were 37,704 missionaries and other workers, and 710,384 native communicants, a total of 754,068, in a population of 1,181,000,000; an average of only one Protestant Christian to each 1,566 persons.

Amount of Money Expended.—Annual expenditure of Protestant Christians in the United States for foreign missions, $4,000,000; for the evangelization of 1,181,000,000—one-third of a cent each.

MISSIONARY UNBELIEF.

"Go ye and make disciples of all the nations."

The Christian that does not believe in foreign missions does not believe in the Great Commission. Repeat it and see. The Christian that does not believe in foreign missions does not believe in the Apostles' Creed. Repeat it and see. The Christian that does not believe in the Lord's Prayer. Repeat it and see. The Christian that does not believe in foreign missions does not believe in the Doxology in long metre. Repeat it and see. The Christian that does not believe in foreign missions in this generation believes that three hundred more millions of the heathen world ought to die before we try to tell them of Jesus Christ. How long is this unbelief to go on? How many more millions must die before the church of God is ready? If thou canst believe, all things are possible to him that believeth.

MISSIONARY LOGIC.

The Premise.—There is no distinction between Jew and Greek. For the same Lord is Lord of all. And is rich unto all that call upon him.

The Promise.—Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved.

The Irresistible Sequence.—How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? How shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? How shall they hear without a preacher. How shall they preach except they be sent?

MISSIONARY SUCCESS.

It is fixed. "I will declare the decree." It is definite. "I will give you the heathen for thy inheritance." It is ever expanding. The waters of prophetic vision, "to the ankles," "to the knees," "to the loins," "waters to swim in," that "can not be passed over." It is to be universal. Go and disciple "all the nations." A whole world full of believing sons and daughters. It is irresistible. "All power is given unto me in heaven and on earth. Go ye, therefore." It is with Christ's presence. "Lo, I am with you all the days." It is inspiring. When Duty's brow is sunlit with Hope, the feet and heart take wings. It is to the glory of God. "That unto principalities and powers in heavenly places may be known by the church the manifold wisdom of God."—Standard.

Temperance Notes.

It is estimated that considerably over 3,000,000 penny meals have been served at the one-cent coffee stands in New York. How many poor creatures may have been saved in this way from the temptations of the liquor store "free lunches," as well as kept from crime or the almshouse, it is impossible to estimate. On the evening of April 2, an entertainment is to be given for the benefit of the work at Steinway Hall; prominent artists have volunteered their services. This may be a suggestion to other towns and cities to "go and do likewise."

In 1886 the French government appointed a Commission of Inquiry into the consumption of alcohol in France. That commission has lately made its report, an abstract of which is given in the last number of the Journal of Inebriety, and is very instructive reading. This is its conclusion: "The present position of affairs is graver than ever. A certain number of our departments are threatened with a rapid degeneration of the race. Alcoholism is a cause of great misery, and has already assailed the well-being of our community." They, therefore, recommend the abolition of all private distilleries, and prohibition of the sale of all spirituous liquors containing alcohols, as injurious to health. Two of the medical experts, called as witnesses by the Commission, declare all alcohols are toxic. There is one public house for every ninety-four persons in all France; in some districts there is one for every sixty-two persons.

Babu Gyan Chandra Basak, a prominent Bengalese, of Calcutta, has pioneered the way for native temperance literature, by preparing in Bengalee an excellent "Hand Book of Temperance," which bristles with facts and figures, and is the only vernacular publication on the subject. The sketch it contains of the work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union is the fruit of Mrs. Leavitt's visit, and will give a new impetus to the movement. Babu Basak is a member of the Calcutta Band of Hope, which now has a membership of 1,000.

A home for Inebriate Women, under the auspices of the Women's Union Church of England Temperance Society, has been opened near London.

Mrs. J. R. Nicholls sails for Paris, March 21, to superintend the W. C. T. U. exhibition in the World's Exposition, which opens in Paris, May 30. She will stop in London a few days to consult with Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith and Mrs. Margaret Bright Lucas about the exhibit, and after the arrangements for the display are concluded will return to England to attend the spring meetings. The prayers of all W. C. T. U. women should follow Mrs. Nicholls on her journey and be raised in petition for the success of her work, which is the largest venture that has ever been made to represent the W. C. T. U. work and literature in foreign lands.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is a peculiar medicine. It is carefully prepared from Sarsaparilla, Dandelion, Mandrake, Dock, Pipsissewa, Juniper Berries, and other well-known and valuable vegetable remedies, by a peculiar combination, proportion and process, giving to Hood's Sarsaparilla curative power not possessed by other medicines. It effects remarkable cures where other preparations fail.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is the best blood purifier before the public. It eradicates every impurity, and cures Scrofula, Salt Rheum, Boils, Pimples, all Humors, Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Sick Headache, Indigestion, General Debility, Catarrh, Rheumatism, Kidney and Liver Complaints, overcomes that tired feeling, creates an appetite, and builds up the system.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Has met peculiar and unparalleled success at home. Such has become its popularity in Lowell, Mass., where it is made, that whole neighborhoods are taking it at the same time. Lowell druggists sell more of Hood's Sarsaparilla than of all other sarsaparillas or blood purifiers. Sold by druggists. $1; six for $5. Prepared only by C. I. HOOD & CO., Apothecaries, Lowell, Mass.

Briefs.

At the Preachers' Meeting of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of Chicago, they voted to support only such candidates for municipal offices in that city as will pledge themselves to favor the enforcement of Sunday laws.

One of our old subscribers sent his renewal and subscribed for four more copies for different members of his family. He also ordered the Nashville Advocate and Missionary Record for his wife. How many others will do likewise? As households scatter, it is a good plan to follow them with the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Rev. J. T. Sawyer announces that protracted services are being held this week at Felicity Street Methodist Church. Both morning and evening, on Sunday last, the congregations were large, and seven joined the church. The Rev. Wm. Wimberly will preach at these services every night this week at 7:15 o'clock. At the "Felicity Mission," 700 Annunciation street, services held Tuesday night are largely attended, and evidences of growth of work are manifest. Things are ripening for a protracted meeting at that point.

Joseph Cook, in the late "Monday Lecture," said: "The Sunday of to-day makes 1,000,000 men slaves. Civilization without a Sunday in it is a kind of blasphemy." In speaking of the Catholic question, he states that "papal aggression is the great question on this continent. Whoever opposes rum and Romanism must expect opposition and a certain amount of picturesque advertising, but let not the clergy be afraid. You are sowing into the future."

Rev. J. W. McLaurin, the Southern agent of the American Bible Society, states that this society circulated 1,500,000 copies of the Scripture in 1887. Since 1864 Mr. A. M. Milne has distributed, chiefly by sale, 200,000 volumes of the Scriptures in Venezuela, Colombia, Ecuador and Peru. During the four late years 30,000 copies of the Scriptures have been circulated in Cuba, the result being the establishment of Sunday-schools and churches. The total circulation of the Scriptures in Brazil in the ten years ending 1887 exceeded 60,000. From 1861 to 1887, 300,000 copies of the Scriptures have been sent into Mexico.

The Louisiana Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals held its annual meeting, March 26, at Tulane Hall. There was a large attendance of members, and unusual enthusiasm in this excellent cause was apparent. The platform was occupied by Rev. Dr. B. Carradine, pastor of Carondelet Street Methodist Church; Rt.-Rev. J. N. Galleher, S. T. D., Bishop of Louisiana; Hon. W. W. Howe, Mr. E. D. Forsyth, the president of the association, and other distinguished persons.

The Rev. Dr. Carradine's address was highly appreciated, and he has consented to deliver a lecture in Carondelet Street Methodist Church on the subject of "Kindness to Animals," at an early date. Dr. Carradine has also determined to introduce this feature of lecturing on moral subjects into his church work, and now and then deliver an address on the live questions of the day. These lectures will be duly announced in this paper.

Laymen to the Front.

We were never more encouraged than when, in our recent District Conference in this city, a layman moved the appointment of a committee to raise funds to send the gospel to a region just outside of the city that is destitute of preaching. The brother's earnestness and sincerity were evinced at the close of his short speech, advocating the appointment of the committee, by authorizing his name to be put down at $50. Another layman immediately arose and agreed to give $100; another said, $50; others said, $25; others, $10, and some, $5; and in a few minutes the sum of $500 was promised. Very little of this money was promised by the preachers. The committee was appointed, and consists entirely of laymen.

If there is any money in the church, it is in the hands of the laymen; and as the success of the church at home and abroad depends upon the benevolence of those who have the money, we rejoice to see our laymen coming to the front again, as they did years ago, and offering liberal gifts upon the altar of evangelization. It is one of the best arguments to the world of the genuineness of our religion. It shows that we think it worth our best efforts to extend it; and that fact when known must arrest the attention and serious thought of outside people.

We have thought for some time, and have so expressed it to those in authority, that the Methodism in this city ought to come together in a sort of general council to consider the best plan for furthering the cause of Christ in our midst. It is simply impossible for our pastors to do all that can be done. There are thousands of people around us "perishing for lack of knowledge." It seems to us that the business men in our church in this city could very judiciously expend $10,000 a year in spreading the knowledge of Christ among the non-church-going masses, and thus save hundreds of them annually from want and crime and wretchedness. It will not avail to say the money can not be obtained. When men of business want money for other enterprises, they get it; and when the business men of the church take hold of church enterprises with the same enthusiasm that they put into their business, they will get the money.

This very plan is operated successfully in other cities; and why can it not be operated successfully here? We believe it can be! Why should we be behind our brethren anywhere? Have we not as much spiritual courage as they? Is not our money as acceptable to God as theirs? Will we continue to heap up money, knowing not who shall gather it? We commend to the business men of our church in this city the example of the business Methodists of Richmond, Va., as given in the following clipping from an exchange:

In the city of Richmond the Methodists have seven prineipal houses of worship, some of them very fine edifices. With the growth of the city there is a demand for more. Recently the laymen connected with the different congregations in the city have taken the initiative in forward steps to build suburban chapels. A public meeting was held a few Sunday nights ago in Broad Street Church, called by leading lay members, in which the demand for an advanced movement in the direction indicated was considered. The meeting was presided over by a layman; the speeches, in advocacy of the measures proposed, were made by laymen! Mr. John P. Branch, a well-known banker in the city, and son of the late Thomas Branch, made an effective appeal in favor of the enterprise, and backed it by a thousand dollars subscription. He was followed by Col. A. S. Buford, a great railroad man. The pastors of our churches in the city, all of whom were present, gave their approval of the object contemplated. A subscription of about seven thousand dollars was taken on the spot. This will easily be raised to ten thousand dollars. With this money it is proposed to build two or three chapels on the outskirts of the city for the accommodation of families and laborers who are more or less remote from the older churches. This movement is worthy of being chronicled, originating as it did with the laity of the church. They will push it to a success.

The Promises.

There is nothing more inspiring to a man than a promise that is believed. In this world of strife and toil, of disappointed desire and baffled energy, of weary labors and weak benevolence, a promise of present help and future reward is the best thing a man can have. And when he feels that this promise is made by the All-wise and All-good, "one jot or tittle" of whose word can never fail, he knows that there is nothing equal to it. To the humble, devout soul there is nothing in this broad world so full of comfort as the smallest promise of a good heavenly Father. If the Lord had left only one promise on record in relation to the future of his saints, that one promise, coming from Infinite Goodness, would have rendered his people rich forever. How opulent, then, has God made his children, for we see that his promises of good sparkle upon almost every page of his Word! How affluent do those children appear, for life is enriched and made doubly valuable by the vitalizing influences of the numerous promises of an ever-faithful Lord, and their pathway glows under the steady light of a most marvelous love!

These promises are the light of the Christian's life. In some form or other they mingle with every duty. In some way or other they are connected with every pleasure and pain, every joy and sorrow of probation. They give freshness to weary energy. They add impulse to flagging zeal. They impart zest to oft-repeated duties. They throw over all religious obligations a sacredness with which no right-thinking man will dare to trifle, and invest them with a beauty which no sane man will desire to mar. To the man whose ear is attuned to catch the harmony of divine love these promises come, mingling their sweet cadences with the discordant notes of this world's strife, and calling to mind the consoling thought that there is One who sits above the billows and holds the storms in his hand. To the man whose eye is opened to see the "beauty of holiness" these promises come, flashing their radiance down the vistas of life, and attracting the attention to the grand things which they reveal. In the darkest sorrow through which the child of God has to pass these promises belt the horizon with a line of light which, to the trusting heart, says that the sun is yet in the heavens, and a world of beauty and glory on the other side of the clouds. To the man whose soul is stayed on God these promises make weakness strong, bring "sweetness out of woe," create bows of enduring encouragement out of the tears of anguish, apply a healing balm to wounded hearts, and produce a calmness the world can not ruffle.

What a variety of promises there is in the book the Lord has given his children! Every condition of heart, every state of mind, every circumstance of life has its corresponding promise. If the Christian feels himself without strength—destitute of power to persevere in his course through the ills and trials of life—there is the blessed promise, written by the hand of unfailing sympathy: "I will help thee!" If he feels himself friendless—if he has to sit down by the waysides of the world and complain, like the Psalmist, "No man careth for my soul"—there comes the promise of infinite and condescending love to cheer his lonely heart: "I will never leave thee!" And we might go through the catalogue of life's circumstances and draw from the Bible a promise of hope and help for each.

The Christian should aim to live among these promises. Here should be his home. As Adam lived among the flowers of Eden, so the regenerated man should live among these promises with which the beneficent hand of the Lord has dotted and fringed the garden of religion. He should open his eyes and look at their marvelous beauty. He should take deep inspirations of the atmosphere which is full of their fragrance. All the sweetness of life is right here, and the Christian should try to extract it. The higher joys of existence begin among these promises and end in their accomplishment. Here, then, let every child of God abide, realizing these joys and qualifying his soul for the enjoyment of higher and yet still higher joys as the years of life run out into the unending cycles of eternity!

Meeting of the Trustees of the Seashore Camp Ground.

Nothing more plainly indicates the growth of grace in our church members than their willingness to make sacrifices for the good of the cause. This was plainly evidenced at the recent annual meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Seashore Camp Ground, held in Felicity Tent, March 28. Nearly every member of the Board was promptly present, the absent being unavoidably detained. The Board is composed of Bros. W. J. Hearin, William Otis, A. C. Danner, C. H. Lindsey, of Mobile; J. H. Eakin, of Montgomery, Ala.; Dr. R. F. Griffin, Moss Point, Miss.; J. P. Carter, Hattiesburg, Miss.; J. G. Grant, J. H. Keller, E. P. Mackie, W. B. Thomson, J. H. Campman, Philip Werlein, B. O. L. Rayne and D. L. Mitchel, of New Orleans.

Bro. Hearin, of Mobile, the president, called the meeting to order, and cordially welcomed the members; also the three presiding elders, Rev. Drs. A. J. Lamar, Charles F. Evans and T. S. West—these ministerial brethren having been invited to sit in council with the Board. Bro. C. H. Lindsey was elected secretary pro tem. The various committees reported the condition of the camp ground, in brief, as follows: "Finance"—Debt considerably reduced, with every prospect of its complete extinction at an early date. The Executive Committee stated that the grounds were much improved, and that all repairs and preparations necessary for the approaching camp meeting, including the rebuilding of wharves and bath-houses, will be pressed with vigor. The new road and depot, erected mainly through the efforts of Bros. J. H. Keller and A. C. Danner, have added much to the beauty of the grounds, and will increase the pleasure and comfort of visitors. Bro. Lindsey reported that he had purchased one of Bro. Otis' tents, and Mrs. David Zable notified the Board that she had purchased Mrs. Dalton's tent, and would repair it. She has purchased the lot adjoining, on which she will erect a cottage. Several parties were anxious to secure lots for tents, and it is thought there will be several new tents erected before camp meeting. Information as to tents and lots for sale will be furnished by any member of the Board of Trustees.

The following officers were unanimously re-elected: W. J. Hearin, president; J. H. Keller, vice-president; J. G. Grant, recording secretary; P. Werlein, treasurer. Bro. E. P. Mackie, who had occupied the position of financial secretary for the past fifteen years, declined re-election owing to ill-health, and to the fact that he would be absent from this country during camp meeting. The Board reluctantly accepted his declination; and tendered him a vote of thanks for his highly appreciated labors in the past. D. L. Mitchel was elected as his successor.

Among the important matters transacted were the authorization of the increase of the Board of Trustees to seventeen—eight from the New Orleans district, five from the Mobile district, four from the Seashore district. The time of holding the camp meeting was changed, so that it will commence on Friday night, July 5, and close with Monday evening's services, July 15. The requests of the lady delegates of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, who were also present during this session of the Board—that a day for the Woman's Christian Temperance Union be arranged by the Board of Trustees, and that there be no gate fees on that day—were granted, and their day fixed to be Tuesday, July 16.

The Two Pictures.

The Southwestern Methodist, last week, in an article on "A More Spiritual Church," painted two pictures, which we reproduce for our readers without adding one single touch of the pencil:

1. We have seen pastors, who, in their effort to get more religion into the church, called the members together—such as would come—and closed the door to pray for power from on high to descend and make all things right; and while they prayed, bickerings in the church and alienations remained, and a worldly, selfish spirit held sway.

2. We have seen others who, while they prayed, remembered the sick and poor in their prayers; called the afflicted of their own congregation by name; spoke in their daily conversation of the need of this sister or brother; suggested acts of kindness which the members of the church might do those about them; led the way and set the example in what they suggested; spoke kindly of a brother when others censured; commended the woman who sat up with her neighbor's sick child; the brother who paid the poor family's rent; the example of the mother who ruled in a model household; and thus, by throwing the light of Christian teaching upon all the common affairs of life and seeking to develop Christian faithfulness in them, lifted up the whole church and lightened and blessed the whole community.

Which, think you, is the better way?

Country Trip.

The editor enjoyed a short trip to the country last week, spending the Sabbath with Bro. Wimberly's people at Donaldsonville. The growth of this congregation is almost phenomenal. We preached to 165 people, where two years ago there was not a "corporal's guard." The Sunday-school, not yet a year old, is in a flourishing condition and increasing weekly. The hospitality of the Donaldsonville Methodists is after the New Testament pattern, and we enjoyed it after the apostolic fashion. The country is putting on her spring robes, and so charming did she appear, that we had to hasten back to dust and noise, lest we be fascinated by her siren songs to a fatal repose.

Miss Willard fixes the date of her visit to the Mississippi Convention of the W. C. T. U., at Crystal Springs, April 19, 20, 21. The convention will begin Friday, April 19, and continue through Monday, April 22. Miss Willard will be in Columbus, Miss., April 14; in Meridian, April 16; in Jackson, April 17.

Notes.

This will do to remember, brother preacher. The New York Advocate says:

Not the minister who preaches the greatest sermon, or enrolls the largest number of names on the church register during revival meeting, or publishes most of what he says and does in the newspapers, but the steady, tireless preacher who fills his pulpit well and attends every prayer-meeting and every session of the Sunday-school, and does all the work of a pastor faithfully, is the man who builds up the kingdom of God most.

An exchange has this: "Get the denomination wide awake by proposing something suited to stir denominational enthusiasm, and there will be means for all we need." The thing has been proposed to the Methodists of Mississippi and Louisiana in the endowment of their college, and now let the preachers everywhere "stir denominational enthusiasm," and we shall soon be rejoicing in colleges endowed and well equipped. Brethren, stir up the people; again we say, Stir up "the people called Methodists."

The Salvation Army has taken a new departure in New York. Mrs. Ballington Booth, the daughter-in-law of Gen. Booth, the head of the army, "has found her way into society circles and is holding parlor conferences, which are crowded and sympathetic. So favorable has been her reception, that parlors have proved insufficient, and New York society finds itself met with the curious spectacle of fashionable assemblies gathering in the Barracks and at Association Hall."

About the preachers' "blue Monday," a recent writer discoursed as follows:

If preachers go into their pulpits on the Sabbath-day with an honest preparation for the work they have to do, yet trusting most in divine aid, as they should, so that they are enabled to deliver their messages "in demonstration of the spirit and with power," why, when Monday comes, should they call it a "blue day?" When we have made ourselves weary by hard work in the best cause on earth; when, with the Spirit's help, we have given our flocks the best that was in us, we ought to say, I can rest to-day with a good conscience, and Monday shall be to me an extra Sabbath, without a blue streak in it.

Why should we repine at the lowliness of our lot or at the seeming littleness of our work! The duty at hand should always engage our most earnest attention. That is what our Lord means by watching, and he says: "Blessed are those servants whom when their Lord cometh shall find so doing." It is reported that Chrysostom remarked of one of old: Paul, after working miracles, stood in his workshop at Corinth and stitched hides of leather together with his hands; and the angels regarded him with love and the devil with fear.

"Official dignity" is a humbug unless it grows out of earnest and diligent attention to the duties of office.

Preaching is always an interesting subject, because by it the church is to be built up, sinners saved and the world evangelized. This, then, from Mr. Spurgeon, in regard to effective preaching, will command thoughtful attention:

Sometimes the sermon is dull because the preacher has not done his best to gather things, new and old, and at other times because he has not waited upon the Lord in prayer, and so has not drawn upon the fresh springs which are found only in the eternal hills. Work hard at your sermons, that it may be easy to preach them; fill them with good matter, that it may be pleasant to hear them; and pray the Holy Spirit to anoint them with fresh oil, for so they will never be barren or unprofitable.

An exchange thus sums up the doings of the last Congress:

At noon, March 4, the Fiftieth Congress of the United States came to an end. In length (nearly fourteen months), in laws enacted (1,791), in presidential vetoes (278), it has surpassed all its predecessors. A fact worth pondering is the attention given to private bills; of these passed, 1,241 were of this character. The act for which the centennial Congress will be longest remembered is the admission of the four new States. After this its enactments of greatest value, have been the creation of the Department of Agriculture, its call for a conference of South and Central American nations and for a marine conference, the incorporation of the Nicaragua Canal Company, directing that an attempt be made to construct water reservoirs in the dry regions of the West, and the improvement of the quarantine service.

That is for the pulpit. This from the same source is for the pew and, possibly, for the pulpit, too:

If one of your neighbors should try the experiment of living a whole year on five or six turkey dinners eaten between Christmas and New Year's day, you would turn philanthropist at once, and use your eloquence in urging his friends to put him in the lunatic asylum; but he would not exhibit more foolishness in such an attempt than the man or woman who tries to live spiritually a whole year on the grace received at a camp-meeting, or at a winter revival. The devil has the victory in every combat with those spiritual weaklings who feed on nothing but the stale bread of a past experience. Spiritual victory for us is inseparable from an answer to the prayer, "Give us this day our daily bread."

Personal and Otherwise.

Twenty-seven new churches were erected in Minneapolis last year.

The Holston Methodist comes to us in a new form and new dress entire. It is now an eight-page paper, with five columns to the page. We congratulate our Holston brethren upon the vigor evinced in passing "the seventeenth mile-post on the path of its pilgrimage."

Bro. McCoy, of the Alabama Advocate, has come into line. The preachers of Birmingham have spread a new carpet in his office.

The total immigration to the United States for January, 1889, was 10,272, against 13,238 for the corresponding month last year.

Mr. Spurgeon says: "As soon as a man begins to lose his religion, he wants to know who Cain's wife was."

Dr. Parker, of London, insists that until the gospel is understood and believed there is no cure for social evils."

An exchange asks this question, which you may ponder with profit: "What does it mean to be a Christian, unless that the bearer of the name is all the time trying to make others Christians?"

Rev. Dr. C. G. Andrews, of Meridian, Miss., will preach the commencement sermon at Centenary College, June 2.

John Bright, the eminent English Commoner, died March 27. He was seventy-eight years old, and has been in Parliament since 1843. He was a Quaker. An English paper says of him: "He was not a great statesman, but he was one of the most disinterested social reformers, powerful orators and honest politicians that the country has ever produced."

Miss Georgine Suthon, the first missionary from the Epi-copal Church in Louisiana to Japan, left this city last week for the field of her future work.

A subscriber, sending a postal order for subscription, apologizes for the delay in this way: "It has been raining for nearly a month and caused the street cars to be much deranged, is my excuse. The postoffice is nearly two miles off." The writer is a woman in her eighty-third year, and has been a reader of this paper from its first issue, and lives in Santa Clara county, Cal. How those old subscribers do hold on to the paper!

The Seashore Camp Meeting begins this year, Friday night, July 5, and will continue ten days, embracing two Sundays.

The Methodist parsonage at Brookhaven, Miss., was destroyed by fire last week. It was valued at $2,000, and was insured for $1,200.

Dr. White, of Mansfield, La., writes: "We are moving on pleasantly in this charge. My health is better."

Postal Card Reports.

—Rev. W. W. Binford writes from Donaldsonville, La.: "I am meeting with splendid success in all kind of religious work except subscriptions to the ADVOCATE; but am hopeful in even this, for 'where there is a will, there's a way.' The distribution of the Bible I prosecute with vigor, but regret to say that Catholics seem to have a terrible antipathy to my work. Children are anxious to examine, and their mothers say, 'Don't you know that it is a sin to even look into a Protestant book?' But God blesses us and we go ahead."

—Rev. P. A. Johnston writes from Florence, Miss.: "I have just completed my first round on Brandon district. I think I can safely say there is advancement all along the line, spiritually and financially. The preachers, most of them, have the foreign missionary money in hand. I am very well satisfied that we will advance 100 per cent. in foreign missionary money this year in the district. I have been doing my best for the ADVOCATE. The preachers all tell me that they have been sending new subscribers. The hearty endorsement by a 'prominent Baptist' has enabled me to make a fine point in all Methodists who do not take the ADVOCATE."

—Rev. R. M. Blocker, writing from Sayre, La., says: "Prayer meeting coming; revival is beginning. Holy Ghost is coming with power. I feel it, and the people are feeling it. Not ready for protracted meeting until church gets right. Thank God it is getting right. Old feuds of long standing are being adjusted. Nine ladies at Rayne are praying in their prayer meetings. Received a lady to the church last Saturday and took subscription for ADVOCATE."

New Orleans Sunday-Schools.

The New Orleans District Sunday-school Union of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, held its forty-second annual meeting, Tuesday evening, March 26, in Carondelet Street Church. There was a fair number of representatives from the various Methodist Sunday-schools of New Orleans, and the exercises were conducted by Rev. Charles F. Evans, presiding elder.

The report of the general supervisor, Rev. D. L. Mitchel, was comprehensive, and brought out many important, encouraging and startling facts concerning Sunday-school work in this city. He reported all our schools to be in excellent condition, in charge of capable and consecrated officers and teachers, who were doing all in their power to bring the children to Christ. Yet we reach only a small part of the children in our city. There are, according to the best estimates, fully 40,000 white children, not more than 5,000 of whom are in Protestant Sunday-schools. The late Archbishop Leray had informed him that he only confirmed from 4,000 to 5,000 children, annually, which shows that there are upwards of 30,000 children unsecured for religiously.

While we are ahead of other denominations—in the Sunday-school work for white children, there is much more to be done. There is an urgent need for more workers in this field, as those now there are doing all they can.

The reports from the various Sunday schools showed them all to be in excellent condition. That from Felicity Street Sunday-school was especially good.

Bro. J. G. Grant spoke of the great need of teaching teachers to teach, and it was resolved that the presiding elder and preachers be requested to organize a normal class for the benefit of all the schools.

The following officers were elected to serve for the ensuing year: President, J. G. Grant; vice president, W. B. Thomson; secretary, A. F. Godat; treasurer, E. P. Mackie; general supervisor, D. L. Mitchel.

May 12 is the date fixed for holding the annual celebration, in which all the schools shall take part.

It was determined that the work of the Union be prosecuted with its old-time vigor, and that it again be made the factor it once was in Sunday-school work in New Orleans.

BOOKS.

THE STORY OF WASHINGTON, THE NATIONAL CAPITAL. By Charles H. Todd. Illustrated. G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York. For sale at 150 Canal street. Price, $1 75.

This is a very interesting story well told. The great majority of cities have been founded, as it were, by accident, but Washington City was deliberately founded in the woods. The whole town was surveyed and laid off before a house was built. How exciting were the debates in Congress about the founding of the Capital! So much so, that Alexander Hamilton declared that he feared it would dissolve the Union. But it was finally agreed to accept the offer of territory from Virginia and Maryland as a site for the Capital, and the corner-stone of the Capitol was laid amid great ceremonies, September 18, 1793, and in October, 1800, the government was removed from Philadelphia to the "City in the Wilderness." Washington was not much of a city before the late Civil War; since that it has become the most beautiful city on the continent. This story is well written and well worth perusal.

Literary Notes.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co. have just issued a classified catalogue of their books by Western writers, from which it appears that nearly fifty of the authors whose works they publish "hail from" at least as far West as Ohio and Illinois. Among the authors represented are Gen. Lew Wallace, Joseph Kirkland, Rufus King, John Hay, the late Alice and Phœbe Cary, the Platts, the late E. R. Sill, Edith M. Thomas, Miss Murfree (Charles Egbert Craddock), Bret Harte, Wm. D. Howells and "Octave Thanet."

Sir Charles Dilke has been traveling in India, and will present the results of his observations in the March and April numbers of the Fortnightly Review. The articles will be of a military character, dealing with the strategical defenses of the empire. This review is now issued from New York by the Leonard Scott Publication Company.

Richard Henry Stoddard, the poet, critic and editor, has been almost totally blind for the past four months. Since last June he has been afflicted with cataract on both eyes. He recently had one of the cataracts removed, and happily the result promises to be successful.

It is reported that 1,000 copies of Prof. James Bryce's "American Commonwealth" has already been sold in England, and 3,000 here.

The Missionary Year Book for 1889-90, containing Historical and Statistical Accounts of the principal Protestant Missionary Societies in America, Great Britian and the Continent of Europe, American edition by Rev. J. T. Gracy, D. D., a volume of 400 pages, one-fourth being devoted to American societies and their work, is announced for early publication by F. H. Revell, Chicago.

Centenary College.

I am rejoiced to hear of Dr. Hunnicutt's success in raising money to endow Centenary College. I do hope that a hundred thousand will be raised for the endowment before the close of this Conference year.

Dr. Hunnicutt is the right man in the right place. He is full of learning and full of practicability. He knows what to do with money. If I had a dozen sons to educate, I had rather Dr. Hunnicutt would educate them than any man in the church.

Well done for New Orleans district! Ten thousand dollars means business. May all the Methodists wake up in our Conferences, and keep the ball moving on!

E. M. HEATHINGTON.

Notice.

To the Pastors of the Methodist Churches in Mississippi:

My Dear Bros.: The third State Convention of the Young Men's Christian Association of Mississippi is called to meet in Meridian, at 10 o'clock, Thursday, April 25th, 1889, and continue its sessions till some time—the 28th. A request has been made that the Christian people of Mississippi unite their prayers, at the morning services, Sunday April 14th, next, for the blessing of the Lord upon the association throughout the State and upon the convention so soon to meet. Will you and your congregations join with us in that petition, at that time and for those objects? Hoping and believing you will thus remember the interest of the young men of our great State, and that the Lord will pour us out a great blessing upon them, I am,

Yours fraternally, J. R. BONYNS,
Chair'n of State Committee.

A fair trial of Hood's Sarsaparilla for scrofula, salt rheum, or any affection caused by impure blood, or low state of the system, will be sufficient to convince anyone of the superior and peculiar curative powers of the medicine. Buy it of your druggist. 100 Doses One Dollar.

A Good Start.

A friend, through the editor of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, sends twenty-five dollars for Sister Jackson's house. A good sister in Baton Rouge sends one dollar. Now, let the good work go on. Don't wait! Send the contributions along now! Who would fail to help build a house to shelter the widow and orphans of a Methodist preacher who gave his time, talents and life to the cause of Christ? No one. W. WIMBERLY.

Received up to date on second call:

A patent has just been granted on an ingenious contrivance, made by Mr Benjamin D. Milliken, of Somerville, Mass., for the purpose of mixing liquid and powdered substances, where the latter can not be held in solution. This will be a great convenience to manufacturers of sauces, liquid polishes and the like, where a given quantity of each ingredient must enter every package. The Machine is so constructed that an "agitator," revolving in the tank, keeps the contents in perpetual "boiling spring" motion, and, at the same time, strains the liquid. An additional device measures the quantity required for each bottle, filling the same at the rapid rate of 48 bottles per minute, or 200 gross a day. One of these machines has been in constant use since April of last year at 140 Commercial St., Boston, where it can be seen by anyone interested, pumping Parlor Pride Stove Enamel. —Exchange.

"I spend $5,000 a week in advertising, and pay a skillful man—a former newspaper editor, and a good one—$1,000 a month to do it for me. I make money by it. Advertising is the leverage with which this store has been raised up. I do not see how any large and successful retail business can be done without liberal advertising. Continuous advertising, like continuous work, is the most effective."—John Wanamaker.

THE SUN.

FOR

1889

And for the Democracy.

THE SUN believes that the campaign for the election of a Democratic Congress in 1890 and a Democratic President in 1892 should begin on or about the fourth of next March. THE SUN will be on hand at the beginning and until the end of the most interesting and important political conflict since the war, doing its honest utmost, as ever, to secure the triumph of the Democratic party and the permanent supremacy of the principles held by Jefferson, Jackson and Tilden.

The great fact of the year is the return to absolute power of the common enemy of all good Democrats—the political organization for whose overthrow THE SUN fought at the front for fifteen years, the memorable years of Grant and the Fraud Hayes, and Garfield and Arthur.

It is the same old enemy that Democrats now confront, and he will be intrenched in the same strong position. It has been carried once by brave and hopeful fighting. Do you not believe with THE SUN that the thing can be done again? Wait and see!

The hope of the Democracy is in the loyal efforts of a united press, cherishing no memories of past differences in non-essentials, forgetting everything but the lessons of experience, and that victory is a duty.

Probably you know THE SUN already as a newspaper which gets all the news and prints it in incomparably interesting shape; which chronicles facts as they occur and tells the truth about men and events with absolute fearlessness, making the completest and most entertaining journal published anywhere on earth; and which sells its opinions only to its subscribers and purchasers at two cents a copy—on Sundays four cents. If you do not know THE SUN, send for it and learn what a wonderful thing it is to be in the sunshine.

IN A GLASS HOUSE.

BY AGNES M. LEWIS.

They've got a glass house in the garden,
A little house out in the sun;
I watched it while the gardener built it
Until it was finally done.

Now what do you think it was made for?
I do not believe that you know;
But I do. Now isn't it funny?
'Tis to hurry the flowers to grow.

And I'm sure that it does, for the pansies
Have blossomed as full as can be,
And there isn't a flower in the garden,
And scarcely a leaf on a tree.

So I've wondered and wondered a long time—
Please answer me this if you can,
Do you think if I lived in one like it
I should hurry and grow to a man?

Christmas Turkeys.

Who ever heard of turkeys coming into this turkey-eating world at Christmas time?

Yet, a most veracious lady, Sister Lloyd, of Copiah county, tells me that a whole family of little gobblers had the uncommon audacity to pip their speckled shells and to step boldly forth into her yard during the troublous times of the late Christmas holidays.

The unbounded faith in Providence that these small bipeds have is certainly amazing. But, after all, they have good reason for their impudence, for they are fed and taken care of; they feel the solid ground beneath their feet, and the same blue sky bends over every one. Why shouldn't they be venturesome?

The All-Embracer, All-Sustainer, holds he not the little turkeys in his Everlasting arms?

It was real pathetic, though, to see two little orphans, of an older brood, with no sheltering breast above them, cuddling against each other to keep them warm. But, it is just as silly the way we do sometimes, when the damp weather chills, when we huddle together in the cold instead of running under the all-covering wings of Infinite Compassion and warming each other with the love wherewith we all are comforted. For we all are earthy creatures, unless we have the love of Heaven in our hearts; then, while our feet securely tread the earth, our foreheads touch the stars.

THE OLD JUDGE.

MR. EDITOR: My papa takes your paper, and he thinks it is the best that ever was. We could not get along without it. I am a little boy twelve years old. I am not going to school at this time, but expect to start soon. I will be glad when I start, for I get so lonesome when I am at home, as I have no one to play with me. I have but one sister living and no brothers. I have two pets, a cat and a dog. Their names are Watch and May. Our beloved pastor, Bro. Ellison, was not sent back to us this year, which was sincerely regretted by the church and community. He was our pastor for four years, and he was beloved by all who knew him. He was so good and kind; his influence will be long felt here. Our new pastor for this year is Bro. Howard. I think we will love him also, as he looks to be good and kind. With love to the little cousins and kind wishes to the editor, I remain,

Your little friend,
THOMAS L. VARDEN.
PINE GROVE, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: I love to read the nice little letters in the children's corner; so please let me in this time. I am the youngest of twelve children, and I was six years old last Christmas day. You see when Santa Claus comes around he makes me birthday presents as well as Christmas gifts. Mamma takes your valuable paper, and says she can not afford to be without it. I am going to school with my little brothers, Fleming and Guy. My studies are spelling, reading and writing. I stand ahead in my class. I have no pets, only my hooks. Perhaps I can answer the little cousin who asked the question: "Who was it that had six fingers on each hand?" It was the giant's son, found in Chronicles xxv, 6. Let me ask, By whom was the unwholesome waters healed, and how?

LUCY A. WIMBERLY.
LOVE'S LAKE, Louisiana.

A little girl who is given to imitate her elders in words and ways, drew herself up in a dignified manner at breakfast recently, and said to her elder brothers and sisters: "Children, if you please, we will suspense with that perdiculous noise."

MR. EDITOR: As you are so kind in giving us little folks a column in your nice paper, I will try to write you a short letter. My papa is a preacher, and we are now living in the pine hills in Grant parish. We used to live on the beautiful prairies of Vermillion, and I like them best. I will answer James H. Hoffpauir's question: The chapter in the Bible in which the word "twelve" occurs twenty-three times, is I. Chronicles xxv.

Your little friend,
ELIZA E. HOFFPAUIR.
ADA, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: As I have not written to your valuable paper in so long a time, I will make another attempt. I am a little girl twelve years old. I have no pets but my brother. He has a pet squirrel, and it is such a nice pet. I am not going to school now. I will close by answering Mary S. Hodges' question: The shortest chapter is found in Psalms cxviii. I remain,

Your little friend,
A. B. TALLEY.

The Tools of Animals.

Animals do not know enough to make their own tools as a man can, but God has given them ready-made ones.

The tail of a fish is his sculling oar. He moves it first to one side, and then to the other, using his fins as balances to guide his motion. If the fish moves fast and wants to stop, he straightens out his fins just as the rower of a boat does his oars.

A man makes a tool for drilling wood, but the woodpecker has a drill in his own bill, and when he drills holes in the trees in search of food, you can hear the click of his tool just as you would the man's

The drill of the woodpecker has another tool inside, a sort of insect catcher. On the end is a bony thorn with sharp teeth, like barbs on a fish-hook. As he works and finds an insect, he opens the drill and sends out this barbed tongue and draws it into his mouth.

Some animals have tools to dig with. The hen digs for herself and her chickens. The pig uses his snout, and roots away under the mud. The elephant uses his strong tusks, and the queer underground galleries of the mole are made with heavy claws with which he plows and digs.

The woodchuck, too, is a great digger. His hind feet are shovels to dig the hole where he lives. The beaver uses his brond, flat tail as the mason does his trowel, spattering and smoothing the mud with it as he builds the walls of his cabin; while his sharp, powerful teeth are his saws, with which he gnaws off large branches of trees to build his dams.

There is no limit to God's power in supplying the needs of the creatures he has made.—Selected.

Distanced in the Race.

Why should Dr. Pierce's medicines not distance all competitors in amount of sales, as they are doing, since they are the only medicines sold by druggists possessed of such wonderful curative properties as to warrant their manufacturers in guaranteeing them to cure the diseases for which they are recommended. You get a cure or money paid for them returned. The Doctor's "Gold n Medical Discovery" cures all diseases caused by derangement of the liver, as biliousness, indigestion or dyspepsia; also all blood, skin and scalp diseases, tetter, salt-rheum, scrofulous sores and swellings and kindred ailments.

Don't hawk, hawk, and blow, blow, disgusting everybody, but use Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy and be cured.

"Where's the scissors?" asked Edie. "I want to make some women." "O I wouldn't," said roguish Uncle Joe, who loves dearly to tease his small niece. "There are women enough in this house already." "Well, I ain't going to make really, truly ones," answered Edie earnestly, "cause you know, I have'nt got the ment."—Youth's Companion.

Household.

Spoiled Husbands.

In the flush and fervor of her early wedded love the young wife feels that she can not do enough, can not do too much, for her husband. Months of preparation have put her own wardrobe in perfect order, and she usually has little else to do than to wait on him. The fresh carpets and new furniture are easily kept in order, and the cares of the small household are not sufficient to fill her time. Why should she not do everything for him, so that he need have no care of himself? So she sponges his clothes, keeps his drawers and closets in order, puts away his things, and encourages on his part a condition of general domestic helplessness.

This is all very delightful to both parties for a time, and the husband soon becomes accustomed to his wife's devotion, and takes it as a matter of course. As cares and duties increase, the wife begins to find herself burdened with labors that should be shared rather than monopolized. She begins to find that she has helped in forming very inconvenient habits in her husband. She realizes that it would be a great relief to her if he would sponge his own clothes instead of expecting her to do it, that he would save her many steps if he would keep the run of his own personal belongings, and remember where he laid his cuff-buttons, his umbrella, his hat, his papers, his slippers.

As children come, one after another, she is compelled not only to leave him largely to care for himself in these respects, but to call on him to wait upon her, and help her bear the increasing number of burdens laid on her. This will be easier for him if she has not spoiled him by undue indulgence, if she has begun as she can hold out through all the years.—New York Christian Advocate.

"Lady."

There is something ludicrous and irresistibly comic, says The Household, in the way and manner in which the word "lady" has come to be used. "Woman" has almost disappeared, and to call any one of the female sex a "woman" is to insult her.

"Lady" is from an old Saxon word, which meant a "loaf giver," or one who went about giving bread to the hungry. As only the rich women were able to do this, the term "lady" was gradually applied to one rich enough to give alms. Still later it was applied to all females who were rich enough to live without labor. It was a mark of distinction. But when it was broadened in its use and applied to every female it lost all of its significance. An advertisement not long ago appeared in a New York paper asking for a position as "saleswoman." It was refreshing to read it, for the vast columns are full of such words as "forelady," "saleslady," "washlady," etc.

In the old days, a girl was not ashamed to be called a "saleswoman," a "needlewoman," and so on. No one talks of a "salesgentleman" or a "foregentleman." No; "man" is used for the male sex. Is not "woman" as honorable a distinction as "man?" Let us get rid of these snobbish and silly words, and let any woman be proud of the cognomen. There is something old-fashioned but grand in the simple word, "woman."

It is a very common mistake which men make when registering at hotels, to write "John Jones and Lady." No gentleman should ever make such a ridiculous blunder. "John Jones and Wife" is the proper designation.—Selected.

A NUMBER of cases of severe Chronic Rheumatism are on record in which La-en-pi-a was the only medicine that could effect a cure. Sold everywhere.

There is a burden of care in getting riches—fear in keeping them; temptation in using them; guilt in abusing them; sorrow in losing them; and a burden of account at last to be given up concerning them.—M. Henry.

Medical experts, by the use of the Microscope, have recently discovered and classified specific living germs in the blood of all persons suffering from Malaria, and say that to cure the patient these germs must be killed. Thirty years ago Dr. Shallenberger advanced this theory as the correct one, and prepared his "Antidote for Malaria" to destroy these poisonous germs. If you have Malaria in your system, a few doses of this medicine will destroy the poison immediately, and not injure an infant. Sold by Druggists.

"Like Magic,"

THE effect produced by Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Colds, Coughs, Croup and Sore Throat are, in most cases, immediately relieved by the use of this wonderful remedy. It strengthens the vocal organs, allays irritation, and prevents the incipient Consumption; in every stage of this dread disease Ayer's Cherry Pectoral relieves coughing and induces refreshing rest.

"I have used Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in my family for thirty years and have always found it the best remedy for croup, to which complaint my children have been subject."—Capt. T. Carley, Brooklyn, N. Y.

"From an experience of over thirty years in the sale of proprietary medicines, I feel justified in recommending Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. One of the best recommendations of the Pectoral is the enduring quality of its popularity, being more salable now than it was twenty-five years ago, when its great success was considered marvelous."—R. S. Drake, M. D., Beloit, Kans.

"My little sister, four years of age, was so ill from bronchitis that we had almost given up hope of her recovery. Our family physician, a skilful man and of large experience, pronounced it useless to give her any more medicine, saying that he had done all it was possible to do, and we must prepare for the worst. As a last resort, we determined to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and I can truly say, with the most happy results. After taking a few doses she seemed to breathe easier, and, within a week, was out of danger. We continued giving the Pectoral until satisfied she was entirely well. This has given me unbounded faith in the preparation, and I recommend it confidently to my customers."—C. Cupper, Druggist, Fort Wayne, Ind.

CHAPMAN—Mrs. SALLIE CHAPMAN was born in Monroe county, Ga., January 23, 1839. Her maiden name was Freeman. Sister Chapman in early girlhood made a profession of religion, and at once connected herself with the Methodist Episcopal Church, at whose communion she lived, before whose authority she bowed, and within whose gates she died, suffered, fought and triumphed after nearly two-score years and ten; and all when on the evening of February 15th, 1889, her spirit quietly and beautiful left its tenement of clay and put on its immortality. How grand is the death of the righteous! Since the day of her connection with the church, she has walked in her heavenly ways, and kept her precepts: her whole life was but the glorious embodiment of the beautiful virtues, so characteristic of every life hid with Christ in God." As a daughter, she was obedient; as a wife, she was faithful; as a mother, she was loving and true, ever easily endeavoring to instill into the life entrusted to her care those Christ-like aspirations which lead out to grander attainments and more glorious aspirations by-and-by. I had the pleasure of being often at her bedside during her last illness, and I could read, sing, pray and talk with her as life's blood was slowly ebbing away. Her buoyant spirituality lifting her above the trials, disappointments and vicissitudes which so often beset the pathway through life, she swung off into the twilight of two worlds, and realized the potency of that triumphant phrase: "Death is swallowed up in victory."

GREENING—Mr. J. R. GREENING, was born in Dallas county, Ala., April 16, 1816, and died on Red river, January 6, 1889. He was sick only a few days, and before any of his family could reach him the messenger in his flight had borne his soul to its resting home. He joined the Methodist Church when about thirty years of age, and since that time, though he has had many temptations, and warred against misfortunes and sorrows, and patiently borne many crosses, he always lived as near as he could the life of an upright Christian. He leaves an aged mother, two brothers and two sisters, nieces and nephews and many friends to struggle on to that home beyond. Dear mother, weep not; go to the throne of deep affliction to God. He alone can comfort thee, and remember that there is only another link in the golden chain that draws you heavenward. A little time in its flight will carry you through the afflictions and trials of this life, and you will soon reach the pearly gates of the paradise of God.

LULU.

MADISON—The subject of this notice, Mrs. JANE P. MADISON, was born in Shelby county, Ala., October 28, and died in Ashley county, Ark., December 31, 1888. She was converted and joined the Methodist Church when only eleven years old. She was married to Rev. J. H. Madison in the year 1846. Sister Madison was for more than forty years a true, consistent and useful member of our Church. During her sickness, which lasted for more than a week, her sufferings were very great, yet she was never heard to complain. She said, "Thy will of the Lord be done," and when the last summons came, without a murmur or a struggle, she quietly fell asleep in the arms of her Master. She leaves an aged husband and seven children, together with many friends, to mourn her death. They sorrow not as those who have no hope. May God bless the bereaved husband and children, and may they all meet again in heaven, where God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes and sorrow and parting shall be no more!

J. O. BENNETT, P. C.

BOONE—Sister JANE BOONE, daughter of Rev. J. H. and Jane Madison, was born November 2, 1839, in Ashley county, Ark. She professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in early childhood, and lived a consistent member thereof till August 4, 1888, when she sweetly fell asleep in the arms of Jesus. In 1879 she was married to Mr. William R. Boone, her now bereaved husband, who, with five little children, are left in lonelliness and sorrow. May God bless the sorrowing ones, and may they all meet again in heaven sweet-by-and-by!"

BAL.—JANE ANNA VICTORIA, born March 16, 1886; died December 21, 1888. MARY ALMA, born September 1887; died February 13, 1889. These above were children of Dr. C. [illegible] and Martha E. Watson, of [illegible] parish, La. They were recognized as subjects of the Savior's kingdom and baptized into the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, by their pastor, about the first of December, 1888. The gentle Shepherd has now gathered them into the church above. The parents are lonely, but rejoice in the expectation of meeting their dear loved ones again.

J. F. WYNN.

ELLIS—After a short illness Mrs. MARY J. ELLIS departed for heaven, February 11, 1889. In answer to her prayer for years, her every child was present at the closing scene. She was born, September 23, 1820, in Shelby county, Ky., and married Col. R. M. Ellis, February 1, 1838. At a camp meeting, near Port Gibson, Miss., in 1838, during a sermon by Rev. Dr. C. K. Marshall, she saw the folly and sin of a worldly life and immediately made a permanent gift of her heart to the Savior, and her life to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. She came to New Orleans in 1841, and joined the Poydras Street Church; but in 1844 removed her membership to the Andrew Chapel—since the Felicity Street Church—and there continued it till the end. In her younger days her personal beauty was a matter of universal remark. Being of a sunny temperament and fond of society, she found abundant opportunities for the use of her conversational talent, and was easily the charm of every social circle she entered. Polished and disciplined in the best school of her native State, quick in perception, ready and fluent in expression and fervidly religious, she was soon charged with church responsibilities which she cheerfully accepted and faithfully executed.

For many years she was assistant superintendent of the Sunday-school, and teacher first of the Bible, and subsequently of the infant class. From her pen came many of the speeches recited at the Union Sunday-school celebrations. Her gifts in elocution were attested by the proficiency of those performances. When the first Felicity was built she made a successful canvass for subscriptions among the ships and steamboats. She raised the money to buy the first communion service and the first pulpit cushion. Her husband presented the first Bible used in the new edifice. She selected the millenial design and inscription for the Sunday-school banner, and, in company with Mrs. John G. Parham, raised the money to pay for it. After the epidemic, in 1853, she conceived the idea of providing for the Protestant orphans, and, with a meeting in her own parlor, proceeded to organize the movement to build our present Seventh Street Protestant Orphans' Home, of which she was for a long time the secretary. When the building was ready she and Mrs. William S. Mount washed and dressed for bed the first children who occupied it. She exemplified both sides of Christian charity with liberality of gift and kindness of speech. Like her sainted pastor, Bishop Parker, it was hard to find guilt so malign or excessive for which she had no word of palliation. Taking all her cares and sorrows to the mercy seat, she delighted to testify that Jesus answers prayer. Though an extensive reader of religious and miscellaneous books, she prized most her Bible, which she read through many times. Her pencil marks appear throughout; but the devotional parts, and especially the promises, were evidently pondered over the longest and most frequently. She habitually attended all the church services when possible, and every pastor will testify to her excellence as a hearer. Many a time has the writer caught inspiration from her eager attention and tearful sympathy with his efforts. She found out who were the poor, and who the afflicted in the congregation, and with purse and prayer and saintly conversation, like her Master, "went about doing good." Though her own family was large, three orphan children were by her raised, educated and prepared for useful positions in society. She had the gift of reading aloud well, and the lighting of the evening lamp was the signal for assembling the entire family to hear "ma" read the paper or some useful book. Her tender devotion and matronly strength of character was the encouragement and support of both husband and children. Though for nearly five years a widow, among her latest memorable words were these, "I feel as much a wife as ever." For church and for her children especially her life was a typical self-sacrifice.

Like fruit upon which the summer suns had shone and autumn frosts fell, she mellowed and sweetened for the harvest-time and grew brighter in hope and faith and charity day by day. For the last twenty-five years she was ready at almost any hour for the Master's call, and when it came she heard it without a tremor, and responded without a sigh of regret or moment's faltering of faith.

Precious woman, lovely sister, tender mother, at eventide we say farewell, with the confident expectation of meeting in the morning. May the promises of tearful children at the parting hour hold them strongly in the hour of trial and be the means of that sweet and perpetual reunion they covet!

Pronounced Correct.

The Warren Republican, of Williamsport, Warren Co., Ind., printed the following in August, 1885:

"Rev. Colbrath Hall, of Pike, was in town yesterday. He reports the wonderful recovery of his wife within the past eighteen months, after being a confirmed invalid for over thirty years from spinal trouble. About eighteen months ago she began the use of Drs. Starkey & Palen's Compound Oxygen Treatment and she attributes her recovery to the use of that medicine. She is now able to walk, to get in and out of a buggy, to take rides, etc. All acquainted with the Rev. Mr. Hall and his family will rejoice with them in this remarkable recovery."

In a letter dated September 2, 1885, Mrs. Sarah N. Hall writes from West Lebanon, in the same county, regarding her own case:

"I have read the paragraph referred to in the Warren Republican, and pronounce it correct."

We publish a brochure of 200 pages regarding the effect of Compound Oxygen on invalids suffering from consumption, asthma, bronchitis, dyspepsia, catarrh, hay fever, headache, debility, rheumatism, neuralgia; all chronic and nervous disorders. It will be sent, free of charge, to any one addressing DRS. STARKEY & PALEN, 1529 Arch St., Phila., Pa.; or 331 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal.

Something Electricity Is Doing.

Under the title, "Something Electricity is Doing," Charles Barnard writes in the March Century:

"To the student of social science the electric motor is full of suggestions for the future. If power can be subdivided and conveyed to a distance, why may not our present factory system of labor be ultimately completely changed? People are huddled together under one roof because belts and shafts are so pitiably short. If power may traverse a wire, why not take the power to the people's homes, or to smaller and more healthful shops in pleasanter places? To-day we find sewing-women crowded into a hot, stuffy room, close to the noise, smell, dust, and terrible heat of some little steam engine at one end of the room. The place must be on a lower floor because of the weight of the engine and the cost of carrying coal up stairs. Let us see how the work may be done with motors. We may take the elevator in a wholesale clothing-warehouse on Bleecker street and pass through the salesroom to the top floor. The building is lofty and of light construction, and yet, we find in the bright and pleasant attic above the housetops a hundred girls, each using power. They are seated at long tables, each one having a sewing machine, and secured to the under side of the table is a small electric motor, one to each machine. The operator has only to touch a foot pedal and the motor starts, giving about one-tenth of a horse-power, at very high speed. If the speed is too fast it can be regulated at will by the pressure of the foot on the treadle. There is no heat, no dust or ill-smelling oil, and only a slight humming sound, the sewing machine itself making more noise than the motor. The room is sweet, clean, and light, and it is in every respect a healthful workroom. If we look out of the window we see two insulated wires passing under the sash down to the electric-light wires on the poles below. There are people who cry out against the overhead wires and would pull them all down. Some day they will be buried underground. Meanwhile, is it not an immense gain for these working girls to be placed in a quiet, sunny room, far from the maddening engine? In another shop on Broadway we may see a different arrangement. A two-horse-power motor takes its current from an electric-light wire in the street and redistributes its power to shafting placed under the work-table. Each operator with a touch of the foot throws her machine into gear, and takes her share of the two-horse power."

The artesian wells of Dakota are probably the most remarkable for pressure, and the immense quantity of water supplied of any ever opened. More than a hundred of such wells, from 500 to 1,600 feet deep, are today in successful operation, distributed throughout twenty-nine counties, from Yankton, in the extreme south, to Pembina, in the extreme north, giving forth a constant, never-varying stream, which is in no wise affected by the increased number of wells, and showing a guage pressure in some instances as high as 160, 170, 175, and 187 pounds to the square inch. This tremendous power is utilized, in the more important towns, for water supply, fire protection, and the driving of machinery, at a wonderful saving on the original cost of plant and maintenance, when compared with steam. In the city of Yankton a forty-horse-power turbine-wheel, operating a tow-mill by day and an electric-light plant by night, is driven by the force of water flowing from an artesian well, the cost of obtaining which was no greater than would have been the cost of a steam engine developing the same power, not counting the continual outlay necessary (had steam been employed) for fuel, repairs, and the salaries of engineer and fireman. What has been accomplished through the aid of natural gas and cheap fuel in building up manufactories elsewhere, may some day be rivalled on the prairies of Dakota by tapping the inexhaustible powers stored in nature's reservoirs beneath the surface.—P. F. McClure, in Harper's Magazine.

CHEAPEST FURNITURE HOUSE IN NEW ORLEANS

J. G. GRANT
50 and 52 Baronne Street,
OFFERS THE FOLLOWING SUGGESTIONS:

THERE are two ways to make money. One is to earn it; the other is to save it. There are two ways of saving money. When you save a dollar by putting it in the bank you do well, but when you save a dollar by shrewd purchasing you do better. The first is saving; the second is in reality earning. So there are two ways of earning money--by labor and by wise purchasing.

LET ME SAY A WORD ABOUT PURCHASING:

The FIRST THING to learn in order to become a successful purchaser is that price means nothing until you have seen the goods. The fact that Bedroom Suits, for instance, cost $100 in one store and $65 in another tells you nothing. The $100 suit may be worth $125, while the $65 suit may not be worth carrying away. It is only when you have compared the goods as well as the prices that you are in a position to judge of what is cheap and what is not. Goods may be too cheap sometimes. Prices don't always tell the whole story. Either know the goods or know the dealer. If he has a reputation for liberality and straightforward dealing, people soon find it out. When you learn that he is carrying a larger and better stock, and that his trade is increasing rapidly, both in the city and the adjoining states, why it means something. It means that his business methods have been approved, that people have discovered his liberal ways and taken advantage of them, and it points you the direction for your next purchase.

The SECOND PRECEPT in successful purchasing is that the best is always cheapest in the end. Many people who have never visited my warerooms have the idea that only cheap goods are sold because I do not put on much outside style and occupy a showy and very high priced store, but one visit will prove that this is a great mistake. Remember that there is a big difference between CHEAP GOODS and GOODS CHEAP. Go elsewhere for cheap goods, but come here for goods cheap. The man who sells cheap goods sells his customers at the same time. I am not in that line of business. The public are beginning to understand the difference, and my trade proves it very clearly. A word to the wise is sufficient. Call and see how cheap fashionable furniture of the best quality can be sold.

PERUNA THE THING TO TAKE FOR NEURALGIA.
When Neuralgia of the Face got its clutches on Mrs. E. Kenner, of New Orleans, she thought her doom had come. From morn till night, from night till morn, she knew no sleep, no rest—nothing but one constant, racking, tearing, burning pain. Eminent doctors tried in vain to give her relief. Had not PE-RU-NA finally been prescribed, she feels that the pain would have killed her. PE-RU-NA quickly banished all her pain, and she is now perfectly well. Dr. Hartman's "Ills of Life," sent free by the Pe-ru-na Medicine Co., Columbus, Ohio, will give further evidence of what PE-RU-NA can do. PE-RU-NA is sold by all druggists—$1 a bottle; 3 for $5. DOMESTIC.

Murat Halstead, of the Cincinnati Commercial-Gazette, who was nominated by President Harrison to be minister to Germany, was rejected by the senate on March 28.

The Elyton Land Company, of Birmingham, Ala., won the suit in which about $1,000,000 was sued for by the heirs of John Timmons, of South Carolina, in the United States Court.

Recently the assurance was conveyed to the widow of Stonewall Jackson, at the request of one who represented that he spoke for the President and Postmaster General Wanamaker, that they desired her to accept an appointment as postmistress of Lexington, Va. The position was declined by Mrs. Jackson.

Chicago, Ill., was the scene of a large conflagration on March 29. The loss is estimated at $300,000.

The largest real estate deal of the season, involving a million dollars, was consummated on March 30, in the Inter Ocean coming into possession of the northwest corner of Dearborn and Madison streets, Chicago, Ill.

A jury in the Common Pleas Court, Cincinnati, on March 30, returned a verdict for $2,250 for Morris & Co., against Bricklayers Union No. 1, for damage sustained by reason of the defendant organization instituting and carrying on a boycott against the plaintiffs.

The members of the New Orleans Spiritualistic Association celebrated the forty-first anniversary of modern spiritualism on March 21.

The Baltimore Manufacturer's Record states that the amount of capital invested in Southern industries during the quarter closing March 31, 1889, is over $58,000,000, which is twenty million dollars greater than for the same period in the South during 1888.

At Denver, Colo., on April 1, over 200 painters struck for a reduction in hours from nine to eight, and $2 75 per day, as heretofore received. The employing firms refuse the demands and have telegraphed East for men.

The Tradesman says that the first quarter of 1889 shows a continuance of the remarkable industrial development of the Southern States. A compilation made by the Tradesman from actual returns received by it shows that 691 industries were established in the South during the past three months, against 625 new industries established during the same period of last year.

Twelve hundred St. Louis carpenters have struck to enforce their demand for eight hours a day and 40 cents an hour as standard wages.

Mayor John Irwin (Republican) of Keokuk, Iowa, who closed the saloons one year ago, was defeated in the city election for mayor by 175 majority. The contest was an enforcement of the prohibitory law.

FOREIGN.

It is stated that the discovery of the illicit manufacture of bombs at Zurich furnished a clew to a gigantic plot existing throughout Russia for a new series of attempts upon the life of the Czar. Numerous arrests have been made in Moscow, Kieff, Odessa and various other places in Southern Russia.

Emperor William, in a recent letter to Emperor Francis Joseph, in which he intimated that the Czar was coming to Berlin immediately after the Greek Easter, offered, if agreeable to Francis Joseph, to pay an annual visit to some Austrian summer resort, as his grandfather did, and spend a pleasant holiday. The Austrian Emperor replied, thanking Emperor William for his amiable intention, but saying that he intended first to return the Kaiser's visit to Vienna, and that he would come to Berlin in May.

Dispatches from Samoa state that the American men-of-war Trenton, Vandalia and Nipsic, and the German men-of-war Olga, Adler and Eber were driven on a reef during a violent storm and totally wrecked. Ninety Americans were drowned. The German losses are ninety-six.

A prima facie case has been found against Father McFadden for participating in the murder of Police Inspector Murtin at Gweedore in February, last. He will be tried at the first assizes.

The French Chamber of Deputies, by a vote of 266 to 259, voted urgency for a bill providing that slanderous and insulting press attacks on public officials shall be summarily dealt with by a police tribunal.

The steamer Countess of Flanders was run into off Dunkirk, in Dover Strait, on March 30, by the Belgium mail boat Princess Henrietta. The collision occurred during a dense fog. The former sank almost immediately, and fourteen persons were drowned.

Count Herbert Bismarck, during his visit to England, made arrangements for a grand public demonstration on the occasion of Emperor William's visit to England. An English squadron will meet the German squadron accompanying the Emperor, and festive receptions will be given at London and Windsor.

The strike outbreak is so general in Prussia that it would appear to be organized co-operation of the trade centres. In Hamburg, the masons, plumbers and carpenters are out on the refusal of their employers to increase their wages. At Elberfeld and Barmen, the manufacturing works are closed and the men are out. At Crefeld, the workmen will strike on Monday unless their demands are granted. At Nuremburg the carvers and toy makers are out. The Berlin masons, at a meeting, decided to inaugurate a general strike in the building trades.

Arrangements have been made for a public debate in London some time in May between Mr. Henry George and Mr. Samuel Smith, a member of Parliament. Mr. Smith has published a number of essays on political and economical subjects.

In all kinds and degrees of sprains Salvation Oil, with rest, will effect a speedy cure.

Of 60,000,000 American population it is said one-third use Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup.

Winona District Conference.

The District Conference for the Winona District will meet at Pickens, Thursday, May 9, at nine o'clock. Rev. J. C. Lowe will preach the opening sermon at eleven o'clock. Bishop Galloway will preside.

J. J. WHEAT.

Dr. Dorchester, in his "Christianity in the United States," gives some cheering statistics in regard to the growth of public sentiment in that direction, as evidenced by the fact that 12,132,651 persons are communicants in evangelical churches, and three-fourths of our entire population are under evangelical instruction.

The clergy of America take kindly to Life insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policy-holders.

The Episcopal Diocese of New York has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and The Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

East Tennessee, Virginia & Georgia R. R.

Well known as the Great Kennesaw Route, is now making twelve hours quicker time to Washington via New York and eastern points, with Pullman Buffet Sleepers from New Orleans to Washington without change. The mountain resorts of East Tennessee are reached in twenty-four hours, and Virginia resorts in thirty hours. For tickets, sleeping accommodation, circulars, schedule, etc., call at Kennesaw ticket office, 22 Carondelet street.

The whole of the issue of 40,000 shares of the Nicaragua Canal Construction Company has been subscribed for at $50 a share, and the first instalment of 10 per cent. will soon be issued at less than par.

CHEAPEST FURNITURE HOUSE IN NEW ORLEANS.—This is the heading of the advertisement of Mr. J. G. Grant's, 50 and 52 Baronne street, New Orleans. Now, we would suggest to our readers to peruse it carefully, and they will be astonished at the low prices which Mr. Grant is selling furniture for. As this gentleman is thoroughly reliable, and guarantees the smallest article that leaves his store, we feel satisfied that those who may try him once will have further dealings with him. There is no store of this character in the South that keeps a larger or finer assortment than his, and as his expenses are less than others in the same line, he has informed us that he can sell lower. Try him.—N. O. Weekly Picayune, January 24.

Change of Schedule.

Commencing Sunday, March 31, the Queen and Crescent will put on new train, leaving New Orleans 7:15 A. M., daily, arriving at Meridian 2:35 P. M.; Birmingham, 8:45 P. M.; Chattanooga, 1:45 A. M.; Lexington, 12 noon; Cincinnati, 3:30 P. M., connecting with fast train to the East. Other trains will remain as usual, except 9 P. M. train, which is withdrawn.

D. G. EDWARDS, G. P. A.

The eldest son of Mr. John Bright, who is a Liberal Unionist, will contest the seat in the House of Commons, in the central division of Birmingham, made vacant by the death of his father.

TEXT.—"Woe unto him that buildeth his se by unrighteousness, and his chambers by ong; that useth his neighbor's service without ges, and giveth him not for his work."—Jere ah xxii., 13.

It is not my purpose to analyze this xt, or handle it as is my custom. I e it simply as a starting-point for the marks to be made this morning in ference to the Louisiana State Lotry. You can not, however, read or ar the text without being struck th its apt and forcible descriptions an institution whose existence in r midst we, as a city and State, have ery reason to deplore. Lottery mpanies have an ancient beginning. e of these companies flourished in e time of Nero. He was its patron nt. You are ready at once to form ur opinion of a business or institun in which such a creature as the artless, soulless Nero was found ntitled.

The lottery company has been introced into many nations. Sometimes has been used as a source of revenue the government. The rule has been ject it almost as rapidly as it had tered; and where, for different reas, it remained, it has stayed under regret and remonstrances of the ght-thinking element of the popula-n. England soon prohibited it by w; France speedily followed suit, d so did other nations. In this untry twenty-six States of the Un- took legal action against it, prohibiting in their Constitutions the trance of such a gambling institun into their midst. In one State ly could the lottery hope for a quiet, disturbed settlement; and this was e cosmopolitan State of Louisiana. d yet, I am happy to tell you that ere was a time when even this comonwealth was constitutionally opsed to it, like her sister States. But the year 1868 we had a Republican gislature, of variegated complexion d remarkable moral pliability, at ich time the Louisiana State Lotry was born, or, in technical terms, s duly incorporated and chartered, d started out on its wonderful career. Doubtless, you are curious to know objects and intents of this comny, born at so auspicious a time and such gracious parentage. I have en the precaution to cut from the umns of one of our leading city journals the following set notice, which daily appears in print, and which offers the very information we desire. Here it is:

"The Louisiana State Lottery Company was incorporated by the Legislature in 1868 for educational and charitable purposes."

You see at once, then, that if you had ever for a moment supposed that the incorporators of this Company had any intention of making money out of the public, you were mistaken and have grossly wronged them. Judging from the notice, the originators of the movement and the stockholders are a band of philanthropists, who, becoming distressed at the spectacle of the ignorance and want and penury existing in our State, came together in the capacity of a benevolent brotherhood, with the consuming desire to do good, relieve distress and banish suffering from the land. Without doubt, the little white and green tickets which you see fluttering in the windows of various offices and stores in this city are drafts put there and waiting to be claimed by the unfortunate. If you are an embarrassed man, or in financial distress, you have only to ask one of the kind-hearted keepers for one of these drafts, present it to the first bank, where it will be promptly cashed, and you then, on the money received, can have yourself educated, or stock your house with provisions, just as you prefer. For, you must remember, this Company was incorporated and is run strictly for educational and charitable purposes. One thing here surprises me, and that is, that the Legislature should have granted these gentlemen only twenty-five years in which to dispense their bounty. Why put any limit to the life and labors of such a charitable organization! Is it customary or right to say to a benevolent order, You must bless the country for a few years only, and then dissolve? Is this the case with the great charity hospitals and asylums and homes of our land? Why discriminate! You don't find a band of philanthropic gentlemen every day who are bent on spending and being spent for the good of their race. Why, then, when they do appear in a great educational and charitable work, are they cut down to the pitiful period of twenty-five years? Is it that the Legislature had a suspicion of these gentlemen? Did the two Houses think that the words "educational" and "charitable" were mere blinds and snares, or did they fear that these gentlemen, if allowed to go on without the time-limit, would finally impoverish themselves and their families in the blind zeal—not to say, rage—of their generosity?

The notice, which I have clipped from a certain newspaper, goes on to say that the drawings—which is to say, the givings—of this noble institution take place publicly in the Academy of Music, and that two prominent gentlemen supervise the whole proceeding, and can testify that it is fairly done.

Here the question at once arises in the mind, Why this publicity? Why this watching of this great benevolence by the public, and this close scrutiny by two gentlemen to see that the gifts are impartially distributed? If you conclude to give your fortune away to a community, month by month, must you do it publicly? Ought people to watch you? Is there not a doubt, a suspicion, a reproach cast upon you by the presence of two parties, who inspect—so to speak—your liberality and turn a microscopic eye on your bank-book? Such a course would be felt as an outrage and insult.

Hence, I insist that this benevolent order, called the Louisiana Lottery, be allowed to turn its wheel and dispense its charities in strict secrecy, and thus save to the stockholders the expense of procuring two gentlemen to watch over their national almsgiving, and let their salaries go to swell the amount which is to educate the ignorant and provide for the necessitous of the State of Louisiana. The first thing you know, you will, by this personal scrutiny and supervision of their acts of charity, wound the delicate sensibilities of these philanthropists and kind-hearted stockholders of the Louisiana State Lottery Company, and they will retire from their labor of love in our midst. And what, then, will become of the uneducated and the impoverished classes of our city and State? About this so-called charitable institution—the Louisiana State Lottery—we have somewhat to say this morning.

Kentucky Correspondence.

BY JOSEPH B. COTTRELL, D. D.

A call to Lebanon, three weeks ago, to lecture for the ladies of the Methodist Church there, in furtherance of their financial measures, was occasion for my circling round through Louisville, Cloverport, Owensboro, Russellville and Bowling Green. "An Hour's Talk About Boys and Girls," in Gallatin, Tenn., for our ladies there, finished up the work of nearly two weeks' absence from home. At Louisville I spent the Sunday on which the memorial services in honor of Bishop McTyeire were held, and it fell to my lot to represent Bro. Brewer, the presiding elder, among the preachers of the city. I had held a memorial service in my own church, here in Franklin, at the hour of the Bishop's burial, the Sunday before, on which occasion I read the funeral lessons from the copy of the Discipline the Bishop used at New Orleans, in 1866, when he was ordained to the Episcopacy. As he turned from the chancel, we walked down the aisle together, and he handed me the Discipline out of which he had just read the responses. We were delegates from the same Conference, and had, at Montgomery, held many councils touching the many measures of change then urged, and we were agreed in every particular. I knew well my admiration and esteem for him; but it took his death to reveal to me my affection for him. The heavy rain of that Saturday following the day of his death was in unison with the bitter weeping in my lonely room, under this metallic roof, in the third story of the Edwards' House. The storm, with lightning and thunder, that wound up the day of cloud and rain, seemed to me, as I walked the veranda, to have come at his bidding—under his direction. Why may it not be that agencies, subordinate to Deity—personal intelligencies—upon a higher plane than that upon which we, who are in the flesh, are enacting our merely mechanical works, may control instrumentalities, combine elements and marshal forces so as to accomplish organic results? It is no more unphilosophical to suppose a tree or a vine to be thus produced than that a house or a ship should be builded by human agencies. These living, organic adornments of earth are either wrought into symmetry and beauty immediately by the infinite, personal intelligence, or they are wrought by him mediately through unseen, personal intelligencies, even as houses, machinery, ships, and the like, are thus wrought by us who are palpable to sight. "Are they not all ministering spirits sent forth to minister to those who shall be heirs of salvation?" It is "in him we (and they) live and move and have our being." Paul seemed to have had a concept somewhat after this order when he wrote that, through faith, in the Spirit, "we are come unto the New Jerusalem, * * * to an innumerable company of angels, to the spirits of the just made perfect," etc. Living forms of beauty, sentient and insensate, organic, are terms of communion, as "day unto day uttereth speech." Birds and beasts, foliage and fishes, clouds and colorings of rainbow—and all other beauties about us in the several ranges of this varied wonder we call the world—may they not be, in this high discourse of life, analogous to books and forms of art and measures of music and modulations of voice in formal discourse and in conversation? It is a royal franchise we have—is this visible, because of its being interlinked with the invisible. Death makes no disseverances.

I was telegraphed for last Saturday to join, on the train from Gallatin, a funeral cortege, and officiate at Fairview Cemetery, in Bowling Green, at the burial of the young woman I had, a few years ago, married to the young husband, who now comes along seated by the casket! In a few feet of the grave of my boy, whom I've felt to be with me all along since June 15, 1882, more possessively than were he in the flesh, I pronounced the words, "Earth to earth, ashes to ashes, dust to dust!" Then I go and gather a handful of the green grass near the headstone, upon which is simply engraved the name, John! The experiences connected with that grave were qualification of the preacher to ride on the train by the side of the venerable mother of the woman we buried; qualification to talk to her about the mysteries of the love that luvolves us in all this mingled, varied ministry, which will bring us "to know even as we are also known." Every picture must have its dark, background shading.

"The Problem of Methodism," by Dr. Boland, is yet canvassed in our Review, and in our Advocates and Methodists. I've paid my respects to it in the Quarterly, and in some of our weekly journals. It is only practicable for us now to have "conference," regarding such issues, through our journals. If the Almighty invites us to "come and reason together" with him, certainly it may be allowed to us to "confer"—to "reason together"—regarding all principles, plans and policies pertaining to this and to the life to come.

The District Conference for the Bowling Green district meets here, in Franklin, to-morrow. We anticipate having Bishop Hargrove to preside. Dr. Tigert is a member of our Quarterly Conference, and will be with us. He was pastor here, and is in high favor with my people. Dr. Poynter, with whom Tigert has recently had a tilt, through the Nashville Christian Advocate, on the trial for heresy question, has signified a purpose to be with us.

The mineral well, in the Court-House Square here, attracted many invalids last spring and summer, and it is very probable there will be more the ensuing months. The waters are certainly most effective in troubles of stomach and kidneys. I find in them a source of recuperation and restoration whenever I find myself relapsing into my old troubles. Since January 1 I've been alone. Mrs. Cottrell and my daughter having sought refuge from a Kentucky winter in the land of lakes and lemons, in Middle Florida.

A Baptist preacher, of Columbus, Miss., by name of Dobbs, addressed an open letter, through the Louisville Evening Post, of March 18, quoting largely from pedo-Baptist authorities in favor of immersion. Dr. Witherspoon had recently preached a sermon, which was reported in the Courier-Journal, claiming pouring and sprinkling as the apostolic mode. I mailed an open letter to the Post this afternoon, addressed to Dr. Dobbs, suggesting that aback of the question of mode, as also of legitimate administration of water baptism, there is another question, viz: Did Christ, in the commission, direct water baptism? He did not say baptize in or with water, and, therefore, we are left to infer from other Scriptures what he intended. John the Baptist declared the differentiation of the baptism Christ would administer from that he performed, to be just in this: that his was with water, and that Christ's would be with else and other. No water, therefore; according to John, in Christian baptism. It was only once the Master, during his three years' ministry, used the term "baptism" in connection with water. Why may we not, therefore, infer that when he commissioned his apostles to baptize, that his meaning was for them to proclaim the gospel message in the power of the Spirit, and thereby incorporate—baptize—the people into the kingdom? Paul declares that it is "by one Spirit" we are baptized into one body." This, taken with Paul's declaration in Ephesians ii, that "the law of commandments contained in ordinances is abolished," leads inevitably to the conclusion that there is no finger-touch of legalism rigidifying the genial ministries of the kingdom, under the gospel dispensation. "Jerusalem which from above is free!—the mother of us all." The churches are left to ordain rites according to exigencies of times and circumstances; to "loose and to bind" authoritatively, with assurance of ratification above, as they prophesy and serve, ceremonially and otherwise, in the spirit of Peter's confession of the Lord as "the Christ, the Son of the living God." If circumcision was substituted, legalistically—ordinally—by water baptism, "the law of commandments contained in ordinances" was not abolished, but amended merely; and the Apostle Paul was mistaken.

Texas Notes.

BY REV. R. W. WILLIAMS.

Since my last was written a number of gracious revivals have been reported. Bro. W. L. Harris has recently held a good meeting at Mineral Wells, resulting in seventy or seventy-five conversions, and sixty additions to the church. Bro. Trimble has just closed a protracted meeting at Springtown, in which he was assisted by Rev. J. M. Bond, with a large number of souls as the fruits of their labors. Bro. J. W. Adkisson, writing from Sulphur Springs, reports a great revival that wonderfully moved the town and stirred the students of the Central College. At Howe, Baird, Lancaster, Colorado, Jonesboro, and other places, the power of God was signally manifested in the conviction and conversion of sinners, and the edification of believers. Thus the good work of soul-saving goes on. Many are being turned from their sins, saved from unbelief, and brought to know Christ as their Savior. Our church and ministry are making an earnest effort to "reach the masses." Those who can read the signs of the times, see in the present condition of things a promise of increased fruitfulness, under God, during the year.

The Rev. A. P. Graves, of the Baptist Church, is becoming noted as an evangelist in Texas. He has recently held meetings at Rockdale, Belton, Sherman and McKinney, with signal displays of divine grace attending his ministry. He is said to be sound, according to the Baptist view, on close communion and unconditional perseverance; but is rather too much inclined toward union meetings with other denominations to suit some of them.

Our Baptist brethren have just closed a very profitable meeting in Weatherford, with about thirty conversions and twenty-nine additions to the church as the results.

I have received from Commissioner Foster, at Austin, a copy of his first annual report, containing some valuable statistics. The data relating to the various religious denominations is of special interest. The statistics of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in Texas are given as follows: Number of church edifices, 845; total membership, 119,505; number of traveling preachers, 564; number of Sunday-schools, 905; number of Sunday-school teachers, 6,870; number of Sunday-school scholars, 56,744; value of church property, $1,143,004. Commissioner Foster gives the Methodist Churches, North and South, credit for preserving the most complete record of work of any of the churches.

A movement, known as the Alamo Monument Association, has been set on foot, having for its object the building of a monument to commemorate the deeds of valor and heroism performed by the martyrs of the Alamo and the defenders of Texas independence. It is proposed that a general and determined effort be made throughout the State on the next anniversary of the battle of San Jacinto (April 21), to obtain contributions for this purpose. A contribution averaging ten cents for every inhabitant of Texas would make a quarter of a million dollars; and this sum ought to be raised to erect the proposed monument.

The dimensions of our State are truly imperial. Few persons at a distance, perhaps, realize the extent of her domain. Texas is thirty-five times as large as Massachusetts, and four times as large as all New England. This congressional district (the eleventh) is larger than France, with thirty-six million inhabitants. It is larger than England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales combined. There are three counties in this district, each of which is larger than Massachusetts and Connecticut together, and their combined area is a little larger than the State of Indiana, which has ninety-two counties.

WEATHERFORD, Texas.

Education.

The following paper was read and adopted at the Grenada District Conference:

Your committee, to whom was referred the subject of education, beg leave to submit the following report:

The education of the youth of our land has always attracted the attention and patronage of the more intelligent and thoughtful of our people.

As the years come and go, there is manifestly an increase of interest along the lines of educational enterprise, as evidenced by the multiplication of schools, colleges, and universities, and also the enlarged benevolence and beneficence of our people. While we note with a very great degree of pleasure these facts, there are, however, not a few who have not attained unto a just appreciation of the value of a thorough education, and are unwilling to make the necessary sacrifice to secure such a boon for their children.

That such is the case in any section of our country is our reproach, and should call forth our best and united effort to arouse our people to a proper sense of their duty to their children, their country, and to their God.

By the very terms of the great commission, "Go teach," the church of God is to play no unimportant part in the intellectual and social uplift of the world. She is to give to the youth of the land the highest and best culture; that which looks not alone to the cultivation of the mind, but to the development of a strong Christian character.

The Methodist Church in Mississippi is in the presence of her opportunity. She must go forward—to refuse is to fail; to fail will be her shame. We, therefore, offer the following resolutions:

Resolved, That we tender our gratitude to Maj. R. W. Millsaps, of Jackson, for his munificent gift of fifty thousand dollars to the Methodists of Mississippi, provided they shall raise a like sum for the endowment of a Methodist male college, to be located in our State.

Resolved, That we approve the action of the Joint Committee in providing for an active canvass of the State, and in sending forth their appeal to the people, in behalf of the endowment fund.

Resolved, That we are gratified to learn that in response to the selection of the Joint Committee, Bishop C. B. Galloway has consented to lead and direct the canvass of the State in the interest of said endowment.

Resolved, That we will do all in our power to aid in this good work, and we hereby extend to Bishop Galloway an earnest invitation to visit, at his convenience, our respective charges, and to make a personal appeal in behalf of the college.

THE GRENADA COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, we are glad to learn, is passing a rather pleasant and successful session. The work done by this institution is up to the full standard, and in every way satisfactory. The young ladies who go out from its halls readily take their places in the general work of the school and of the church, and are reflecting credit upon those who have their training in hand. We commend this institution of our church to the liberal patronage of our people, and we pledge ourselves to aid the institute in reaching, as far as possible, the girls of our several charges.

The Bishop's Cabinet.

MR. EDITOR: In a recent number of the ADVOCATE, Dr. Featherstun sets forth an issue that I believe, at least, three-fourths of the laymen would oppose—that of laymen in the Bishop's cabinet—because it would necessitate a new office in our church, wholly unnecessary.

There is no layman that could take the time that such a position would demand, unless he was compensated. To meet in the cabinet would be the least part of the work. He must be a man who would go from one point in the district to the other, visiting each charge at intervals during the year, getting the information of the men and their work and understand the need of the people. Unless he did this, he would be a "dead-head" in the cabinet; and no man could do this and attend to any other duty. In my short ministerial life I have heard more complaint among we preachers about the cabinet and its work than I have heard from the laity, and it most generally has its origin along that line. I do not think our church is ready for it. If we have episcopacy, let us stick to it, and oppose anything tending to congregationalism in our church.

THE OLD SLATE.

BY F. C. FOSSETT.

This aged slate, with shattered frame,
Through whose frail length there yawns a crack
Whose face is furrowed o'er with scars,
Like veterans from the wars come back—
Were it to gossip, I suspect,
Might yield a vivid retrospect
Of scenes both lively and severe,
Scattered along each school-boy year,

This darkened surface once contained
Monsters unknown on sea or land,
While here suspicious human forms
Were pencilled by the youthful hand;
But less the mind might puzzled be
To fix their right identity,
Beneath each one the artist wrote:
"This is a bear." "This is a goat!"

Here once convened Division's court,
Addition kept official count,
Subtraction dwindled and reduced,
And clamored for the right amount.
Their victim tried, with mind intent,
The figured fiends to circumvent,
And bending back and aching pate
Lent misery to the school-boy's fate.

When Ida scarred face was glossy black,
And firm and strong the splintered frame,
To Margaret Webb, across the aisle,
I sent some lines, and signed my name;
I only scribbled what is true—
That knives can't cut true love in two;
But she wrote back: "You silly goose,
Please put your brains to better use!"

Behind this slate were dark intrigues
And plots and schemes of mischief laid,
While jokes were cracked and apples ate
Secure behind the ambuscade—
Provided that my elbow and I,
In doing this upon the sly,
Took care the teacher's glance had seen
No "goings on" behind the screen.

Exiled unto the garret's gloom,
This battered and decrepit slate
Now spends its days in different scenes,
'Mid things cold and inanimate.
No more it dwells where life and youth
Were busy seeking Learning's truth,
But like the veteran, old and gray,
Has played its part and had its day.

The Vanderbilt Missionary Brotherhood.

The Brotherhood greatly appreciated the editorial in the Nashville Christian Advocate commendatory of their enterprise, but regretted an error into which the editor fell. The organization is not confined to the theological graduates and students of Vanderbilt University. Graduates, ex-students, and present students, of all departments of the university, are eligible to membership. The president is of the academic department, and that department is well represented on the Executive Committee. Members of the faculties of the university, and of the Board of Trust, ministers of the gospel, and friends of missions generally, are eligible to membership in the capacity of advisory patrons; and it is hoped many brethren will lend us their material and moral support.

Although the church papers universally inserted the communication, giving an account of the organization and constitution of the Brotherhood, the responses have been surprisingly few. As a consequence, there is but little money in the treasury. One of the earliest responses came from the Rev. H. C. Tucker, agent of the American Bible Society in Brazil. Bro. Tucker writes from Rio de Janeiro, November 13, 1888, as follows: "I wish to express my grateful appreciation and hearty approval of the work undertaken by the Brotherhood. I can subscribe fully to the articles of your faith. Inclosed find an order for $5, for my annual dues, if you deem me eligible to membership. I like the first article: 'To arouse missionary interest, to diffuse missionary interest among its members, to contribute to the support of representatives of Vanderbilt University in the foreign missionary work.' These three clauses have the right ring. I'll do all I can for my own support, and send you my annual dues. This movement stirs the heart of a Vanderbilt boy in a foreign field. Certainly it is born of the Holy Spirit, and will grow to the glory of Jesus Christ."

If the domestic responses were proportionate to the foreign our treasury would be overflowing. The day before Tucker wrote from Rio, the Rev. Dr. W. R. Lambuth was inditing a letter from Hiroshima, Japan, from which the following extracts are made: "The United States mail which came this morning brought the happy news of your organization into the Vanderbilt Missionary Brotherhood—a most auspicious movement at this, the critical hour in the work of evangelizing the world, the whole world for Christ. I congratulate my brethren with all my heart, and hasten to pledge my most cordial sympathy and co-operation. Enroll my name, please, upon your books, and command my voice, my hand, my pen, as far as ability and strength can go. My annual fee please draw from Dr. John by this order, or I can add my mite to those of Keys, Duke, Mosely, and Utley. You already have a constituency here, you see, and we are ready to welcome your first missionary to Japan, or to select one of your number already upon this field as your special representative."

Rev. N. W. Utley, the last gift of Vanderbilt to the foreign work, writes at length of the openings and necessities in his field. Under date of Kobe, Japan, January 9, he says: "I understand that it has been proposed to the Brotherhood to take up Japan for their first field. Thinking that, in view of the exigencies of the situation here, it will, perhaps, feel justified in doing so, I beg leave to suggest that you consider, first, the question of rendering help to our educational work, the center of which is and must remain in Kobe. The little school here, already started against heavy odds, has grown until we will be compelled to move February 1 to larger quarters. With buildings and apparatus, a self-sustaining school could be established at once in Kobe. I have never known a field that promised such returns. The students are all interested in the Bible, and our best Christians come from the school."

On the basis of these and similar representations from other sources, the Executive Committee of the Vanderbilt Missionary Brotherhood, exercising the powers devolved upon it by the constitution, has appropriated to Bro. Utley, for use in supporting and extending his work in Japan, 25 per cent. of the net income of the Brotherhood for the year 1889. Rev. W. B. Palmore, of Independence, Mo., vice-president of the Vanderbilt Missionary Brotherhood, has just purchased at a cost of 1,376 yen (a yen is about the value of a Mexican dollar) the ground for Palmore Institute, in Kobe, Japan. Of this school Bro. Utley will have charge.

The work of the Brotherhood is multiplying on every hand. Rev. George B. Winton, another alumnus of the Vanderbilt, has just been transferred to the Central Mexican Mission Conference, and put in charge of the training-school at San Luis Potosi. Under date of January 9, he makes the following application: "Supposing that a missionary theological seminary, a training-school for preachers and teachers, conducted by a member of your society and a graduate of the theological department of Vanderbilt University, would be a suitable applicant for your favors, I hereby apply for the assistance of so much of the funds of the Brotherhood as can consistently be granted to my school."

Accordingly, as in the case of Bro. Utley, an appropriation of 25 per cent. of the net income of the Brotherhood for 1889 was made to Bro. Winton. It is confidently expected that those eligible to membership will send in their fees for 1889 (the fee is $5) to such an amount as to make these appropriations of material benefit in Japan and Mexico. Remittances may be made to Rev. W. R. Sims, treasurer, or to Rev. John J. Tigert, secretary, both resident at Vanderbilt University. Dr. Sims is anxious to make the first remittances on these appropriations at as early a date as possible, and it is hoped that all who see this publication will promptly forward their membership fees. By order of the Executive Committee, a pamphlet circular containing the constitution, by-laws, and officers of the Brotherhood, will shortly be issued, and sent to all members and to all eligible to membership. Brethren, let us hear from you.

The Indian Mission Again.

MR. EDITOR: Since writing to the ADVOCATE on the above subject, I have four names that are willing to go into the installment plan and pay annually for the next five years for the support of a missionary to preach for the Indians in Mississippi. I think that is doing very well, considering the short time since my article appeared (March 7); and without any definite understanding as to where to send the names. I have the name of one brother from Louisiana (wish I had many more!) and the rest from Mississippi. And I will now say to the brethren that I will keep the names of any that send for the present; and will probably ask you to give us space in the ADVOCATE later to publish the propositions and a list of the names. All we want now is for you to send your name and postoffice and amount you are willing to pay annually for the next five years, with the understanding that it may should die during the time that that releases them from the obligation; so that their families will not be expected to pay the balance unless able and willing to do so. We will first try to raise the five hundred to support the missionary, and later look after the parsonage. (The Ladies' Parsonage Society may give us the parsonage when we need it.)

Now, brethren, I only ask at the present for five hundred dollars a year for five years, making twenty-five hundred dollars; and what would that be in comparison to the value of one soul that cost the precious blood of our blessed Savior?

I was talking to a good brother yesterday upon the subject, and one of our brethren in red was standing near us; and I believe he understood what we were talking about. He looked at us as anxiously, and walked around us two or three times. And, oh! my brethren, how my heart burned within me, but my hands and tongue were tied so that I could not preach to him that Christ whom we love; but it not only loosened my heart-strings, but also my purse, so that I would freely give the last dollar I possess that they might have the blessed hope that I possess. Mr. Editor, is it possible that we have and will continue here in the very heart of Christendom, and the blazing light of the nineteenth century, to allow them to sit in darkness and heathen superstition and die without God and without hope in the world or the world to come? No! no! no! Let us say with our dollars, No! and may God help us to say, No!

Now, brethren and sisters, send on the names, and I will keep them in my day-book until we ask for a place in the ADVOCATE, and will also acknowledge receipt by postal card. Write me at Cuto, Rankin county, Miss.

A. D. MILLER.

Letter from California.

We have just closed a series of revival meetings of two weeks and a half duration in Santa Ana. About fifty souls were converted to God, the church was greatly revived, and thirty members were added to the church, with others who will yet join. Rev. E. G. Kilgore, of North Mississippi Conference, was with us and conducted the exercises, proving himself a master workman here, as he has done elsewhere. He inspired the people by his example of faith and plain, earnest presentation of gospel truths. Bro. Kilgore has greatly endeared himself to us all.

Our people claim this to be the greatest revival and ingathering of souls ever had in this church. Those who have had experience with the situation here, claim that it takes more to convert a soul in California than anywhere else, and I am convinced that difficulties exist here that are unknown and can not be appreciated by preachers throughout the South. During our meeting we had five days of continuous rain, and the most intense excitement over the discovery of reputed rich gold mines in Lower California. Company after company started each day, and even during the hours of church many present were canvassing for volunteers in new companies. As it was of old, when the people of God met to worship, the devil came too, and was found in many forms; but we continued earnest in faith and prayer though it all, and God gave us the victory. Our greatest opposition seemed to come from parties who thought there was a little too much "South" about us; but we have conquered a peace.

I am now persuaded that many of the younger brethren, who have enough of Bro. Jim Bates' "stick ability," and such consecration to the Master's service as will make them willing to make sacrifices for the salvation of souls, will do well to come to this coast, for the harvest is plenteous, but the laborers are few.

The Los Angeles District Conference will meet with our church here, April 18. Our Annual Conference meets May 22, which will give the writer a very short year.

We took the general collections not long since, raising about twenty-five per cent. in excess of the amount asked for, which is nearly $2 per member. I never saw a collection as quickly and easily taken.

From the Work.

BLACK RIVER, LA.

MR. EDITOR: I suppose that something in the way of a report from Black River circuit will not be out of order just now. This is a new circuit—that is, new in name. It was formerly a part of Trinity circuit, but at the last session of Conference, Bishop Hargrove divided the Trinity circuit; and the new one set off was named "Black River." The name is very appropriate, as it lies on both sides of Black river, and every appointment is on or very near it.—Some visible progress has been made since the new year set in, though we have not grown any numerically. The spiritual strength of the church is steadily advancing. We have a total membership, including adults and children, of ninety-three; and twenty-six of that number habitually pray in public whenever and wherever called upon. On the whole, the numerical, financial and spiritual strength of the church is 100 per cent. in advance of what it was in the same territory one year ago. The finances of the circuit are a little behind what they were up to this time last year, but there is a cause for it.

The new circuit began its history in the right way. The people used the money (a part of which would otherwise have gone into other channels for the church) in building a neat and comfortable parsonage. I would that all the new circuits would do likewise; and not only the new ones, but the old ones that are not already provided with parsonages—no more troubles, anxieties and embarrassments about where the preacher shall live; no more separation of husband, wife and little ones, but a comfortable home always ready. I sometimes think if every layman could be an itinerant preacher just long enough to have his name read out to some appointment where there was no parsonage and no house available to rent—and if there was, no furniture to be had—and he be forced to send his wife and little ones to some of their friends, or their parents, if living, to take care of, while he goes to labor in the Lord's vineyard, and when he gets there not find a place to board himself, much less his family, his sympathies would be touched in favor of parsonage building and extension, and he would not be so ready to call it the secondary secular work of the church. If some of our moneyed laymen could place themselves only for a few weeks in Bro. Methvin's place before his parsonage was built, and try some of the realities of what they are disposed to call "a picnic," it would not be long before our suffering missionaries would be provided with homes. A little practical experience is worth a great deal of theory. The idea that parsonage building is a secondary or after consideration is very strange to me. It is without question one of the first, if not the very first, thing to be considered in carrying on the Master's kingdom. Indeed, I consider that in many instances, if not the majority, that the parsonage should precede the church building, and especially so in the country where houses for rent are scarce. When a house is once fitted up and a preacher firmly domiciled in a community, the other work of the church will follow as a natural consequence. I have never heard of a failure in this line; but I have known fields that promised to be fruitful totally abandoned after houses of worship had been erected for no other cause than the preacher "had not where to lay his head." I have known other charges to linger for years in a state of lethargy because the preacher was forced to live at such a distance as rendered it impossible for him to do efficient work. I have seen some of the same charges when parsonages were built on them, and the preacher settled in the midst of his people, take an influence that seemed to be touched with the supernatural, and in a few years grow to such proportions as to be divided into two and even three charges.

Now, these are facts; and if they can be explained on any other hypothesis than the effect of the preacher living among his people, in a comfortable house prepared for that purpose, I am ready to hear it. May God bless Miss Helm and her work! She is steering one of the grandest enterprises of the church. May the good work go on until there is not a circuit, station or mission in the bounds of Southern Methodism, home or foreign, that is not provided with a parsonage! And then may the work keep pace with the growth of the church!

GEO. T. ASHLEY.

TWO MONTHS' EXPERIENCE.

The church here (Crystal Springs), as usual, gave the pastor a cordial, friendly reception. This did not drive me into print, for it has been my uniform experience during eighteen years in the ministry, and a characteristic of this church as long as I have known anything of it. But the continued liberality and true Christian cordiality moves me to record it as an encouragement, if not an example, to others. The acts of the church has shown that somewhat unusual spirit, enlargement of gifts and work, rather than that of retrenchment, experienced in a district stewards' meeting, if nowhere else. Before I reached the parsonage from the depot, over one month's salary was handed me. During the first week the salary was raised $100. The district steward was instructed to urge a larger salary for the presiding elder, and the building of a district parsonage; also to include enough in the assessment for the presiding elder to pay one year's house rent, though this was not all done by the district stewards. About $75 was expended in the first month, in making the parsonage more comfortable, and now they are putting about $100 more to the same purpose. A beautiful set of furniture, carpets, an $18 organ of the best make, has been put into the church this week; not costing us so much, but is indeed a fine instrument and quite an ornament to the house. In response to the call for an endowment of the Mississippi College, the church responded handsomely, and beyond my expectation, as many of our contributing members were absent. These will, no doubt, add their gifts and make the whole a liberal donation.

One feature of the financial work is, the officials attend to all money matters. One-twelfth of all due for the year is collected monthly, save the presiding elder's salary, and that is paid quarterly. The amount is not only promised, but paid. During the past two months over twenty-five members have been added to the roll, and there are others who have promised to unite with us soon. The congregation is unusually large, very uniform, and composed more largely of men than at any church where I have been the pastor.

All of the social meetings and societies are alive and doing, I think, a good work. I know of no place in the State that shows more life and gives more evidence of prosperity than Crystal Springs. This is largely owing to the success in fruit and vegetable culture for the Northern markets, and largely, too, to the fact that it is a prohibition town and county. People are moving in, houses are being built; thrift and prosperity is noticeable on every hand. The county is out of debt, the public schools are overflowing, public disorder and crime has diminished almost altogether. On account of this and many other local advantages, many have made this their home. Besides the farmers and merchants, this seems to be the headquarters of many commercial travelers—or, as we call them, "drummers."

The W. C. T. U. State Convention convenes here the middle of April. That is followed by our annual camp-meeting, one mile from town; and that by the Mississippi Annual Conference. To all we extend a cordial invitation; also to the editor. PASTOR.

ANACOCO, LA.

MR. EDITOR: The Anacoco circuit is one among the oldest on Shreveport district, and the time has been when it was one of the best. But for several years this circuit has been on the decline; not that the people have disregarded the gospel to the extent that they have refused to listen—not that we have not had good preaching; but, in the first place, the church has been negligent in the way of sustaining the gospel by adhering to the injunction: "Let him that is taught in the Word communicate unto him that teacheth." I look at this as an imperative duty upon all Christian people to sustain the gospel; but it seems there are a great many Christian people (in their own estimation) who are trying to see how cheap they can make it through to the better land—yea, even boast of having been out on the old ship for twenty or thirty years, and their passage has never cost them anything yet. God save such stingy souls! I occasionally find Methodist people who claim they are opposed to making preachers rich. I don't think we need to fear on this point. I have seen a great many itinerant preachers, and almost invariably I have found them to be poor men—men who have made great sacrifice for the gospel's sake. I have never joined the itinerancy; but I think there is nothing more self-sacrificing than that of entering the Methodist itinerancy.

But I am digressing somewhat from my subject, "Anacoco Circuit." This circuit has a membership of 230 good, honest people, and all they lack is just a little more religion; and, from what I can learn from our pastor in charge, his theme for this year is, "More religion."

At our first quarterly meeting our presiding elder, Bro. Cassity, preached for us a most excellent sermon from Psalms xxxiv, 7. I am sure it will long be remembered by the people on the Anacoco circuit.

Now, in conclusion, I must, in justice, say for the Anacoco circuit: the blame for her present condition does not rest altogether on her. When this work began to go down our Conference and presiding elders commenced to supply with the local ministry, who could not do justice to the work; hence our lethargy.

JOHN FRANKLIN, L. P.

AMITE CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: We landed with our family at Gloster the second day of January. The kind ladies of the place had a nice warm dinner awaiting us at the parsonage. This kind of warm reception, of course, we appreciate. Though we found the parsonage unfinished, still we found quite a number that "had a mind to work." While they were financially oppressed on account of "the storm," yet they laid hold with renewed zeal and determination. The circuit has done over $125 worth of work on and around the parsonage. We hope to be able to report at next Conference about as comfortable circuit parsonage as any in the Conference.

The stewards and people seem to be increasing in ideas of liberality. The salary of the preacher was increased upwards of a hundred dollars over what it was last year; and from present prospects it seems that they intend to pay every dollar of it. The finances are well up at present. About one-half of the Conference collections have been raised in cash and good subscription. The balance will be raised this month, if not providentially hindered.

I think Amite circuit has some as faithful and true workers as are to be found anywhere. These men give breadth and depth to the church. The people have been kindly remembering the preacher and family in various ways for these three months.

We are pressing the claims of the ADVOCATE with some degree of success. Some twelve or fifteen new names have been added to your subscription list from this part of the work. I hope to send you, at least, that many more before the end of the year. It seems to me that each issue of the paper is getting better.

The spiritual condition of the church is, I trust, constantly and permanently developing. We have had sixteen accessions by letter and otherwise. Our new presiding elder licensed his first preacher at our Quarterly Conference last Saturday. We are praying, planning and working for a gracious revival on this work this year. Pray for us.

M. H. MOORE.

CORINTH, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: We closed a wonderful meeting last Sunday night, which had been in progress for two weeks. At least fifty souls were converted, and over a hundred church members reclaimed. I received into the Methodist Church twenty-eight, and have more to receive. Almost every family in town was touched; the whole town stirred. I saw Methodists, Presbyterians, Cumberland Presbyterians, Baptists, Roman Catholics, all shouting the praises of God at the same time. Corinth has never had a better meeting in her history. Even the Jones meeting did not surpass it. I have never known a deeper, more genuine revival. Our help from abroad was Bros. M. L. Blanton, of Nashville, Tenn., who did nearly all the preaching, and J. W. Beville, of Jackson, Tenn., who led the singing. The brethren did faithful and efficient work. No man ever more completely won the love of these people than Bro. Blanton. He is a plain, earnest, faithful gospel preacher, free from objectionable traits. His success is not by his manipulation, or making easy way of life; but in his strong faith, intense earnestness, child-like simplicity, declaring the whole counsel of God without fear or favor. He will do anywhere. We will never forget the brethren, and never cease to pray for them. May they long live to bless the world! Truly,

J. H. MITCHELL.

AMITE CITY, LA.

MR. EDITOR: We are rejoiced to report a healthy spiritual growth in this pastoral charge; one evidence of which is, more of our members are feeling their need of the means of grace which the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE alone can supply; hence, I send you six new subscriptions, and have the promise of more. We have received eight members since Conference, and baptized one child. All our dancing members, with whom we have talked on the subject, have promised to give it up.

The Woodville District Conference will be convened at this place some time in the summer, and we are expecting to have the editor with us. We have already invited the public, and, now, Bro. Carter, we extend you a cordial invitation. As the Conference will be held in the summer, that we may have a Bishop with us, possibility of feasting the brethren on strawberries will be precluded, for we will be past strawberry time. Therefore, brethren of the Woodville district, we offer you Bishop in the place of berries, knowing that you prefer the former to the latter.

We are hoping for, praying for, and expecting a revival of religion on this work, and we know the Lord will grant it to us. Pray for us.

Fraternally, FRANK M. KEEL.

WESLEY CHAPEL, NATCHEZ, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: On Sunday night, March 24, the Woman's Missionary Society, of Wesley Chapel station, Natchez, Miss., held a public meeting. The exercises were opened by singing the long-meter Doxology, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow;" then reading of Isaiah lx, and prayer by Bro. George H. Lipscomb, the congregation joining in the Lord's Prayer at the close. After some appropriate remarks, essays, and songs, Bro. Lipscomb (the general secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association of Natchez) gave us a delightful address on his visit to China Town, Cal., a few years ago. The fact that his sister, Miss Lula Lipscomb, is one of our missionaries in China, gave a new interest to his talk.

We added nearly twenty new names to our roll of members, and the regular monthly meeting the following night (Monday) was the largest and most enthusiastic for months. Every department of the church work has been reorganized, and is moving along nicely. We have recently purchased a parsonage, which seems to indicate that the people want their pastor to take to himself "a helpmeet for him;" but—

We look for a successful year.

Yours, H. F. LEWIS.

It does not require great learning to be a Christian and be convinced of the truth of the Bible. It requires an honest heart and a willingness to obey God.—A. Barnes.

LESSON III.—April 21.

The Two Great Commandments.

Mark xii, 28-34.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Love is the fulfilling of the law.—Rom. xiii, 10.

TIME.—A. D. 29.

PLACE.—The Temple courts.

PARALLEL PASSAGES.—Matt. xxii, 35-46; xxiii, 1-39; Luke xx, 39-47; xxi, 1-4.

28. One of the scribes—Matthew (xxii, 35) says, "One of them"—that is, of the Pharisees, "a lawyer," one learned in the law. The scribes were mostly Pharisees, and this one acted as speaker for those assembled there. They would gladly have seen Jesus ensnared by the Sadducees; but the latter had been so thoroughly routed and put to silence that it caused much pleasant emotion among the scribes and Pharisees. Perceiving that he had answered them well—He may have been a caviler, not a disciple, and yet not so incased in prejudice but that he could appreciate the force of Christ's simple, but eloquent response, and acknowledge its truth and beauty. Which is the first commandment of all—The Jewish Talmud reckons the positive laws of Moses at 248, and the negative at 365, the sum being 613. To keep so many laws, said the Jews, is an angel's work, and so they had much questioned which was the great commandment, so that they might keep that in lieu of keeping the whole. Now, surely, out of such a large number of precepts and prohibitions, all could not be of quite the same value; some were "light" (Kal), and some were "heavy" (kobhed). But which? and what was the greatest commandment of all? According to some rabbis, the most important of all is that about the tephillin and the tsitsith, the fringes and phylacteries; and "he who diligently observes it is regarded in the same light as if he had kept the whole law." Some thought the omission of ablutions as bad as homicide; some that the precepts of the Mishna were all "heavy;" those of the law were some heavy and some light. Others considered the third to be the greatest commandment. "None of them had realized the great principle that the willful violation of one commandment is the transgression of all (James ii, 10), because the object of the entire law is the spirit of obedience to God. Literally, of what kind. The questioner asked as if it belonged to a class. Our Lord's answer is definite: "This is the first and great commandment."

29. Hear, O Israel; The Lord our God is one God—This every devout Jew recited twice every day, and the Jews do it to this day, thus keeping up the great ancient national protest against the polytheisms and pantheisms of the heathen world: it is the great utterance of the national faith in one living and personal God—"one Jehovah."

30. And thou shalt love the Lord thy God—All beings are to be loved according to their excellence. As God is the most excellent and glorious of all beings, he is to be loved supremely. If he is loved aright, then our affections will be directed toward all created objects in a right manner. He had once more shown his greatness as a teacher by summing up our whole duty in the fundamental conceptions of religion and morality: in the love to God, which is also love to his children, our fellow-men. Heart ... soul ... mind ... strength—All the affections and powers of the man.

31. And the second—If Christ had stopped at the first commandment, if he had been content merely to answer the one question, "Which is the first?" the Pharisees would have gone away unrebuked. But he would not spare them, and so went on to tell them that there was a second. Is like—Like in being founded in love; like in being in fact included in the first. For, if we love God completely, we shall perform all our duties to his creatures. As the first command is a summary of the first table of the law, of the duties we owe to God, so the second is a summary of the second table, the duties we owe to men. Thy neighbor—On "Who is my neighbor?" see Luke x, 25-37, and James i, 27. As thyself So that we may love ourselves. The Scriptures teach self-denial, but they do not teach self-annihilation: They forbid selfishness, but they do not forbid self-love. The observance of this law would put an end to all injustice. God loves me as he loves thee, and thee as he does me; therefore, I ought to love thee, my neighbor, as myself; and thou me as thyself; for our love ought to correspond to God's love. None other commandment greater—Of all our Savior's wise and happy answers to insidious or puzzling questions this is the most exquisitely beautiful, because so unambiguous, so simple, so exactly corresponding to the form of the question, so evasive of its trifling and unprofitable element, so exhaustive and demonstrative of what was really important in it, and, therefore, so unchangeably instructive and practically useful to the end of time.

32. The scribe said—Mark alone records the effect of our Lord's answer upon the scribe. The scribe had the sense to observe and the candor to acknowledge that the answer of Jesus was wise and noble. "Well, Master," he exclaimed, "thou hast said the truth;" and then he showed that he had read the Scriptures to some advantage by summarizing some of those grand free utterances of the prophets which prove that love to God and love to man is better than all whole burnt-offerings and sacrifices. None other but he—Not only is he one in the sense of what theologians call simplicity, that is, without parts, division, or complexity, but also in the negative exclusive sense of oneliness, and there is no other except him.

33. More than all whole burnt-offerings and sacrifices—It was a bold saying in those times and in that place. The idea here is more (that is, intrinsically better, more acceptable to God, and more useful to the worshiper) than all the ceremonies of the law, considered in themselves, and as devoid of this informing principle.

34. Discreetly—Jesus approved of his sincerity. Not far from the kingdom of God—By his reply he had shown that he was almost prepared to receive the doctrines of the gospel. He had shown a real acquaintance with the law, which showed that he was nearly prepared to receive the teachings of Jesus. Words which involved both gracious encouragement and serious warning: "Thou art not far from the kingdom of heaven." It was, therefore, at once easier for him to enter and more perilous to turn aside. When he had entered he would see that the very spirit of his question was an erroneous and faulty one, and that "whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, is guilty of all." No man after that durst ask him any question—All the great parties in Jerusalem, ecclesiastical and political, had pitted themselves successively in argument against him, and all had found him more than a match for them. They had tried to involve him with the upholders of the theocracy, or to extract from his lips some expression of sympathy with their hatred of Roman supremacy, which they might turn against him. But he had shown them "that the powers that be are ordained of God." They had ventured again to attack him where they believed themselves to be invincible, namely: in the interpretation of Scripture; but his answers had proved that he "of whom Moses and the prophets" did write, who was, in fact, the great subject of revelation, knew far better than the most learned scribe the meaning of what was written.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

Jesus constantly took advantage of the efforts of his enemies to annoy and vex him to teach some new powerful truth. We lose many such a chance when we refuse to give attention to impertinent questions.

Every appeal of Jesus to the law and the prophets adds strong confirmation to Old Testament Scripture, even the most extraordinary passages, which too many men in our day would explain away, such as the flood, history of Jonah, etc.

A mere theoretical knowledge of religion is not enough. The scribe was not in the kingdom of God, though he knew exactly the relative value of spiritual religion and burnt-offerings.

Missionary.

NO SHIPS FOR US.

No ships for us sail o'er the seas,
Nor feet press sands of foreign shore,
No lips preach Jesus, life and peace,
Sent out, commissioned, from our door.

No hands break bread which we have blest
To famished souls 'neath eastern skies;
We point no heathen soul to rest,
Nor heavenward turn his dying eyes.

No land reclaimed from desert gloom
Sings gladsome songs which we have taught;
No perfume-bearing roses bloom,
To witness deeds our hands have wrought.

Great God of Heaven! blest Prince of Love!
Baptize us as on Pentecost;
Then send us gladly forth to prove
Our zeal for heathen millions lost.

All o'er our fields the fire shall run,
Our "wood, hay, stubble," ashes be;
And by thy light we shall discern
The conflict and the victory.

Is It Any Wonder?

The population of the United States in 1886 was estimated at 60,000,000, and the total number of ordained Protestant ministers to that population was 79,032, or in round numbers one minister to every 800 people. The foreign mission field includes so many souls that the figures daze us. Look at them 1,181,000,000! Among that vast multitude there are 2,975 ordained missionaries, the contributions of all the Protestant missionary societies of Christendom. In other words, one missionary to every 400,000 people! The total number of Christian workers of all kinds in the United States, embracing ordained ministers, lay preachers, women workers, and Sunday-school officers and teachers, is 1,333,134, or one in every 44 of the population. The total number of all authorized workers in the foreign field, whether foreign or native, is 37,837, or one to each 31,213 persons. We have one Protestant Christian in the United States to 4 2-10 persons, or nearly one in five, but in the foreign field we have but one in 1,712 persons.

See what a vast force it takes to keep this nation Christian, and then shall we wonder that we seem to accomplish so little, abroad? If with this vast army at home we would utilize the spiritual forces within our reach, our conquests would be magnified a thousand-fold. Then, if we would pour our substance into God's treasury for the spiritual purposes with the prodigal liberality that characterizes men in their worldly plans, the heralds of the cross would soon overrun the entire globe. The greatest of all crosses are the spiritual, yet we have only made a very slender draft upon them. What if we should ask of God up to the full measure of his will, and then go forward with all this endowment of divine power!

Giving and Giving Up.

"He is certainly a most generous man. He has just given five thousand pounds to the work of foreign missions. It's one of the most magnificent gifts we have ever received."

"Not quite so," was the answer. "I know of at least one more generous giver."

"Really? Well, I was looking through the reports of the last few years, and I saw nothing like that sum on the donation list."

"No, the gift to which I allude has not appeared in print, and will be known by very few except the Lord. The other day I was calling on a friend of mine, a very aged man, who told me, with tears running down his cheeks, that his only son was about to leave home for missionary work in a far-away land.

"The father had discovered that the young man felt called of God to such service, but was tarrying at home for his sake. 'How could I keep him back?' said the old man. "I have prayed all my life: "Thy kingdom come; send forth laborers into thy harvest;" and with all the pain of parting with my boy in the certainty that I should never see him again on earth, there is a deep joy in giving him up for Christ's sake?'"

I said to myself, on overhearing this conversation, "Surely, here is a true test of love—not giving only, but giving up." For though love can not exist without giving, there may be large giving without love; but we can hardly doubt that it is love alone which for another's sake gives up what is held dear.

With the majority of the people money is hard to get, and harder still to keep; but if we have a holy covetousness, we can all become rich toward God.—Gospel in All Lands.

Temperance Notes.

The Chautauquan contains an interesting symposium of letters on "Scientific Temperance" from learned and eminent physicians located in various parts of the country. The following are extracts from some of the letters:

Dr. William A. Hammond, of New York City, says: "There are many diseases which physicians well know are caused by alcohol, but which the public generally is not aware are produced by this agent. Among the chief of these is general neuritis, a chronic inflammation of all the nerves of the body, including the brain, and which is characterized by convulsions, trembling of the muscles, paralysis, disturbances of the sight, the hearing, the speech, and of all the mental faculties, with sometimes a marked predisposition to commit suicide or murder. In addition there is a long list of diseases of the brain, of the spinal cord, and of the nerves, which result from alcoholic poisoning." (Twenty-five of these he names.)

From Dr. W. W. Johnston, of Washington, D. C.: "The association of lithæmia, gouty, or rheumatic symptoms, chronic intestinal indigestion, and chronic Bright's disease, is a very close one and is often seen among the class of people who have the opportunity to ward off disease by a proper mode of life. In persuading them to the complete abandonment of alcohol, a physician takes the most important step toward prevention or cure."

This from Dr. D. Hayes Agnew, of Philadelphia, Pa.: "The evil effects of alcohol are increased by the very limited power which the system possesses for eliminating the poison. It consequently accumulates in the tissues, and slowly, but surely works the mischief. Even when administered as a stimulant in low forms of fever caution must be exercised that its exhibition be not in excess, as it may become a depressant by paralyzing the vaso-motor center of the circulation and thus induce fatal prostration."

Dr. Samuel Sexton, of New York City, says: "The injuriousness of whisky, wine, beer, or the like, is due to the periodical requirement for stimulation after the habit is formed. . . . . The daily moderate or immoderate bibber is no better off, so far as ultimate pathological results are concerned, than the weekly, monthly, or yearly guzzler; the former is nearly always unduly stimulated, the latter generally recuperates during the intervals of abstinence."

Dr. I. E. Atkinson, of Baltimore, Md., says: "The physician is constantly reminded of the comparative inability of the 'habitual drinker' to withstand the inroads of acute disease, whether of sporadic or epidemic nature; pneumonia, which in persons not beyond the middle period of life usually runs a favorable course, acquires a frightful mortality in the drunkard; and infectious diseases, such as small-pox and yellow-fever, have in him their readiest victim."

The physicians of Edinburgh, Scotland, will petition the government to provide legal measures for the committal and detention of habitual drunkards in properly regulated homes.

The Indians near Reno, Col., recently stoned to death a squaw who persisted in getting drunk.

Judge Guthrie, of Topeka, Kan., in addressing the Grand Jury, commented on the improvement in morals under the prohibitory law, and stated that, in his opinion, it was an unqualified success.

State Superintendent of Education Subin, of Iowa, has issued a letter to the school directors urging the observance of the scientific temperance instruction law.

The Y. W. C. T. U., of New Orleans, gave an elegant luncheon this week at Grunewald Hall, for the benefit of the temperance cause. The hall was tastefully decorated with flowers, etc., and graced by a number of handsome ladies, not all of whom belonged to the "Y's." The tables were well supplied with choice and seasonable viands. Judging from the number of lunchers, the finances must have been considerably helped by this praiseworthy effort on the part of the young ladies.

Peculiar

To itself in many important particulars, Hood's Sarsaparilla is different from and superior to any other medicine.

Peculiar in combination, proportion and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the full curative value of the best known remedies of the vegetable kingdom.

Peculiar in its medicinal merit, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures hitherto unknown.

Peculiar in strength and economy—Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "100 doses one dollar." Medicines in larger and smaller bottles require larger doses, and do not produce as good results as Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Peculiar in its "good name at home"—there is more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell, where it is made, than of all other blood purifiers.

Peculiar in its phenomenal record of sales abroad, no other preparation has ever attained such popularity in so short a time. Do not be induced to take any other preparation. Be sure to get

ORGAN OF THE LOUISIANA, MISSISSIPPI AND NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCES OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

Rev. O. W. CARTER, D. D., Editor.

CORRESPONDING EDITORS:
REV. J. D. CAMPBON, D. D.
REV. R. CARRADINE, D. D.
REV. W. L. C. HUNNICUTT, D. D.

THURSDAY, APRIL 11, 1889.

Rev. R. P. Mitchell, of the North Mississippi Conference, died April 3, at the residence of his brother-in-law, J. W. Bayly, Memphis, Tenn. Bro. Mitchell has been in ill health for some time, and at the last Conference was placed on the supernumerary list. We regret to know that his work on earth has ceased, but in heaven "they serve him day and night."

Briefs.

Bible carts roll out of Madrid, and in the very Spain, whose name is the historic synonym of the Inquisition, the people are so clamorous for the Word of God that copies can not be printed fast enough to meet the demand. And the work is in progress in Portugal. In Lisbon there are three Protestant Churches, the pastors of which were formerly Roman Catholic priests.

A deservedly complimentary notice of Mrs. Caroline E. Merrick, president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Louisiana, appeared in the April number of Demorest's Monthly Magazine. This distinguished native of Louisiana is worthy of the high position to which her wisdom, firmness and piety have placed her among Christian woman workers. Not only in this country, but in England has her worth been recognized, where she represents for Louisiana the society that protects helpless girls and women who may be journeying without a protector. Several such cases have been helped by this lady recently who were placed in her care here by the parent society of London.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate, soon after the death of Bishop H. N. McTyeire, D.D., proposed to the Felicity Street Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to start a subscription list with $10 for a tablet to be placed in that church. This offer was accepted by the Board of Trustees of the Felicity Street Church, with the proviso that we make the offer to include a memorial tablet also to Bishop Linus Parker, D. D., which proposition the Christian Advocate readily acceded to, as each of these eminent Bishops were closely identified with both Felicity Street Methodist Church and the New Orleans Christian Advocate. Contributions for these tablets will be received by Rev. C. W. Carter, D. D., or Rev. J. T. Sawyer, 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

The International Bible Lesson Committee is to meet on April 10, at Saratoga Springs, in Dr. Strong's Sanitarium. As many persons may be interested in knowing who the members are, their names are appended: Bishop John H. Vincent, of Buffalo, chairman; the Rev. Dr. John Hall, New York, chancellor; G. H. Blake, Toronto; B. F. Jacobs, Chicago; the Rev. Moses Hodge, Richmond, Va.; the Rev. Dr. W. G. E. Cunnyngham, Nashville, Tenn.; the Rev. Dr. John A. Broadus, Louisville, Ky.; the Rev. Dr. Randolph, Newport, R. I., secretary; the Rev. Dr. H. Louis Baugher, Montreal; the Rev. Dr. A. E. Dunning, Boston; Prof. J. I. D. Hinds, Ph.D., Lebanon, Tenn., and the Rev. Dr. D. Berger, Dayton, Ohio. The committee and the meeting it would be wise to remember in our prayers.

Church Dangers.

Many thoughtful people read in the signs of the times much danger hanging over the church and threatening her life. That there are dangers can not be denied, but we think they are not outside of the church. The only danger that can threaten the life of the church will arise within the church itself. The church is like an impregnable fortress. All the destructive enginery which the genius of man can invent—all the appliances which art and science can bring to bear—all the sapping and mining of experienced and skillful engineers—all the blazing bombs and screaming shells which the enemy's guns can throw can not break down its walls nor capture its garrison. The history of the church is but the record of the devices and plans of her outside foes to destroy her, and of her deliverance from destruction at their hands. From the beginning of her existence she has been continually assailed by the most powerful adversaries; and she has not only won victories, but her broadening domain and enlarging life to-day is in proof that to these outside foes she presents an invincible front. The danger to the church is not in the open enemy, no matter how powerful he may be. The danger is in the professed friend who is lacking in Christian fortitude and wanting in moral courage. The infidels in the world are no danger to the church, but the danger is in the infidels in the church. The peril is not in the fact that outside people deny the truth of God, but in the fact that church people "hold the truth in unrighteousness;" or, as it is translated by some, "hold down the truth by unrighteousness." For centuries the whole power of the mighty empire of Rome was concentrated upon the effort to crush out the young church, and the effort ended in the empire being conquered by the church. External causes, no matter how numerous nor how great, can not destroy the church.

But even an impregnable fortress can be taken. Many such have been captured. Treachery in the garrison is the one fatal thing before which the impregnable tumbles down. So it is with the church. Disloyalty to Christ is the fatal peril. Wherever a church has gone down, the cause is found in the want of obedience to the commands of the great Captain. It must be so, because Jesus Christ says to the church: "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth; go ye therefore." Loyalty to Christ puts the church in possession of the power of Christ, and against that power the gates of hell can not prevail. One disloyal Achan spread confusion among the ranks of Israel's victorious hosts, and sent the mighty army in a rout of disastrous defeat from the field of battle. In her loyalty to Christ, and only in that, can the church move forward in continuous victory. Her only real danger is in the disloyalty of her own soldiers.

Solitude of the City.

One coming for the first time to live in a great city, seeing the multitudes in the streets and on the levee, does not think of the much greater number of people who are hid, as it were, within the walls of houses, in chambers, in back yards, on beds of sickness, and in many nooks and corners where they are invisible to the passer-by. Yonder is a school building that may contain a thousand pupils; yonder a hospital with hundreds of patients; a factory employing scores of operatives; a ship with a large crew; a cemetery, with thousands of the dead built up in walls of brick and mortar, or of stone and marble. Could the roofs be removed and the walls taken down, what scenes of human life and death would be discovered! But fortunately for all, each of these multiplied thousands is or may be to himself—alone. There the student may be pouring over his solitary task, the nurse attending the sick, or the watcher sitting beside the dead, with no eye upon them. Congregations may be hanging upon the lips of eloquent preachers, schools listening to learned lectures, families grouped about the fireside, and all enjoying as much seclusion amid the roar and rush of wheels and hoofs and pattering feet as if in the densest forest or the dimmest caverns of the natural world. The tired citizen sleeps at night in unbroken repose while fire rages in the neighboring block. He reads with surprise in the morning paper that the adjoining house has been visited by burglars, or the dwellings of his neighbors in the next square have been swept off by a conflagration. If he walks into the street, he sees only so much as comes within the lines of opposing walls. He knows nothing of the people that may be walking or riding on the streets parallel to his own. If asked who lives next door, he frankly tells you he is not acquainted with them. Among the numerous death notices in the obituary column, he recognizes scarcely a single name, and is surprised to see that a funeral will take place that day on the opposite side of the street. If he takes a seat in the horse-car, he does not expect to meet an acquaintance. An old citizen may stand for an hour at the corner of a business street and look into the faces of thousands passing by without knowing a single one.

A prominent minister said that he had lived in the city for some thirty years; had preached in all the principal churches of his denomination; had performed hundreds of funeral services and delivered many public addresses; and yet he felt sure there were more than a hundred thousand people in the city who had never heard his name, or in any way learned of his existence. This may seem strange and, in some respects, sad; but the truth is, that it is of vast benefit and advantage; for who could endure to know all the suffering and misery that are being inflicted around him? Who could stay in his room or stick to his office if made aware of the exciting scenes that are hourly transpiring? The solitude of nature is profound, but the solitude of a great city is still more wonderful.

The mind of man can take in only so much, and all beyond is lost sight of. One may be very useful to many without knowing them individually. The car-driver may carry hundreds of passengers in a day without speaking to one. The preacher may address an unknown audience of thousands and thrill the consciences of all. The editor may be read by long lists of subscribers whose names are as little known as their faces. He has the consciousness of a large audience, and he speaks with corresponding interest to all. Every worker in the busy hive may know that he is doing good to the masses of his fellow-workers without knowing them individually. In great cities persons learn to estimate people by circumstances rather than by name. "From the country" instead of the city; uptown or downtown; on this street or that, and even on one side or the other of the same street, makes quite a difference. We go by numbers—No. 90 is good pay; No. 91 can not be credited. What church do you attend? Which of the daily papers do you take? Do you board or keep house? Do you live in your own or a rented house? By such signs as these are we judged and estimated. The individual is nothing; the environment is everything.

On the whole, this great city may be compared to the great river on which it stands. While the main current rushes down the middle of the channel, there are many eddies and counter-currents that seem to flow the other way. While great agitation may be seen upon the surface, down in the depths there are still waters whose tiny inhabitants are undisturbed by the general movement of the stream. Millions of living creatures hide themselves in the solitudes of great cities, and are as secure from observation as the denizens of the mighty deep.

F. M. GRACE.

Grenada District Conference.

The above District Conference was held at Duck Hill, Miss., April 4–7. Bishop C. B. Galloway presided, bringing out by his practical questions the spiritual conditions of the eighteen circuits and stations comprising this district.

There was a very large attendance of clerical and lay delegates, many of the latter being local preachers, Sunday-school superintendents, recording stewards, etc., representing the active workers of this district. There was also present Rev. J. W. McCrary, missionary of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to the Indian Territory. He was accompanied by Rev. William F. Folsom, a full-blooded Choctaw Indian, who left North Mississippi when six years of age, accompanying his tribe to the Indian Nation. At the love-feast he said he was converted when seventeen years old, and joined the church soon after, and for thirty-five years has been an itinerant minister of our church. Both he and Bro. McCrary interested the large audiences which attended this Conference by their addresses, descriptive of the religious and educational work among the Indians.

The Rev. S. M. Thames, presiding elder of the Sardis district, and Rev. J. J. Wheat, presiding elder of the Winona district, being present during the session, added much to the interest of the discussions of this Conference by their practical and encouraging remarks. A member of the staff of the New Orleans Christian Advocate being introduced to the Conference, was cordially welcomed, and invited to a seat in the Conference. Bro. Blount, of Water Valley, was elected secretary, and Bro. H. H. Estes, assistant secretary.

The preacher in charge of Grenada circuit, of which Duck Hill Church is an appointment, is Rev. H. C. Morehead, by whose attention to the details everything moved off successfully. He is one of the most energetic workers of this Conference. The music was in charge of Mrs. Sykes, being ably supported by a choir of beautiful young ladies and noble-looking young men.

Bro. Evans, the presiding elder, stated that the Grenada district was financially better off than ever he had known it at this early time in the Conference year; that the general outlook, both religiously and financially, is very encouraging. Each preacher has gone to his respective work, where he has been well received. There has been an advance in the assessments of several of the charges. Ten district stewards were present at the district stewards' meeting. Bro. Blunt, of Water Valley, stated that a good parsonage has been provided for the presiding elder at Water Valley, worth three times its cost, a clear title to which was in the hands of the presiding elder.

With pleasure we note that each preacher stated he was giving earnest attention to the New Orleans Christian Advocate; and the list of new subscribers that are steadily coming in from this district give practical evidence of the results of these efforts.

The Rev. J. J. Wheat and Bishop Galloway occupied an evening during the sitting of the Conference, and delivered able addresses on "Christian Education." The result of their efforts was a subscription of $2,025, to the endowment fund of Mississippi Methodist College. Bro. Lake, one of the leading Methodists of this section, stated to Bishop Galloway that he believed that this subscription by this Conference for this purpose would reach $4,000.

The Conference, in learning of the death of the Rev. R. P. Mitchell, passed appropriate resolutions. The report of the Committee on Education was adopted, and appears in another part of this paper. Bro. G. W. Buchman, one of the agents of the New Orleans Christian Advocate and colporteur for the North Mississippi Conference, was in attendance with a good supply of Methodist literature, and met with considerable encouragement. The Sunday-school Mass Meeting, held on Sunday afternoon, was an exceedingly interesting feature of this Conference. It was addressed by the Rev. W. S. Shipman; Bro. Estes, superintendent of the Sunday-school at Charleston; and Revs. J. W. McCrary and W. F. Folsom, the latter singing a hymn in Choctaw.

Sunnyside, on the Yazoo river, was selected as the next place for holding the Grenada District Conference, and Bros. Edward Mayes and H. H. Estes were elected delegates, with Bros. R. P. Lake and M. G. Dubard as alternates, to the North Mississippi Annual Conference.

The Southern Review.

The April number of this portly review begins a new volume. There are over 210 pages of solid reading matter in this number. The editor seems to have gleaned the whole church for his contributors. Virginia and California, Kentucky and Texas, Tennessee and Mississippi, Georgia, and Vanderbilt, are all well represented in this number. The range of subjects discussed is varied. Biography and church finance, theology and education, the race problem and the "problem of Methodism," image worship and Ingersollism, are all treated in this number. The Editor's Table fills 40 pages and discusses nine different subjects. Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville. Price, $2 50.

Increase in Giving.

Several persons have spoken to us, and one correspondent has written to us, about our article on this subject. The gist of their criticisms is in the fact that the increase in the rate of giving soon overtakes the amount earned, and, if continued, goes far beyond it. We used the word "salary" because it is a common word with preachers, but we should have used the word "'increase" or "profits." A man resolves to give a certain per cent. of his "profits." Now, our construction of the New Testament rule is, that the rate of giving should increase in proportion as the profits increase. This rule never touches the principal. And there have been men who have followed it to the letter. They have resolved that they would never allow themselves to accumulate more than a certain sum. All over that they have given away. Don't confound an illustration of a rule with the rule itself.

Commendatory.

Bro. McCoy, of the Alabama Advocate, was pleased to print in his last issue this commendation:

The last issue of the New Orleans Christian Advocate is in every respect the best we have seen for years. Somebody is putting in good work on that old reliable paper now, and as we have no means of knowing any better, we just conclude that that "beaver overcoat and silk hat" are getting in their work. We congratulate you, Bro. Carter, and hope to shake hands with you under your "silk hat" at the Seashore in July next.

We are grateful for that. We suppose, however, that editing a paper is somewhat like preaching a sermon. Sometimes you have "liberty," and make a success, and sometimes you get wofully "in the brush." We think, too, that "silk hats" are out of place at camp meeting.

Notes.

Will the brethren give us short notes from their work? We have received many which we like because of their brevity. We have received many which too many words are used to state a few simple facts. "Brevity is not only "the soul of wit," but is the reporter's sine qua non.

These are certainly the days of wonderful achievement. Take this instance:

A feat in fast telegraphy was performed March 7, by the Postal Telegraph Company. A dispatch was filed at their office in Newark, N. J., at noon, addressed to a passenger on a Canadian Pacific train, which left Winnipeg two days before. The dispatch overtook the train at fifty miles east of Vancouver, British Columbia, and an answer was received in Newark, at 2:15 P. M.

The Southwestern Methodist has this:

One who goes out to convert sinners and yet can not be trusted to pay his debts; the man who leads the class in church and abuses his wife at home; the professing Christian who thinks himself a saint because he reads the Bible through once a year on his knees, and yet seems to his neighbors as one who never read the Bible at all; the woman whose zeal to be a missionary lets her own family run to ruin—all these mark perversions of piety—a deformed, misshapen religion that needs the correcting influence, not of more fervor of spirit which would only aggravate the evil, but the correction of common sense.

From the Arkansas Beacon, of Searcy, we learn that the Galloway Female College building has been completed at a cost of $29,000. It has a front length of 188 feet; total depth, front to rear of north wing, 116 feet; depth of west wing, 52 feet; depth of east wing, 46 feet. The building is constructed of brick, with stone trimmings, four stories in height, and covered with tin. It contains 64 rooms, of which 64 are bed-rooms for pupils. We are glad to chronicle this evidence of prosperity in educational matters among the Methodists of Arkansas.

These extracts from the private letter of a lady, not of Louisiana nor Mississippi, do us so much good that we must publish them. Speaking of the Advocate she says: "I can not afford to miss a single copy, for it is a dear friend stepping in once a week with its bright face for a friendly chat, always bringing words of comfort, sympathy, encouragement and instruction. May God bless your efforts to place the Advocate in every Methodist family. It forms an attachment and strengthens the bonds of union in our hearts towards each other and the church we love, and makes us feel more like one great happy family." After that "we thank God and take courage."

There is a phrase coming in vogue among preachers, and by some often used in the pulpit, to which we desire to call attention. We are guilty of such temerity with the brethren, because we can not see any use for the expression, and we do not believe the preacher should say a thing that amounts to nothing. The phrase is this: "I want to say this!" If a preacher has anything to say, why should he preface its utterance with "I want to say this?" Why don't he say it without such a preface? And when he repeats it two or three dozen times in one sermon, he has lost a good deal of time and distracted the hearer's attention. Why should he tell the people that he "wants to say" what he is going to say? To some ears it sounds like the preacher was conscious of an inability to say what he desired to say. It sounds as if he was conscious of the nebulous character of his thought and did not really know whether he could say what he wanted to say. We think the phrase could well be banished from the pulpit without harm either to pulpit or pew.

Personal and Otherwise.

Mrs. Margaret E. Sangster, it is said, has accepted the editorship of Harper's Bazar.

L. Prang & Co., Boston, have laid us under obligations for specimens of Easter cards and booklets. They are as beautiful as can be; artistic designs intended to emphasize the gladness and joy of the Easter season.

Dr. Haygood has in press, to be ready about May 1 (Hunt & Eaton, New York), another new book, "The Man of Galilee." It deals with the unbelievers, and is a study of the method Jesus took in teaching and saving men.

Mr. Gladstone has refused an offer of £100 to write an article no longer than would fill a page of The Contemporary Review, on, "What books he would recommend children to read." He is too busy to accept the generous offer.

Rev. J. F. Semlock, pastor on our Lower Coast mission, gave us a pleasant call last week. He represents the work on his mission as doing well. He has five preaching-places, with an average attendance at each place of about thirty hearers.

Bishop Galloway will preach the baccalaureate sermon for Vanderbilt University, on Sunday, June 16

We give our readers this week the introduction to Dr. Carradine's sermon on the Louisiana State Lottery. This is just a taste of what the readers will get in this sermon, and you see from this that, as Horace Greeley used to say, you are going to have "some mighty interesting reading." It is also published in pamphlet form and may be had from this office; price, ten cents per copy.

Mrs. C. E. Merrick has favored us with a programme of the exercises of the Seventh Annual Convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Louisiana, which is to be held at Alexandria, April 25-28. Among those who are to take part in the exercises of the Convention, we note the names of Miss Willard; W. H. Goodale, of Baton Rouge; Rev. J. T. Sawyer, of this city, and Rev. Dr. W. C. Black, of Mississippi.

Bro. Van Valkenburgh has established his headquarters at 106 Camp St., where he proposes to keep a supply of Methodist literature. In his absence, Mrs. C. H. Young will attend to all demands. If you are in the city, call on him. If you are out of the city, all letters addressed to him at the above-mentioned place will receive prompt attention.

The Tulane Medical College last week turned out seventy-eight doctors of medicine and fourteen graduates in pharmacy.

The Episcopal Bishop of North Carolina has made a discovery which, if true, will be welcomed by those of our preachers who are troubled with sleeplessness. He says a half-pint of peanuts, roasted in the shell and taken with a glass of milk just before going to bed, will produce sleep every time! Try it and report.

The Minutes of the Louisiana Conference show that Felicity Church, in this city, raised last year, for all purposes, $16,740. There are 401 members. This makes $41 74 per member! Who can beat that?

During last week revival services were held by Bro. Parker in Carrollton, and by Bro. Wimberly at Felicity Street. The attendance at both churches has been good, and quite a number of persons have been converted.

Bishop Galloway and Dr. Wheat spoke at the Grenada District Conference in behalf of the new Mississippi college, and the result was $2,025 added to the endowment fund.

We are under obligations to President Brouner, of Hiwassee College, for an invitation to attend the thirty-eighth commencement of that institution, May 12-14.

Rev. H. W. Cooper, of Edwards, Miss., is the orator for the Alumni Association of Hiwassee College at its approaching commencement.

Several of our missionaries in Brazil have had the yellow fever. All were reported convalescing at last accounts.

It is said that John Bright gained his rare mastery of strong, pure English by his close study of the English Bible. That Bible is the place where most men get all that is worth having.

There are three Presbyterian elders in Mr. Harrison's Cabinet: Wanamaker, Noble and Miller. The President also belongs in the same category.

She was a thoughtful preacher's wife who said, "It takes pretty poor preaching to spoil the gospel."

There are in the United States 2,500 women having diplomas from either American or foreign medical schools.

—Rev. J. W. Honnoll, writing from Holly Springs, Miss., April 5, 1889, says: "Please say that the Ashland Quarterly Conference will be held at Mt. Pleasant. It was not located when I sent you the list. One new parsonage on the district built since Conference, and six churches on the way, and collections all improving."

—Rev. L. Roberts writes from Americus, Miss.: "My congregations have been good, and, with time and labor, I hope to revive the church, so that by the end of the year my elder may give me credit for not being idle. Have had a revival in two of my churches, and pray that a general outpouring of the Spirit may be had."

—Rev. H. M. Banks writes from Sugar Town, La.: "I see in the ADVOCATE the good Lord is blessing the labors of his servants. In this part of his vineyard there have been seven children baptized, and four received into the church—three of whom were received by baptism. One of this number has declared his intention to preach the gospel, and will get license at the next Quarterly Conference. He is a young man of about eighteen years of age, and promises well for the church in the future. I thank God for an awakening influence that promises a full harvest during this Conference year. Sinners are being convicted and converted; the backsliders are being reclaimed, and good feeling seems to exist throughout the circuit."

—Rev. Robert Harry writes from Lafayette, La., April 3: "If it will be of any interest to you, I will say that we are having a good time here. We have already had the converting power and the reclaiming power of God in our midst, and have had some accessions. We only started on Sunday."

—Rev. W. W. Simmons, writing from Ellisville, Miss., April 5, says: "Our meeting at Hattiesburg began March 24, and continued eleven days. I was ably assisted by Bros. G. D. Anders and N. J. Roberts. The interest was great from the first service, and continued to increase until the close. The interest became so great until the large church was filled to overflowing with anxious hearers. Some of the hardest sinners came to the altar for prayer, were converted and joined the church. The exact number of conversions I can not tell; but quite a number, forty-nine, joined the church. The church was gloriously revived. The people are blessed, God is glorified and we are glad."

Periodicals.

—The April Century is a Centennial number, one-half of its pages being devoted to this subject. The frontispiece is a picture by I. R. Wiles, Washington Taking the Oath as President. The first article is a historical sketch of the Inauguration of Washington, written by Mr. Clarence W. Bowen (secretary of the Centennial Committee). This is followed by two articles from the pen of Mrs. Burton Harrison: Washington at Mount Vernon after the Revolution, and Washington in New York in 1789. Mr. Charles Henry Hart, of Philadelphia, one of the best authorities on this subject in the country, describes the Original Portraits of Washington; and McMaster, the historian, writes concerning A Century of Constitutional Interpretation. Mr. Bowen's article, Mrs. Harrison's two papers, and the brief paper by Mr. Hart, are all illustrated with authentic portraits of persons, places and objects pertaining to Washington and his times. Mr. Bowen's paper is accompanied by a portrait of Washington, by Joseph Wright, which has never before been engraved; the original is in the possession of Mr. Bowen himself. Stoart's original studies for his portraits of General and Martha Washington are reproduced, and other portraits are engraved for this number which, it is thought, have not before seen the light. Other articles there are, some of which are of great value. Century Company, New York. Price, $4.

The following is the table of contents of the April number of The Chautauquan: Gossip about Greece, by J. P. Mahaffy, M. A., of Dublin University; Agesilaus, by Thomas D. Seymour, M. A., of Yale University; Greek Art, by Clarence Cook; Sunday Readings, selected by Bishop John H. Vincent; Color in the Animal World, by the Rev. J. G. Wood; What Inventors Have Done for Farming, by James K. Reeve; The Care of the Insane, by A. G. Warner, Ph.D.; Sunday Labor, by the Rev. Jesse H. Jones; The First Presidential Inauguration, by Charles Carleton Coffin; English Pronunciation, by Robert McLean Cumnock, of Northwestern University; Student Life in Paris, by F. M. Warren; British Columbia, by Sheldon Jackson, D. D., U. S. General Agent of Education in Alaska; Women's Clubs in London, by Susan Hayes Ward; A Virginia Plantation, by C. W. Coleman; The Secret Service of the Treasury Department, by Mrs. Carl Barus. Meadville, Penn.

—The Forum, for April, is as full as usual. Prof. G. P. Fisher opens the number with Cardinal Manning and the Public Schools; Judge Tourgee asks, Shall Wilto Majorities Rule? Remedies for Social Ills, is by Edward Atkinson; Signs of An Impending Revolution, by Dr. W. Barry; Dr. Thomas Hill writes on A Way to Teach Spelling; The Scope of the Monroe Doctrine, is by H. C. Bunts. There are a few other articles. Forum Publishing Company, New York. Price, $5.

—The frontispiece of the Magazine of Art, for April, is a fine engraving by M. Morse—The Dead Bird. The opening paper of the number is from the pen of Mrs. Schuyler Van Rensselaer, who writes of the famous American painter, Washington Allston. A very interesting article, copiously illustrated, is the one on Netsukes: Their Makers, Use and Meaning, by H. Seymour Trower. Lovers of the grotesque in art will be entertained and instructed by this paper. The third of L. Higgin's Series on the Isle of Arran is given, as is also the third in the series on Illustrated Journalism in England. Mr. John Forbes-Robertson contributes a very interesting paper, well illustrated, on Greco-Roman Portraiture in Egypt. Cassell & Co., New York. Thirty-five cents a number; $3 50 a year in advance.

—Our Little Ones and the Nursery is the best periodical for the "wee little folks" that comes to our office. The April number is especially good. Russell Publishing Company, Boston. Price, $1 50.

—The Popular Science Monthly. The Psychology of Spiritualism, by Prof. Joseph Jastrow; Agnosticism, by Prof. Thomas H. Huxley; Zoological Gardens; Their Uses and Management, by R. W. Shufeldt, M. D.; The Derivative Origin of the Human Mind, by G. J. Romanes; Science and "Christian Science" by Frederik A. Fernald; Curiosities of Natural Gas, by Prof. Joseph F. James, M. S.; Plants in Witchcraft, by T. F. Thiselton Dyer; Sketch of James Pollard Espy, (with Portrait). Correspondence: Silk Culture in the United States.—The Mental Force of Woman. D. Appleton & Co., New York. Price, $5.

—The April Wide Awake is as fresh as the breath of spring, and you see the flowers blooming and hear the birds singing and breathe sweet odors while looking on the scene. John Burroughs gives the story of his boyhood; Mrs. Blathwayt writes of Sir Walter Raleigh and the Potato. The whole magazine is full of articles of interest and pictures of beauty. D. Lothrop Company, Boston. Price, $2 40.

—If vigorous thought and pungent presentations of live and popular themes are to be found anywhere, they are certainly presented in the growing and all-praiseworthy Christian Thought, of New York, edited by the widely known and justly celebrated Dr. Charles F. Deems. The April issue is on our desk and is a rich repository of learned discussions. Kemp B. Battle, LL.D., furnishes an article which claims more than ordinary attention, entitled, A Discussion of Some of the Trials and Judicial Proceedings Mentioned in the New Testament. The Rev. Robert B. Fairbarn, D. D., LL.D., presents A Logical Definition of Christianity, and is worthy of specific notice. The pen of Prof. Martyn Summerbell, M. A., writes entertainly and forcibly on Does the Nirvana of Buddha imply Immortality. Other and abundant matter is contributed, making the April number one of the many excellencies. Readers of advanced thought can not afford to neglect subscribing for it. The subscription price is $2 per year. Clergymen, $1 50. Single number, forty cents. Back sample copy, twenty-five cents. Wilbur B. Ketcham, publisher, 7t Bible House, N. Y.

PAMPHLETS.

—The Everlasting Covenant. Anniversary Music. Hood's Carols for Easter. These are all for Easter, and published by John J. Hood, Philadelphia.

—Missionary Songs for the use of missionary meetings and concerts. Prepared by Rev. E. S. Lorenz. Published by W. J. Shuey, Dayton, Ohio.

—Songs of the Morning. By Rev. I. Baltzell and Rev. E. S. Lorenz. Publisher, W. J. Shuey, Dayton, Ohio. These are new and fresh songs sprinkled in with old-time favorites and will, doubtless, command a good share of patronage and minister to the pleasure of many. Price of the first is twenty cents, or $2 per dozen; the latter thirty cents, or $3 50 per dozen, postpaid.

Notice.

Please correct, through the columns of the ADVOCATE, the self-denial report for Franklinton charge, Brookhaven district, Mississippi Conference, 1888. The self-denial offering of those good people was $27 65, whereas they have credit for nothing. "Credit to whom credit is due." I would have corrected sooner, but did not get my Minutes till the twenty-eighth ultimo.

COAL PRODUCTION IN THE SOUTH.—The increase in the coal production of the South during 1888, as compared with preceding years, was very heavy, though the output during 1889 will very far exceed that of last year, as there is a steady growth in the number of mines in operation. The report of the United States Geological Survey shows that the total production in West Virginia, Maryland, Kentucky, Alabama, Tennessee, Virginia, Georgia, Arkansas and Texas in 1888 was 18,091,567 tons, valued at the mines at $10,816,777, against a total production of 15,201,743 tons in 1887, valued at $16,593,697.

WONDERS OF THE PARIS EXPOSITION.—The roof of the Palais des Machines, at the Paris Exposition, is regarded by mechanicians as the engineering marvel of the age. The rectangular building is 1,390 feet long, 150 feet high, and has a glass roof span of 360 feet. There is nothing in the world like it. In the whole structure there are 6,000 tons of iron; cost, $700,000. Through the central and entire length of the building four parallels of shafting will run. Overhead, a gangway will be constructed as a promenade for those who wish to look down upon, rather than into, the machinery. The water and steam power will be supplied through an immense system of subterranean conduits. In all the buildings of the state, 50,000 tons of iron, mostly wrought, will be used.

THE PROFIT-SHARING SYSTEM.—Mr. Alfred Dolge, proprietor of the extensive felt manufactories at Dolgeville, Herkimer Co., N. Y., has for some years past set apart a portion of the profits of his business for the benefit of his employees. In pursuance of this plan, Mr. Dolge has established a school in order that the young may have the advantages of a thorough education. Mr. Dolge has also introduced a system whereby his workmen, after ten years continuous service, are entitled to a pension proportionate to the wages earned, in case of inability to work, from accident, sickness or old age. He has in addition made an arrangement by which every employee who has been for five consecutive years in the employ of the firm becomes entitled to a life-insurance policy of $1,000, and at the expiration of the tenth year to an additional policy. Those employees who are rejected by the insurance company have an equal amount deposited to their credit in the German Savings Bank of New York. A mutual aid society and a school society have each received large donations from Mr. Dolge. He helps the men to become the owners of their homes by building houses on plans prepared by them, which he allows them to buy and pay for on monthly instalments of $10 each. Mr. Dolge encourages the complete independence on the part of his help, and his system has been found to work very successfully.

Milwaukee is said to have the first drawbridge working by electricity, a structure 300 feet long, turned by a 10-horse power motor.

Street sweepers run by motors are being constructed for surface roads run by electricity.

Her Majesty, the Queen, has decided to have electricity replace candles in Windsor Castle.

A six weeks' electrical exhibition is proposed to be held in St. Louis next September.

A new method of utilizing the power of running streams has been devised by M. Tayn, a Russian engineer. His apparatus consists of an endless cable carrying a series of canvas cones which open and shut like an umbrella. The cable passes over a double drum on board a pontoon, and at the other end over a pulley suspended from a buoy. On the lower part of the rope the cones are opened and forced forward by the current of water, thus setting in motion a shaft or drum.

The latest estimate of the pig iron production throughout the entire country show that in 1888 the South made 1,132,858 tons of pig, against 929,436 tons in 1887, an increase of 203,000 tons, or nearly 22 per cent.

A Chicago Company proposes to pave Houston, Texas, with burnt clay, and incendamize the surface. A pavement of this kind has been tried successfully in Chicago for seven years.

Mr. Ouspensky, a Russian engineer sent to Central Asia on a special scientific mission, reports that the oil wells at Penjakend, near Samarcand, in the Zerafshan Valley, contain at least 9,000,000,000 pounds of perfectly pure oil.

The finest file of human manufacture is a rough affair by the side of the rush used by the cabinet makers; the sharpest cambric needle is as blunt as a crowbar compared with the beesting; the scissors of the turtle's jaw is a piece of perfection compared with those of man's make; the squirrel carries chisels in his mouth that grow sharper by use; the porcupine's quill is strengthened by ribs similar to those of the modern ship; the hollow beams which engineers love found to be stronger than solid ones, and their prototypes in the stalks of grain and the bones of birds. The mechanism of nature is perfect, and man has yet a long distance to travel before equaling her.

Three Reasonable Requests.

1. Let every subscriber carefully read this issue of the ADVOCATE, and then show the paper to some neighbor who does not take it, and ask him to subscribe.

2. Let every minister arrange for a complete canvass of his circuit, so that every family of every Methodist congregation may have the paper offered to them. Where the minister can not do this personally, let him appoint some suitable person to do it.

3. Let the benefit and duty of subscribing for our church paper be mentioned in every congregation, and all reasonable efforts put forth to obtain new subscribers, and secure the renewal of old ones.

Frances E. Willard,
Prepared by Special and Unanimous Request of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union Convention of 1887, with an Introduction by Hannah Whitall Smith (H. W. S.),
Author of "The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life."
In this work is portrayed the life of the most widely known and universally beloved woman in America, if not in the World, as well as the only complete history of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and kindred organizations from the Crusade to 1889.
GRAND JUBILEE EDITION!
1889 completes Miss Willard's 50th year of life,—her 30th year of temperance and Christian Work, her 10th year as President of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and the 15th year of the history of that grand organization.

WONDERFUL SPECS.

BY REV. F. H. STRONG.

One day the sweetest fairy,
Good Humor is her name,
With footsteps light and airy,
Into my study came.

"Write to the lads and lassies,"
She said, "throughout the land,
And say I have some glasses,
Most wonderful, on hand.

"Each pair the power possesses
So to affect the sight,
That nothing seen distresses,
For everything looks right.

"In fact, it is amazing
(So tell the girls and boys),
When through these glasses gazing,
How griefs turn into joys.

"What once seemed sad and dreary
Through them looks glad and gay;
The cloudiest day seems cheery,
And work appears but play.

"And now," she said, when starting,
"That you may know how true
Is all I've been imparting,
I'll leave a pair with you."

I've found that she related
Not half what might be told;
Their worth could not be stated
In rarest gem or gold.

They give to all things beauty,
And, lowly though it be,
There's charm in any duty
I through these glasses see.

So, children, get and prove them,
They'll cause you glad surprise,
And then do not remove them
A moment from your eyes.

For one must always use them,
I've learned, so bear in mind,
Or else he's sure to lose them,
And they are hard to find.

Neptune to the Rescue.

Neptune was a pure Newfoundland, and brought up to care for his master and his master's family; but, like his noble species, it was his wont to care for everything that really needed and deserved his care.

One evening the gentleman went to the theatre, sitting in a private box and taking his favorite dog with him. In the course of the drama, which was slightly sensational, the stage became the scene of a fierce struggle between a mother and two ruffians for the possession of a little child. One of the ruffians had grasped the woman's shoulders from behind, and the other was about to tear the child from her frantic grasp, when a new and unexpected actor appeared upon the scene.

Good Neptune, from his master's box, had seen about all that kind of work that he cared to see, and had evidently only been waiting for good men, where there appeared so many, to hasten to the rescue; but when he saw the ruffian's hands upon the child, he cleared the railing of the box at a bound, and lighted on the stage, and, at the first onset, he fairly knocked one of the ruffians over, thus setting free the child. His next attention was bestowed upon ruffian number two, whom he was dragging down upon the stage, when the scene-shifters and property men came to the rescue. But not until the owner of the dog had come upon the stage, and the two ruffians had left the mother and child in peace, could the noble animal be subdued.

The gentleman of the box tried to explain to the audience, but there was no need. They understood fully, and the noble Newfoundland received round after round of applause, uproarious and hearty.—Harper's Young People.

Mr. Editor: I am a little girl nine years old, and enjoy reading the children's letters in the Advocate very much. I wrote to you several weeks ago; but I guess it was delayed and did not reach you in time to be published, and it found its way to the waste-basket. I now write again, hoping this time to see my letter in this week's Advocate. I will now answer Jennie Faulkner's question: Cain was the brother of Abel. He killed his brother. I will ask the little cousins a question: Where in the Bible is the word "whirlwind" found, and how many times? With much love to you and your family and the dear old Advocate, I am,

Your little friend,

MATTIE NORSWORTHY.

Jackson, Louisiana.

Mr. Editor: As I've never seen a letter from this place, I thought I would write. I am a little boy eight years old. I go to school to Miss Mollie Sullivan, who is a splendid teacher. We also have a nice Sunday-school, which we all enjoy so much. I can not write very well, so will get mamma to copy this. As this is my first attempt, I hope you will not let it find the waste-basket. Your little friend,

RICHARD KEITH.

Keithville, Louisiana.

Mr. Editor: I have never seen any letters written from here in your paper, and I could hardly expect any. We have had the Christian Advocate in our family as far back as I can remember, and I love to read the little cousins' letters. We have only lived in the North three years, before which we lived in New Orleans, La., where now lives our dear grandmother, whom I am trying to surprise by writing this letter. I attend the Jasper Street Sunday-school, which is a very pretty building situated on the corner of North and Jasper streets. I am in the sixth grade, and my teacher is Mr. F. S. Traverse. We all belong to the Methodist Church; that is, papa, mamma, brother and myself. I will close for this time, for fear of my letter being too long; but before I do close, I want to say I have found a friend in Jesus. I remain,

Your friend,

EDNA PATIN.

Decatur, Illinois.

Mr. Editor: Some time has elapsed since I last wrote you, though I have been a constant reader of the children's column and enjoy the nice letters and stories very much. We have a nice Sabbath-school at our Methodist Church, and also a nice one at the Baptist Church, near us, which we will attend, as our own church (the Methodist) is not near enough for us to attend. Our pastor is Rev. N. J. Roberts. We all love him ever so much, and think him a splendid preacher. I attend school about one mile from home; go to my eldest sister. We are a family of eleven sisters and brothers—seven boys and four girls. Six of us go to school to sister, and one of my older sisters attends school at the C. F. Academy, of Clinton, La. I will answer Willie H. Morse's question. The word "which" is mentioned seventy-five times in St. Luke iii, 24-28. I will close by asking a question: Where in the Bible is the word "grasshopper" mentioned?

Wishing the Advocate much success, I remain,

Your little friend,

VENA POWERS.

Clinton, Louisiana.

Mr. Editor: I wrote to you about one year ago. As you were kind enough to publish my letter, I will write again. I want to tell Bennie Parker that I have a cat which I think is as nice as any cat, though it is not in color like his. Mine is a gray, with two or three yellow spots on its back. I also wish to tell B. P. that his papa baptized my two oldest brothers. Now, I will ask Bennie, Where in the Bible is "blue clothes" spoken of? With many good wishes for the Advocate, I remain,

Your little friend,

CHALMERS L. GILLIAN.

Rodney, Mississippi.

A Piece of Her Mind.

A lady correspondent has this to say:

"I want to give a piece of my mind to a certain class who object to advertising when it costs them anything—this won't cost them a cent. I suffered a living death for nearly two years with headaches, backache, in pain standing or walking, was being literally dragged out of existence, my misery increased by drugging. At last, in despair, I committed the sin of trying an advertised medicine, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, and it restored me to the blessedness of sound health. I honor the physician who, when he knows he can cure, has the moral courage to advertise the fact." The medicine mentioned is guaranteed to cure those delicate diseases peculiar to females. Read printed guarantee on bottle-wrapper.

For all derangements of the liver, stomach and bowels, take Dr. Pierce's Pellets. One a dose.

A capital anecdote is told of a little fellow who, in turning over the leaves of a scrap book, came across the well-known picture of some chickens just out of their shell. My companion examined the picture carefully, and then, with a grave, sagacious look at me, slowly remarked: "They came out 'cos they was afraid of being boiled."

HOME.

More than building showy mansions,
More than dress and fine array,
More than domes or lofty steeples,
More than station, power and sway,
Make your home both neat and tasteful,
Bright and pleasant, always fair,
Where each heart shall rest contented,
Grateful for each bounty there.

Seek to make your home most loving,
Let it be a smiling spot,
Where, in sweet contentment resting,
Care and sorrow are forgot;
Where the flowers and trees are waving
Birds will sing their sweetest song;
Where the purest thoughts will linger
Confidence and love belong.

There each heart will rest contented,
Seldom wishing far to roam,
Or, if roaming, still will ever
Cherish happy thoughts of home.
Such a home makes man the better,
Sure and lasting the control;
Home with pure and bright surroundings
Leaves its impress on the soul.

—Evangelical Messenger.

Heroism at Home.—How useless our lives seem to us sometimes. How we long for an opportunity to perform some great action. We become tired of the routine of home life, and imagine we would be far happier in other scenes. We forget that the world bestows no titles as noble as father, mother, sister or brother. In the sacred precincts of home we have many chances of heroism. The daily acts of self-denial for the good of a loved one, the gentle word of soothing for another's trouble, the care for sick, may all seem as nothing; yet who can tell the good they may accomplish? Our slightest word may have an influence over another for good or evil. We are daily sowing the seed which will bring forth some sort of harvest. Well will it be for us if the harvest will be one we will be proud to garner. If some one in that dear home can look back in after years, and as he tenderly utters our name, say, "Her words and example prepared me for a life of usefulness, to her I owe my present happiness," we may well say, "I have not lived in vain."—National Presbyterian.

Let in the Sunlight.—"The average woman," says Lucy M. Hall, "seems to be possessed of a positive mania for keeping the sunlight excluded from her house. This domestic photophobia is one of the most obdurate as well as one of the most general of maladies. The sufferers will consent to cough, to limp, to endure the torturing twinges of rheumatism, or to see their children grow up pale and peevish, rather than that the colors of the cherished carpets should be dimmed by a hated sunbeam, or that a "horrid fly," invited by such radiance, should dare to buzz within their sacred domains. Occasionally we see a pretty bay window invitingly thrown out; and we can not help thinking what a lovely place for mother's sewing chair, a reading desk, or, oh, horror! the children's playthings. But from a shutter drawn grudgingly a little to one side we see—what? A plaster image or a piece of pottery perched upon a spindle-legged stand, all the radiance which is permitted to enter lost upon its senseless particles. There was a substratum of reason in the so-called "blue-glass craze" of a score of years ago. It meant that pallid houselings sat in the sunshine and got well. 'Tis pity that a folly so wise should have been abandoned."

Many Women Never Rest.—They seem not to understand what rest, real rest, means. To throw one's self down with a newspaper or book is not rest; it is only a change of occupation. To sit down and keep the fingers flying over some sort of fancy work, as if one were pursued by a demon of unrest, is certainly not rest. But to lie in full length on a hard surface, arms extended at the sides, head back, with no pillow, eyes closed, all cares and worries dismissed, this is rest; this will smooth away wrinkles in the face and in temper; this will give an air of repose to the tired, anxious, nervous woman; this will take away many an ache, and straighten out the rounded shoulders and craned-out necks. —Exchange.

Conversion puts us back into the Garden of Eden, and gives us access to the tree of life, where we may insure our immortality.

People Wonder
when they find how rapidly health is restored by taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. The reason is that this preparation contains only the purest and most powerful alteratives and tonics. To thousands yearly it proves a veritable elixir of life.

Mrs. Jos. Lake, Brockway Centre, Mich., writes: "Liver complaint and indigestion made my life a burden and came near ending my existence. For more than four years I suffered untold agony. I was reduced almost to a skeleton, and hardly had strength to drag myself about. All kinds of food distressed me, and only the most delicate could be digested at all. Within the time mentioned several physicians treated me without giving relief. Nothing that I took seemed to do me any permanent good until I began the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which has produced wonderful results. Soon after commencing to take the Sarsaparilla I could see an in my condition, my appetite began to return and with it came the ability to digest all the food taken, my strength improved each day, and after a few months of faithful attention to your directions, I found myself a well woman, able to attend to all household duties. The medicine has given me a new lease of life, and I cannot thank you too much."

"We, the undersigned, citizens of Brockway Centre, Mich., hereby certify that the above statement, made by Mrs. Lake, is true in every particular, and entitled to full credence.—O. P. Chamberlain, G. W. Waring, C. A. Wells, Druggist.

"My brother, in England, was, for a long time, unable to attend to his occupation, by reason of sores on his feet. I sent him Ayer's Almanac and the testimonials it contained induced him to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. After using it a little while, he was cured, and is now a well man, working in a sugar mill at Brisbane, Queensland, Australia."—A. Attewell, Sharbot Lake, Ontario.

GOOCH—MARION JORDAN CHILDERS, consort of W. D. Gooch, of Pleasant Hill, La., died suddenly at her home, March 1, 1889. She was born in Georgia on March 19, 1811; was married to W. D. Gooch, in June, 1871. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at a very early age. To speak of one so well known to a large circle of relatives and friends, possessed of so many virtues and so much beloved, is no easy matter; the difficulty being to restrain our words.

Sister Gooch was raised by a mother whose love and labors were abundant in the Savior's vineyard. With this training she seemed to combine the character of both Martha and Mary. Were tables to be served, the poor to be relieved, the sick to be comforted, her hand was always ready, moved by a warm and loving heart. Did her pastor need, she seemed to anticipate his and his family's every want, as many of the members of the Louisiana Conference can testify. Her last labors were that of having a parsonage built in Pleasant Hill. For this she labored much, until she saw it accomplished but a few months before her death, and it will stand here, near by her church, where she so much loved to worship, as a memento to her memory, and comfort to the itinerant preacher and his family that are sent to the Pleasant Hill circuit for years to come. They will call her blessed. Was there a time when she was needed in the house of God, and here seemed her greatest delight; for her seat was seldom vacant. If able to attend, and it was here she seemed to sit at her Master's feet. Though not demonstrative, yet in her very expression she showed how much she appreciated the glad tidings of great joy.

The last time I visited her, not many days before her death, she met me with her Bible in hand, with her face, as I thought, unusually bright. I have no doubt but what she had been sitting at her Master's feet, reading his precious words, and pleading his promises; and I have thought since her death that, perhaps, her Savior was that morning lighting up her soul for her sudden departure; for the messenger did come in a few days, without a note of warning. He came a few moments after she arose from the breakfast-table, in apparent good health. He came in the form of apoplexy, and without a word of alarm to friends he laid her down to sleep—we verily believe in the arms of her Savior.

Thus passed away a loving and faithful wife and mother, for she was truly a mother to her husband's children, as she had none of her own. Now, may those loved ones left behind remember her godly life, and labor and follow on until all join in the glorious song which angels sing unto him who has loved us and washed us in his own blood!

Resolved, That in the death of Sister Gooch, her husband has lost a high-toned Christian wife and counselor; her two step-daughters, and also nieces, a faithful and loving mother; the Sunday-school, a faithful worker; and that we will ever cherish her memory as a faithful Christian woman, whose death has left a vacuum not easily filled.

Resolved, That we pray the great Head of the church to give us some one to take up the good work which she has laid down.

Resolved, That we offer to her bereaved husband and his children our sincere condolence that we remember them in our devotions and remind them that "earth has no sorrow that heaven can not heal."

Her pastor, J. M. JOHNSTON.

DALTON—At the regular meeting of the Methodist Sunday-school of Bastrop on Sunday, March 3, the following was adopted:

Whereas, By a mysterious dispensation of Divine Providence, the superintendent of this Sunday-school, Mr. THOMAS H. DALTON, has been taken from us; therefore, be it

Resolved, That while we bow in humble submission to the will of "him who doeth all things well," we feel very deeply the loss we have sustained in the death of him whom we all loved and loved to honor.

Resolved, That we hereby bear witness to his scrupulous and unflinching fidelity to duty, and to his earnestness and zeal in all work pertaining to the interest of the church, and especially the Sunday-school.

Resolved, That we tender to the family of our deceased superintendent our sympathy in their great sorrow, and we devoutly pray that the great Head of the church may have them in his keeping.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be furnished the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and the Morehouse Clarion for publication.

WEST—'Tis with mingled feelings of sadness and pleasure that I comply with the request of her relatives and essay to pay this brief tribute of respect to the memory of ANNIE TOMLINSON WEST. A feeling of sadness at the necessity of recording her death, and a pleasure in being able to bear testimony to her worth and Christian loveliness. After three weeks of suffering her spirit broke its bonds and winged its flight to the shore celestial. Just twenty-one years of age, she had crossed the threshold of womanhood and gave promise of filling the sphere of "a perfect woman nobly planned;" but the fatal day of February 23 cut short her career on earth and called her home. She had been for some time a member of the Methodist Church, and was remarkable for her consistent piety. It was not of the demonstrative order, but was a steady, constant flame, shedding its effulgence at all times and places.

We will all miss her. An only daughter, the idol of father, mother and brothers, how poignant must be their grief. We, her schoolmates, will find it hard to realize that our friend is forever gone. And yet, when we think that her spirit now helps to swell the heavenly choir, and knew that a word would bring her back, which of us would utter it? 'Tis hard to bow to the chastening rod of him who doeth all things wisely; but we kiss the rod, and say, "Not my will, but thine be done." FLORA.

HAILS—Mrs. NANCY HAILS departed this life, February 21, 1889. Sister Hails had had dropsy of the heart fifteen years, and had been bedridden for six months. She was born in Darlington district, S. C., and was the daughter of Edmon and Elizabeth Moore. Her parents emigrated to Mississippi in her childhood, and settled in Rankin county. Her people were all of Baptist belief; but she joined the Methodist Church. She was married in her twenty-second year to John E. Hails, and made him a kind and affectionate wife, and was the mother of ten children, of which eight survive, and all are members of the church but one. She was very religious and was always glad to have the opportunity of talking on such subjects. Sister Hails was seventy-six years old, and had been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church sixty years. She said she did not fear death, but said, "I will soon be with Jesus." We have no doubt but that Sister Hails is at rest. We sympathize with the bereaved husband and children. But their loss is her gain.

B. N. RAWLS.

BELL—Departed this life, January 13, in Grand Cane, WILLIAM WARREN, son of Mary Eliza and Lewis Heber Bell, in the ninth year of his age. Of the intellectual endowment, his young life gave promise of a useful and successful manhood. Already he had learned to read and love the divine truths of the Holy Scriptures. Gentle, affectionate and sympathetic, he was greatly beloved; but the happy family circle is broken—one gem from the household casket is missing. That beautiful life is forever gathered into the heavenly fold ere its brightness had been dimmed by the cares and sorrows of the world; and when there shall be no more, with that great company no man can number, he will be there immortal and glorified.

GRANDMOTHER.

GREEN—WYLIE W., the son of H. H. and Jo. A. Green, departed this life, January 17, 1889, aged twelve years, eleven months and five days.

After a serious attack of malaria he passed away from earth and friends who mourn his loss. He was an extraordinary child, which made him many friends in the community in which he lived. He always gave strict attention to what he was taught in school and in Sabbath-school. But while he has passed from our school and the embrace of his parents, he has only preceded us a few days, and only makes the attraction toward the other shore stronger. He awaits the resurrection. O. L. SAVAGE, P. C.

Organization is a grand thing, and by it vast good can be done that can not be done without it; but nevertheless God deals with individuals, and he saves others by individual work. To neglect either is a grave mistake for anyone. - Golden Censer.

The Encouragement of Numbers.

Which do you prefer to lose, your health or your fortune?

After all, there is no alternative, if you lose your health you lose your fortune.

On the other hand: if you gain health, you gain fortune, for have not our wise old philosophers agreed that Health is Wealth.

From our standpoint we might say that Compound Oxygen leads to this best of all, wealth. But we leave that as an inference from what our patients say of us.

Note the encouragement in the following:

OFFICE OF JOURNALIST, NEW YORK, July 28, '88.

We rarely notice anything of a medical nature in the columns of the Journalist, but we must make an exception in favor of Starkey & Palen's Compound Oxygen, which we know to be all that they claim for it, and so give it our hearty and unqualified indorsement.

UTICA, MISS., July 16, 1888.

I most cordially recommend your home treatment to all persons suffering from nervous prostration or general debility, neuralgia and sick headache. Indeed, I would say, all chronic diseases.

MRS. THOMAS H. LEWIS.

ALBANY, DOUGLAS, LINN CO., July 19, 1888.

At the time I ordered your treatment for my son, he was compelled to leave school he was so ill. Thanks to your Compound Oxygen, he is now able to be about all the time, is not troubled with catarrh, and has not had an attack of asthma since he began using it.

MRS. C. M. WILLARD.

These instances are valuable, of course, so far as they go, but if you would like the encouragement of numbers, send for our brochure of 200 pages; it will be forwarded, free of charge, to any one addressing Drs. Scientific.

The Field of Invention Unbounded.

The impression is very generally prevalent that the field of invention is being reduced by the achievements of the thousands of bright intellects that are now working upon its various problems. As each circuit of a mowing-machine diminishes the area of grass to be cut in a meadow, as each furrow turned by the plow lessens the work to be done on a farmer's arable acres, so it is supposed that every new application of science, or device for promoting the comfort, convenience, or profit of mankind, brings nearer a coming time when invention will be compelled, by lack of room, to come to a halt. This is natural, because we are accustomed to compare the immaterial and intangible with material and tangible things. When we speak of a field, whether it be for the plowman, the poet, or the inventor, we naturally think of measurable space. But the field of mental effort is not measurable, and so far as we know, is unlimited. To fix its bounds would be to set an arbitrary limit to the progress of the human race. In science, art, literature—in all that exalts and embellishes life—the space yet available for progress comes as near infinitude as anything we are capable of conceiving. To one who stands in a valley, the horizon is near; let him climb a hill, and his view is expanded. When he attains a greater height the prospect appears still wider. The inventive genius of the world is rising higher and higher every day. Its prospect never appeared so utterly boundless as now. All that has been achieved, all the grand conquests that are recorded are but an atom in the balance weighed when brought against the possibilities of the future. Every victory suggests new lines of effort, and equips the victor for further and better work. The supplying of one want suggests means of supplying others. So long as there is work for man to do, the inventor will find employment. Unless the Author of nature has fixed an impassable barrier to the progress of man, invention will never have a vacation.—The Inventive Age.

PAPER IN BUILDING.—The use of paper fabric for building purposes—by the term paper being meant, broadly, a flexible sheet made of vegetable or other fibre which has been reduced to a pulp, and then pressed out and spread and dried—is now advocated by some builders on the following grounds: First, continuity of surface; that is, it can be made in rolls of almost any width and length, is flexible, or by glueing several layers together, may be made stiff, and will stop the passage of air, because there are no joints. Second, it has no grain like wood, and will not split. Third, it is not affected by change of temperature, and therefore has an advantage over sheet metal as roofing material. Fourth, whereas in its natural condition it is affected by moisture, it may be rendered waterproof by saturating with asphalt, or by a variety of other methods. Fifth, it is non-resonant and well fitted to prevent the passage of sound. Sixth, it is a non-conductor of heat, and can be made also of incombustible material like asbestos, or rendered fire resisting by chemical treatment. The combination of paper with other substances and solidifying the mass by pressure, renders practicable the production of a material capable of replacing wood for many purposes; and not the least among its characteristics of adaptability is the ease with which it may be made into sheets of any width and thickness, that it will not warp or shrink from heat, cold or dampness.

Says an old writer: "As Noah was drunk with his own wine, Goliath beheaded with his own sword, the rose destroyed by the canker bred in itself—so are we undone by ourselves. The bitter waters of Meribah and of Marah, that we drink so deep of, are of our own mingling and embittering; the rods that scourge us are of our own making; sin, like a friar, whips itself. We may thank our own folly for our own bane."

You don't know how much better you will feel if you take Hood's Sarsaparilla. It will overcome that tired feeling, purify your blood, give you a good appetite, and make you bright, active, and strong. Be sure to get Hood's Sarsaparilla. Sold by druggists.

CHEAPEST FURNITURE HOUSE IN NEW ORLEANS
J. G. GRANT
50 and 52 Baronne Street,
OFFERS THE FOLLOWING SUGGESTIONS:

THERE are two ways to make money. One is to earn it; the other is to save it. There are two ways of saving money. When you save a dollar by putting it in the bank you do well, but when you save a dollar by shrewd purchasing you do better. The first is saving; the second is in reality earning. So there are two ways of earning money--by labor and by wise purchasing.

LET ME SAY A WORD ABOUT PURCHASING:

The FIRST THING to learn in order to become a successful purchaser is that price means nothing until you have seen the goods. The fact that Bedroom Suits, for instance, cost $100 in one store and $65 in another tells you nothing. The $100 suit may be worth $125, while the $65 suit may not be worth carrying away. It is only when you have compared the goods as well as the prices that you are in a position to judge of what is cheap and what is not. Goods may be too cheap sometimes. Prices don't always tell the whole story. Either know the goods or know the dealer. If he has a reputation for liberality and straightforward dealing, people soon find it out. When you learn that he is carrying a larger and better stock, and that his trade is increasing rapidly, both in the city and the adjoining states, why it means something. It means that his business methods have been approved, that people have discovered his liberal ways and taken advantage of them, and it points you the direction for your next purchase.

The SECOND PRECEPT in successful purchasing is that the best is always cheapest in the end. Many people who have never visited my warerooms have the idea that only cheap goods are sold because I do not put on much outside style and occupy a showy and very high priced store, but one visit will prove that this is a great mistake. Remember that there is a big difference between CHEAP GOODS and GOODS CHEAP. Go elsewhere for cheap goods, but come here for goods cheap. The man who sells cheap goods sells his customers at the same time. I am not in that line of business. The public are beginning to understand the difference, and my trade proves it very clearly. A word to the wise is sufficient. Call and see how cheap fashionable furniture of the best quality can be sold.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Minnesota and South Dakota were swept by a series of windstorms last week, which caused hundreds of thousands of dollars' damage to property, and several lives have been lost.

The Democratic candidate for governor of Rhode Island was elected last week.

Mr. Robert T. Lincoln called upon the President and Secretary Blaine on April 4, and formally accepted the English mission. He will sail for England about the fifteenth of May.

The Georgia State Farmers' Alliance declared in favor of cotton bagging on April 4. This action affects 100,000 farmers in Georgia, and it is likely to be followed by other Southern States.

A Bible convention, to continue about sixty days, was begun in Chicago, on the fourth. Mr. D. L. Moody will have charge of the meeting, assisted by the Rev. W. O. Clarke, of Brooklyn, and other revivalists.

The case of Hope & Co., of Amsterdam vs. the Board of Liquidation was tried on April 5, in the civil district court, this city. The case is one of great importance to the State of Louisiana, inasmuch as it involves the funding of bonds amounting to over four million dollars.

The President has practically determined to take a few days' of recreation outside of Washington as soon as he can do so without sacrificing the public interests.

A rich vein of silver has been found on a farm near Fort Dodge, Iowa. The find was made at the depth of 110 feet.

On April 6, in this city, the graves of the Confederate dead were decorated. The Union veterans of the Grand Army of the Republic joined in the tribute. Miss Mildred Lee and Miss Winnie Davis were present and took part in the ceremonies.

Norfolk, Va., was visited by a cyclone on the seventh. The wind blew into the harbor a tide which flooded a part of the city. The United States steamer Pensacola sank in dry dock where she was being repaired for sea.

A large fire raged in Savannah, Ga., on April 6 and 7, which destroyed fifty buildings, including a Presbyterian Church. No loss of life occurred. The total loss is estimated at $750,000. Insurance, $500,000.

The extensive ax, shovel and saw factories of Hubbard & Co., in Pittsburg, Pa., were completely destroyed by fire, on the seventh, entailing a loss of fully $500,000.

The first National Bank, of Anoka, Minn., closed its doors last week, as the cashier had absconded with the available funds.

A strong newspaper syndicate, composed of some of the leading dailies in America, has been formed for the purpose of a scientific exploring expedition to the unfrequented portions of Central America.

FOREIGN.

Gen. Boulanger has left Paris in order to evade the prosecution demanded by the French ministry. He is now in Belgium. The Chamber of Deputies, on April 4, voted urgency for the discussion of the accusations against Gen. Boulanger, who, it is charged, is trying to overthrow the republic.

The House of Lords, on April 4, elected the Earl of Morley, a liberal, chairman of committees, rejecting the Marquis of Salisbury's candidate, Lord Balfour, of Burleigh.

The Pope is engaged on a long encyclical letter, chiefly devoted to the question of State socialism. The letter will soon be completed.

Advices received in Brussels from Stanley Falls state that Arabs, who have arrived there report that Stanley and Emin Pasha were heard from in February. They were then marching toward Zanzibar with several thousand men, women and children.

In the Chamber of Deputies, on April 5, Signor Crispi, the prime minister, stated that the death of King John, of Abyssinia, would enable Italy to extend her possessions in that country.

The Correctional Tribunal, in Paris, acquitted Senator Naquet and Deputes Laisant and Turquet, leaders of the League of Patriots, and three other members of that organization of the charge of belonging to a secret society, but imposed a fine of 100 francs each upon them for belonging to a society not authorized by law.

It is said that Prince Victor Napoleon visited Gen. Boulanger in Brussels recently, and they held several conferences.

A dispatch from India says that hundreds of houses have been destroyed by fire at Surat. The loss is placed at £200,000.

Since the suspension of work on the Panama Canal over 8,000 laborers have been repatriated from the isthmus. A consular investigation shows that there are still over 3,000 persons on the line of the works who are in a destitute condition.

The new captain-general, Salamanca, continues diligently looking into the affairs of Cuba with a view of practicing the most economical measures for its government.

In the House of Commons, on April 8, the lord advocate introduced a bill providing for local government in Scotland. The bill creates county councils, the members of which are to be elected by householders. All boroughs with a population of 7,000 will be merged into counties; the others will be self-governed.

Spring Medicine.

The necessity of a spring medicine is almost universally admitted. And the superiority of Hood's Sarsaparilla for this purpose becomes more and more widely known every year. That power to purify the blood, and those elements of strength and health which the system craves, and to which it is so susceptible at this season, are possessed by this peculiar medicine in a pre-eminent degree. Scrofula, pimples, boils, or any humor, biliousness, dyspepsia, sick headache, catarrh, rheumatism, or any diseases or affections caused or promoted by impure blood or low state of the system, are cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla. Try the peculiar medicine.

The clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policy-holders.

The Episcopal Diocese of New York has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and The Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the Insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

East Tennessee, Virginia & Georgia R. R.

Well known as the Great Kennesaw Route, is now making twelve hours quicker time to Washington via New York and eastern points, with Pullman Buffet Sleepers from New Orleans to Washington without change. The mountain resorts of East Tennessee are reached in twenty-four hours, and Virginia resorts in thirty hours. For tickets, sleeping accommodation, circulars, schedule, etc., call at Kennesaw ticket office, 22 Carondelet street.

From Most Rev. Bishop Ryan, of Philadelphia.

I can testify to the efficacy of J. & O. Maguire's Cundurango, it having been my favorite medicine for several years past. I believe it to be the best Anti-Bilious Cathartic and Corrector of Liver, Blood and Kidney derangements that can be taken, and its general use in families would no doubt avert attacks of sickness.

The Grenada Collegiate Institute.

This deservedly popular female college is located in Grenada, Miss. It was represented at the Grenada District Conference, which lately met at Duck Hill, Miss., by its learned president, Rev. Thomas J. Newell. It is in a prosperous condition.

We would call special attention to the advertisement of Messrs. A. W. Skardon and Son, prominent grocers, at Nos. 643 and 645 Magazine street. One of their specialties is that of unfermented communion wine, made of pure grape juice, and free from alcohol. This supplies a great desideratum for our numerous readers who are members of temperance societies.

Messrs. Skardon & Son are reliable gentlemen, personally known to the business manager for years.

CHEAPEST FURNITURE HOUSE IN NEW ORLEANS.—This is the heading of the advertisement of Mr. J. G. Grant's, 50 and 52 Baronne street, New Orleans. Now, we would suggest to our readers to peruse it carefully, and they will be astonished at the low prices which Mr. Grant is selling furniture for. As this gentleman is thoroughly reliable, and guarantees the smallest article that leaves his store, we feel satisfied that those who may try him once will have further dealings with him. There is no store of this character in the South that keeps a larger or finer assortment than his, and as his expenses are less than others in the same line, he has informed us that he can sell lower. Try him.—N. O. Weekly Picayune, January 24.

Faith evermore overlooks the difficulties of the way, and bends her eyes only to the end.—Bishop Hall.

A PASTORAL.

The rosy dawn creeps up the mountain-side,
Touching with light, green, copse, and grassy lea;
The world to life is wakening far and wide,
And songs are heard from every bush and tree.
Come, let us hasten where the white-thorn blows,
Or on the hedges seek the pale blush-rose.

Up! up! The fields are fresh with dews of sight,
And hear you not the strains of Corlo's flute?
They take the purple hills with such delight
That not an echo in their glades is mute;
And earth, and air, and sky are filled with sound:
Great nature's hymn, sweet, passionate, profound.

Come 'neath the temple of the morning sky,
And let us pay our orisons to heaven;
The lark is singing as she soars on high,
Leaving the nest to which she dropped at even;
Only prayer and praise be pure and true,
They, too, will rise into the vaulted blue.

What shall our organ be? The winds that blow,
And what our choir? The breeze's silver chime;
While clear-voiced streams that, rippling, gently flow,
Will move with us in sweet melodious time.
Oh, come, and we shall keep glad festival,
And heaven's high gates will open at our call.

The Louisiana State Lottery Company Examined and Exposed.

BY REV. B. CARRADINE, D. D.

I.—MY REASONS FOR DISCUSSING THE SUBJECT.

First. Because the Lottery is one of the monster evils of the day. If asked to name the great agencies of immorality in the land, after mentioning Mormonism and Impurity and Intemperance, we would not have declared the giant evil until we had named the Louisiana State Lottery. Nor has it attained its full dimensions; every glance directed toward it shows it to be steadily growing.

Next. Because it is the duty of the pulpit to call attention to great existing evils, and, in the name and spirit of God, warn the people, as well as rebuke the iniquity. This obligation to warn upon the part of the ministry is seen in the peculiar arrangement of divine providence in their behalf. Separated from the distractions and engrossing cares of a secular life in which the people are necessarily engulfed, they are to watch for them, and sound the thrilling cry of an approaching moral danger which they are thus happily and better prepared to see. The obligation to warn is also realized in the call to the ministry. The Bible also insists upon the duty, while the Holy Spirit, with steady pressure upon the preacher's heart and conscience, urges him to cry aloud and spare not. The fact that the warning may accomplish no good and effect no change is not allowed to enter the mind as a factor in the decision. Several such messages were sent to me in the last few days. The Bible provides for just such a mental emergency or crisis by saying, in substance, "Thou shalt give them warning from me whether they will hear, or whether they will not hear."

A third reason: Because of the growing unconcern or indifference of the people to the matter. One of the peculiar and lamentable things about human nature is, that it grows accustomed to evil. At first it is much shocked; then it is not so much shocked; then it ceases to be shocked at all. As some one has said, we "first endure, then pity, then embrace." In looking back over the past you have wondered how men endured certain moral abominations; history often showing them patiently, silently wearing an intolerable yoke of spiritual servitude. But the fact is, that at first they did not endure, but resisted. They fretted and chafed under the iniquity; then gradually the struggle ceased; a spirit of hopelessness crept in, or the mind grew accustomed by constant vision of the ghastly spectacle. The hideousness of the moral, or rather, immoral, features of the custom was worn away by the attrition of a thousand glances and ten thousand thoughts. Spiritual apathy now dominated, or, worse still, there was a positive acceptance of the evil—if not still worse, a loud and open defense. This state of things is felt to exist to-day in regard to the Louisiana State Lottery. There is a silence in regard to it that is oppressive. Silent pulpits, silent newspapers, and a silent community. What is the cause of this silence? Is it hopelessness, or apathy, or indifference, or acceptance and belief in the evil? One of the unmistakable signs of being poisoned is the speechless tongue. And one of the indubitable evidences of moral poisoning is the silent lip and tongue in the presence of great immoralities and iniquities. We have an overshadowing wickedness in our midst in the shape of the Lottery; but whose pen or voice is being steadily moved and uplifted against it?

Fourth. Because of the intention of the Louisiana State Lottery Company to apply very soon to the people and Legislature for a new charter. The matter is to be submitted to the voters of this State, who shall by the ballot-box decide whether we are to have this colossal gambling institution fastened upon us for another twenty-five years.

The Lottery Company will make some remarkable offers. It is determined to carry the election. An institution whose shares originally cost one hundred dollars, but which can not now be purchased for nine hundred, is not willing to give up such a Golconda. So it will offer to pave the streets of New Orleans and pay the State debt, and other wonderful things in a financial way for us, if we will only grant it the privilege of fastening its octopian suckers upon us once more and financially squeezing us for twenty-five years. It can afford to be more than liberal—in fact, extravagantly munificent—for this million-fold, intensified, cotton-compress movement upon the purses of the State for a quarter of a century. It can afford to give that historic and long-expected mule and forty acres to the negro voter, millions of dollars to the State, and another quarter of a million to the Legislature. For it is well known that for every dollar it gives it receives a thousand back. If millions go out, tens and scores of millions will return. Don't, then, be overcome when the offer of this Company shall be made known. Don't get in a spasm of fear lest the institution shall cripple or impoverish itself. When I was a boy, more than once I saw a poor young man courting a rich girl. One I recall was especially devoted to a young lady owning a Mississippi plantation. He sent her several packages of candy, a couple of bouquets and gave her a buggy ride. We children thought he was not only liberal, but recklessly extravagant; but, as we grew older, the occurrence was beheld under new lights, and we saw he was simply investing ten dollars in order to get an hundred thousand.

Look out for the bouquets and bundles of candy and buggy rides that the Louisiana State Lottery will offer us, as a city and State, in the next two years. Don't be tickled to death and lose your common sense and moral judgment when the presents and attentions begin to pour upon you. It is the young man after the rich Mississippi girl; it is a greedy institution whose eye is upon the stores and plantations and pocket-books of Louisiana, not to speak of the Nation itself.

Fifth. In order to arouse conscience, create public opinion, and awaken moral sentiment. One remarkable thing about conscience is that it responds only to truth. It would sleep on forever if truth was not lived or spoken in its hearing. The proof is in history and in your own experience. As for public opinion or sentiment, it has to be made, and invariably comes from the agitation by pen and tongue of great moral questions. The Revolution of 1776 was preceded by writings and speeches innumerable, in which the issues between England and this country were presented and discussed before the people. The manumission of the slave in this century was antedated by a great leavening of the public mind by songs, books, addresses and sermons all over Christendom. The victories of prohibition have been achieved in the same way. All movements of reformation are begun, carried on and ended triumphantly by this method, and this alone. There is such a thing as inertia of spirit; it takes much to overcome it, and put the mass in motion. There are many millions of people who never think, especially in regard to moral questions. You who do think, must lift up your voices and wield your pens and make them think. Then will the fire begin to burn, the electric current of intelligent sympathy flash from heart to heart, the gigantic body politic begin to stir, the Nation will at last stand upon its feet, and speak and act as one man, and nothing will be able to stand before it.

I call your attention to another thought.

II.—THE DEFENSE THAT IS MADE FOR THE LOUISIANA STATE LOTTERY.

I find there is a defender for everything and anything. It matters not what may be its moral complexion, it will have a friend. I heard once of a pamphlet or book written in defense of Judas Iscariot, and there is even information of a man who defended the course of the devil. Remembering this, it is not surprising that we shall hear of arguments of defense made for the Lottery Company.

One defense put forth is, that this is a free country. There is no doubt that this is a free country. Sometimes I think it is a little too free. Some people here feel so free that they own allegiance and obedience to neither God nor man. They feel free to use dynamite and blow up their fellow-creatures at any time; they feel free to shoot down the President of the United States; and free to take twenty wives; and free to trample all commandments under foot, whether human or divine. But the thoughtful will tell you that this is not freedom, but a self-assumed license to do wrong. Our country is free in regard to our being protected from wrong and oppression of every kind, whether the outrage is directed to the purse or person or conscience. There is no freedom hinted at or expressed in this land, that is given to individual, corporation, ring, or syndicate to oppress or afflict in person or property an American citizen. According to the inherent rights of man, according to the spirit and letter of the Constitution of the United States, we should enjoy immunity and deliverance here. When the people of the Mayflower came over, it was not to found oppressive systems, but to escape from them. The exodus from Europe to America is a flight from social and financial oppression; not to be met on the so-called shores of liberty by a corporation that is to take from them, slowly but surely, the slim resources with which they ventured over, and leave them impoverished and helpless in a new and strange world. There is no spot in the universe where a person is free to injure another unless that place is hell. But this is not hell. This is a grace-redeemed planet, and overarched by the law and providence of God, without a single sheltering spot for tyranny. All over the breadth and beauty of the universe there is no spot devoted to wrong-doing; in a word, we are never free to do wrong.

Another defense that I hear is, that the Lottery exists legally. To this I reply that a thing can be legally right and morally wrong. It is legally right for certain evil houses to exist in this city, but they are morally wrong for all that. Slavery existed legally, but the spirit of the gospel was against it. There are people all around us holding property by some technicality—protected in its enjoyment by law, and yet it is known, both in heaven and earth, that the money is not theirs, and that they have not the shadow of a moral right. There is something higher and broader than State or national law, and that is God's law. Your duty and mine is to be posted about that law. If God says a thing is wrong, as he does of all forms of gambling, no law made by men can make that wrong right. All the Parliaments and Legislatures of the nations might meet and legislate until dooms-day, but they could never make right that, which God, in his Word, declares to be wrong. Moreover, if men make laws contrary to divine commandments, it is our duty utterly to ignore them.

A third defense made for the Lottery is, that it does much good, especially in the line of charity.

When I hear this, I candidly confess to you that I grow sick. Here is an institution that says to the State: I will give to your invalids and unfortunates forty thousand dollars, if you will allow me to exist as a gambling corporation in your midst, and thereby receive millions. I want you to take in this most wonderful business proposition. Suppose you wait upon a certain gentleman, and thus deliver yourself: "Sir, I will promise to hand your old sick grandmother one dollar every evening, provided you will give me a thousand every morning." We will suppose that he finds a man foolish and senseless enough to agree to this amazing proposition. He receives a thousand dollars and distributes one to the aged relative of his benefactor. Now, what, if, in addition to this, he poses before the community as a man of great charity! Words would fail to describe your amusement and indignation. And yet this is the identical action of the Louisiana State Lottery. Its proposition to the country is, you give me millions of dollars in the morning, and I will give you back some thousands in the evening. Make me rich, and I will give a pittance to your sick. Done! relies the State to this most brilliant proposition, and done it is.

But here comes in the nauseous portion, in that we are required to call this a great charity upon the part of the Louisiana Lottery.

I read once of a bandit in Italy who enjoyed the reputation of being exceedingly benevolent. True, he plundered everybody that came along the highway, but, then, he was never known to refuse a penny to a beggar! So he was counted to be kind. Does not this cover the case? Here is a gambling institution that has laid its grasp upon every purse in the country, enriched itself by its immoral methods on our very highways, had, as clear profits in the last twenty years, not less than thirty-six millions of dollars; and, lo! because occasionally it flings a few thousand dollars to the Charity Hospital, or gives a few pitiful hundreds to some other institution, it is straightway called benevolent! I think of the bandit. Do you remember this quotation? —"Yes, sir; he is as kind a man as ever scuttled a ship or cut a throat." Let me tell you something that occurred in a certain community that shall be nameless. I know the parties well. A certain lady, with a trifling husband and two dependent children, has, to my knowledge, had a weary struggle. She has fed, clothed and educated the children without the least help from her husband. He is often gone for months, but she remains at the post of duty and meets responsibilities that naturally should not press upon her. Lately the husband returned on a visit to his family after an absence of two years. He took the children on his knee, and, in a spasm of generosity, gave each one of them a quarter of a dollar. Delighted, the two children slipped from their perch, rushed into the mother's room, and cried out to her: "See what papa has given us! O mamma! isn't papa good?" The unutterably sick feeling, the returning rush of contempt and indignation that filled that woman's heart you can only faintly conceive. And yet this is the very feeling that is bound to arise in the heart of every proper thinking person when told of the goodness of the Louisiana State Lottery. Here is a firm or company that has not paid a dollar of taxes or license to the city since it began its career; is owing the city to-day over a million dollars; it has coined its millions; had fortunes ruined into it; and yet, because once in a while it contributes some little trifling sum to something or somebody, at once persons, as thoughtless and silly as the children I have mentioned, cry out in ecstacy: "Look what the Lottery is doing for us! O! isn't the Louisiana State Lottery good!"

A third defense made for the Lottery is, that it is financially profitable. The question might be asked with great force, and properly, "To whom?"—and the answer would open many eyes. We will treat of this under another point.

There are some people in this world that never ask another question about a business enterprise when they are assured there is money in it. That fact settles the entire matter; the whole thing becomes right at once. I suppose this was the case with the stockholders in this company, and it was the case with the Legislature of 1868, and with the voters who confirmed the matter. They thought, as it brought forty thousand dollars into the treasury, it was a profitable business, and, therefore, right. In a few moments I will call your attention to the short-sightedness of the voters and the Legislature, and that we never made a greater financial mistake than when we granted the charter to this famous—not to say, infamous—Lottery. But here I call attention to the peculiar effect that money has on some people's moral judgments. As soon as they hear the ring of a dollar, they can not hear the voice of conscience any more. Gold and silver tints hide moral blemishes and discolorations in any transaction, while bank bills puff up the attenuated falsehood until it possesses the roundness of the beautiful form of Truth. Then when we protest against certain dividend-paying evils, the answer is, "We see no harm in them." The profit has eliminated apparently the immoral feature. Ask the saloonist, "How can you carry on a business that is destructive to the souls and bodies of your fellow-creatures?" His reply is, "It is my living," or, "There is money in it." Ask the slave-dealer, "How could you sell a fellow-being into a lifetime of hopeless toil?" The reply was, "It is profitable." Doubtless, conscience uttered such an appeal to Judas—"How can you sell your Savior, the Prince of Life?" and his reply was, "I will obtain thirty pieces of silver."

This seems to have been the reasoning of the legislators of the State. But what a reason to urge; and what an amazing justification of the fastening of a gambling institution upon our city and State, because it brought money into the public coffers!

If such a principle as this is adopted, what is to become of honor and honesty and virtue itself? According to the course pursued in the Lottery matter, where State honor is bartered away for money, a man may dispose of the virtue of his family and defend his course.

O, the shame! Let no man here who voted for the incorporation of this Lottery, and who apologizes for its presence in our midst and, worse still, justifies its existence—let him never condemn a fallen woman again. All she did was to sell her honor for money, and that was what the Legislature did in 1868; and what you do who approve their course. Let none such ever express horror at the act of Judas Iscariot. He sold Christ, the everlasting Truth, for a handful of silver, and we sold the honor and integrity of a great State for forty thousand dollars.

A fifth defense I hear made for the Lottery is, that its drawings are carried on fairly. This is certainly calculated to make the public smile. It makes me think of a hangman putting out the following notice: "All hanging done by me is performed with strict impartiality." That is, he chokes all alike. I want you to think of a brigand sending such a notice as this to various cities in Italy—to Naples and Florence and Rome: "This is to certify that while I am plundering the traveling public in the mountains, yet it is done fairly and impartially. I rob everybody—taking all I can get from prince and peasant alike." Certainly that would come with refreshing power to the reading nation, and especially to travelers.

Done fairly! O, yes; but there is a great region of possibility, or, rather, impossibility, beyond the word that puts us all to pondering. To bring out the thought, let me suggest a business enterprise to some of your stock-concern projectors. Suppose, for instance, we purchase the great African Desert, running three or four thousand miles in length and one thousand in width. Having circulated the intelligence that some company is proposing to introduce the Mediterranean Sea into its borders, we will get it at a low figure. We will then purchase a number of camels, and, taking three hundred jewels with us, we scatter them here and there over that sandy expanse. One is worth an hundred thousand dollars; the others range from ten to five hundred. After this we invite the population of Europe to come in and hunt for the jewels; price of full admission into the desert, which we now call a Golconda mine, being ten dollars a head; or if we raise the jewels in value, we charge for the privilege of sifting the sands of Sahara, and gasping, fainting, despairing and dying upon its burning wastes, the paltry sum of forty dollars. The invitation now is, Come and be enriched. What is the use of working any longer? Remember the golden, gem-flashing sands of Sahara. But one thing more is to be done, and that is write a placard as long and broad as Morocco, and lean it up against the equator, saying, "All this is done fairly!"

There is just as much likelihood this cloudless, beautiful morning that you will be struck by lightning as that you would find one of these jewels; and it is just as probable that you would find that one hundred thousand dollar gem in the desert as that you will draw the capital prize in the Louisiana State Lottery.

Dickens presents a character in one of his works who often introduced himself, in substance, as honest Codlin. "Don't you believe in anybody but me. I am the friend. I do things on the square." This perpetual challenge to observe his fairness gradually brought a scrutiny that was not altogether favorable to "honest Codlin." When I see these oft-repeated notices about fair drawings, I have visions of a doubting public, and a profound conviction that a person or business that is perfectly upright need never declare its integrity; that the very declaration, especially if frequently repeated, causes men to doubt from the very depths of the soul.

A sixth defense for this Lottery that is urged is, that quite a number of people draw prizes.

Why, certainly they do. Don't you see their names in the paper every month. This is to certify that I, John Jones, runner in a certain bank, and I, Peter Robinson, clerk in a certain warehouse, held one-tenth of such a number that drew one of the capital prizes. The vocations of the fortunate gentlemen are a study just here, and quite significant. How many there are; just count—there must be fully ten or twelve. But what of the ten or twelve hundred thousand—the multitudes—the multitudes that drew nothing, that never did draw anything, and that never will draw anything—except a long countenance? This parading of Jones and Robinson and the ten other fortunates so frequently before the country, and thereby pulling the Lottery, and reassuring the departing faith of the people, reminds me of a scene that recently took place in the little kingdom of Siam. There was a great famine in that country; thousands were dying of starvation. The king and the court circle did not desire that this fact should be known to the outside world. So strict orders, under penalty of death, were issued to the starving country people to stay out from the capital city, and refrain from exhibiting their ghastly, attenuated bodies to the eyes of foreign visitors. On the other hand, the people of the capital were highly fed and gaily clothed, and the impression made upon travelers from afar that health and prosperity presided over the land.

The identical principle is observed by the Lottery. Smith and Robinson are gaily clothed, covered with smiles as with a garment, made to appear at the footlights every month in our great journals, kiss their hands to a deluded public—and retire for another thirty days to the intense relief of thousands of morally sickened people. But, mark you, it was so managed that, what with the hurrahs of the fortunate twelve, and the thunder of orchestral newspapers, the hollow groan of vast multitudes of cheated, bamboozled and disappointed people was not heard. Back of the grinning corporal's guard of lucky ones, what an innumerable army of ghastly, hollow-eyed, despairing men and women!

It takes two columns to publish the names of the few who are successful. But what if these journals had to print instead the names of those who have not drawn anything—and never did—and, what is more, never will? Surely the world would not contain the books.

EASTER MORNING.

BY ADELIA H. HOAVER.

I see the sculptured altar shine
With starry crowns of hope bloom.
Through dusky aisles a breath divine
From hidden geyser seems to rise
And float aloft to Paradise,
While silently, on bended knees,
Worship adoring devotees
After the Lenten gloom.

I hear the organ's thunder-peals,
And now the joyous anthem rings:
The heavenly solo gently steals
From that bewildering harmony
And, like a silver melody,
From vaulted roof and blazoned walls
A sweet celestial echo falls
While this fair herald sings.

God grant that all who watch to-day
Beside their sepulchers of loss
May find the great stone rolled away—
May see at last, with vision clear,
The shining angel standing near,
And through the dimly-lighted soul
Again may joy's evangel roll
The glory of the cross!

"Christian Womanhood."

A hiatus in my remarks on the "employment of woman" has been occasioned by a hurried trip I had to make to some of my children down on Indian River, which lies along or very near to the Atlantic ocean, low down on the southeastern coast of Florida.

I hope that my plain language may not be set down to indelicacy of taste, or my pointed remarks looked upon as idle waste of words. The language I use is not of choice, but of necessity to convey unmistakably and fully my honest meaning; and the remarks I make are not intended as "sinless dippancy, but sound and wholesome doctrine, enunciated with the hope of inducing to right thought and restraining from wrong action. Being sixty-four years of age, and having traveled much, I have necessarily seen much of the world and gathered up a large stock of experience, from which I draw; and, inasmuch as "from my youth up" I have been earnestly "striving to enter in at the strait gate," myself, when I endeavor to persuade others to pursue the right course, I hope my motives, at least, may be properly appreciated. And I believe they will be by the right-thinking and conscientious.

Well, to resume the important subject, let's see if it is at all practicable for ambitious Miss Susie to practice the profession of medicine, for instance, upon which she seems to have her heart set. There are some spurious, miscalled medical institutions, wherein anybody, however unqualified, can buy a so-called diploma to practice imposition upon the public. But who would be disgraced by such a fraud, or impose upon others with such humbuggery? Being in Philadelphia at the time attending medical lectures, myself, I was led by curiosity to witness the so-called graduation of the first female doctresses, who had come from around the corner somewhere to receive the degree of "M. D." I felt almost ashamed of being there, for there were so very few present, and they of the common sort, who also seemed, from their quizzical glances around, to feel like they, too, were out of place there. 'Twas a cheerless occasion—sad, indeed. There were three or four of them, and they all looked like "the last rose of summer;" had long since faded and fallen with departed hope of better fortune in life; and they seemed to have betaken themselves to that forlorn chance as a denier resort. There was nothing I could see prepossessing or promising in their faces—not a ray of cheerful hope light them up. The one only trait prominent seemed to be a stolid determination to meet their fate, whatever it might be. I felt sad then, and I feel sad now, that woman, created by the Almighty for such holy and noble destinies, should feel constrained to pursue such an out-of-the-way course. And as evidence of the downright disfavor with which that sort of thing was looked upon by the intelligent and refined in that city, they disdained to be present on that occasion, which they regarded as a degradation of the female sex; whereas the same large public hall was always crowded and packed with the elite whenever the degrees of "M. D." were conferred upon the sex they thought ought to assume such arduous and difficult duties with life-and-death responsibilities inseparably connected therewith.

As there are not, and never will be (it is to be devoutly hoped), enough ambitious Susies to justify a separate female college competent to qualify them to practice the profession with safety to the public, it with success to themselves, we will, for the sake of illustration, take it for granted that Miss Doctress Susie has passed through the same ordeal of three years in a male medical college, or overcome enough of modesty and acquired enough boldness (not to use a term less mild) to enter upon the difficult and unsuitable undertaking for woman.

Then, she must first decide upon a location, which even male doctors find to be a very painfully anxious question for them to settle. She must next procure, if she can, a suitable and central boarding-house, which she will find to be a delicate and difficult problem for her to solve. She must next outfit, if she can, with the necessary requisites to practice the occupation of her own choosing, but not of God's nor man's, nor other woman's approving, and which she will soon find to be more complicated and difficult than she had ever conceived of. The poor, deluded woman is destined to meet bitter disappointment at the very threshold, where the misguiding illusions of distorted fancy had led her to hope she would begin to realize the happy fruition of her long-cherished ambition. But she soon begins to discover that "'twas distance that lent enchantment to the view," that had led her on, step by step, in the dubious way from the sphere in which God intended she should live and reign supreme as the presiding genius of "home, sweet home"—the dearest place on earth—and be happy there herself, and prove a blessing from heaven to others, while fulfilling her noble destiny in her home and neighborhood, which will always afford ample scope and range for all her varied usefulness, without having to neglect her home altar, and the dear ones that worship there, for supposed grander schemes in larger fields.

But, let us suppose that Miss Doctress Susie who is bent on practicing medicine, has succeeded in obtaining a suitable boarding-house in a central locality, and that she has moved to her new quarters, and arranged for her untried business—all of which exercised her mind and body intensely until a late hour at night, when she retired for quiet repose and needed rest. But soothing sleep was slow in coming to her relief. And when it did come, it was attended with strange dreams; and, all too soon, the night-bell was violently rung, and she sprang from her warm bed half-alarmed, and, shivering with cold, she threw up the window, and inquired, "What's wanted?"

"Mr. Anxious wants you to come to his wife as quick as possible," a voice answers from the dense darkness.

She strikes a match and looks at the clock, which points to two A. M. And it is cold and stormy outside, with torrents of rain falling. "My!" she ejaculated, sotto, voce, "what shall I do?" Hearing the storm raging outside, she shuddered, bethought herself, and threw a wrap around her, and went back to the window, and said to the waiting messenger: "Tell Mrs. Anxious I'll drive over soon in the morning."

"But she can't wait," the messenger replied.

And there are often cases that just can't wait; and those in which it is claimed, by some, that a female doctress is the desideratum, are the very cases, par excellence, that can't wait, sure enough. And, now, what is Miss Doctress Susie to do under such circumstances, which have often befallen this old doctor? If she has thought to have a telephone arranged to order a carriage, what about an attendant to accompany her? I can't conceive how she can possibly have a suitable one. And it will not be at all proper for her to go out alone. To do either—go with an unsuitable one, or without any at all—will prove more fatal to her character than the pelting storm may prove to her life. So, if she goes under such circumstances, she loses her character. If she don't go, she loses her calling, to say nothing of the distressed family, which may be bereft and grief-stricken beyond measure.

And thus she realized, for the first time, the fatal mistake she had made in a calling, and the inextricable dilemma into which it had led her. But here we will drop the curtain and shut off the scene, which is too painful to witness further. More anon.

D. W. FOSTER.

PLAISANCE, La., March 26, 1889.

From the Work.

BROOKHAVEN DISTRICT.

MR. EDITOR: I have completed my first round as a presiding elder, and have had some novel experiences in doing so. This is my thirty-first appointment in the Mississippi Conference, but my first in this capacity. During the past thirty years, I served one mission, five circuits and seven stations. Now, as some of my brethren have written, I am trying "new harness." I can not say how it fits me, or how I suit it; but I can say that I am doing my best to make a good presiding elder. I belong to Christ and to his church, and am ready, as much as in me lies, to do the work assigned me, whatever that may be. I have always been a presiding elder's man. I think all my former presiding elders will bear me out in this statement. I have firmly believed in the office, and have been thoroughly loyal to its incumbents. The quarterly meeting has always been an occasion of interest to me, and I have helped to make it so to my people. Much depends on the pastor here. If the quarterly meeting is announced with emphasis beforehand, and the quarterly fast observed by pastor and people, then if a love-feast is provided for and held, and the sacrament of the Lord's Supper is administered, the occasion will come to be looked forward to with interest by our people, and be make a blessing to the church. Both presiding elder and pastor ought to unite in an effort to make the quarterly meeting helpful to all the interests of the charge. I write this after coming up on the other side and viewing the occasion from the standpoint of a presiding elder. My impressions of the value of a well-conducted quarterly meeting that has been properly prepared for are unchanged.

The general state of the church within the bounds of the district is good. My predecessor, Rev. J. M. Weems, D. D., (now in Mexico) did three years' faithful and efficient work on this district. He left an indelible impression on all the interests of the church, and in the hearts of all the people.

I find a band of faithful men in charge of the churches. They love the Lord with all their hearts, and are zealous for the salvation of souls. The pleasure of the Lord prospers in their hands. One brother, good and true, has had to fall back from the front on account of ill health. I allude to Rev. J. G. Sibley, who is now on the Gulf Coast to recuperate. The brethren inquire very tenderly about him, and pray for his speedy recovery and return.

The collections are being taken all around. In some charges the entire amounts assessed have been provided for by cash and good subscription. The liberality of the preachers is an inspiration to the people in many places. In some places the stewards go forward with liberal provisions, relieving the pastor of all thought and care in regard to the temporal interests of the church, including the collections ordered by the Conference. This is as it should be in every place. It is the true apostolic idea: "But we will give ourselves continually to prayer, and to the ministry of the Word." The Crystal Springs station sets an example in this matter worthy of commendation and imitation.

I have just received a letter from one of the young preachers of the district. He says: "I have organized one Woman's Missionary Society at W———, and reorganized the one at this church." That speaks for itself. He has a good future. He is a young man of good mind, good culture, good spirit, and good views of his duty; and he knows how to do things. I have been in full sympathy with the Woman's Missionary Society ever since its organization by the Atlanta General Conference. I have watched its progress, and have had some experience with it in my own pastoral charges. I have marked its happy influence on the spirituality and missionary zeal of the church wherever it has been in operation. And I do not hesitate to say that the pastor who does not foster the Woman's Missionary Society stands in his own light. These societies are dotted all over this district.

W. H. LEWIS.

FROM OPELOUSAS.

MR. EDITOR: I am glad to report progress from this part of the work, notwithstanding the many difficulties to be overcome. There are in the church here some as loyal Methodists as are to be found in any church in the land, who encourage their pastor in every possible way, and are doing all they can in support of himself and family. My stewards have made a liberal assessment for my support, and it is their purpose to raise the entire amount, which will be very gratifying, especially on account of previous shortage in this direction. Assessments for the various Conference collections have been reported, and every effort will be made to bring them up in full at our next Annual Conference. I have lifted a collection in the congregation for missions in cash and subscription, and will make a personal appeal to those who had not an opportunity to give at the public collection. Though I have held no special meeting as yet, I am glad to report an increased interest in all church matters, temporal and spiritual. Congregations have been good, and every meeting has been an enjoyable one, spiritually. All of our church interests are on the upward grade. Have received several into the church by faith and by letter, and have baptized a goodly number of children. I am visiting every moment I can spare from my other work, and have many precious seasons of grace with the brethren at their homes.

In my visitations I look specially after the interests of the ADVOCATE, and, as I look over my pocket memoranda, I find recorded opposite the names of many as follows: Some too poor to take it. Some take too many papers to take it. Some will take it soon. Some will renew on expiration of subscription. Some cash paid in hand. You may expect from me renewals and new subscriptions from time to time during the year.

We have a most excellent school in our midst, The Opelousas Female Institute, presided over by Mrs. M. M. Hayes, an experienced teacher, who is assisted by an able corps of teachers, and doing a first-class work. The fact that more than eighty pupils have been enrolled the present session, without any special effort on the part of the principal to canvass for students, speaks well as to the merits of the school. Having been established in 1871 by its present principal, it has been steadily growing in popular favor. Being a chartered school, diplomas are conferred upon all graduates, who satisfactorily complete the prescribed course of study. The commencement exercises of the present session will take place about the middle of June, and President W. L. C. Hunnicutt, of Centenary College, will deliver the sermon before the graduating class, Sunday, June 16, at eleven A. M.

On Thursday, June 20, a few days after the closing exercises of this school, our District Conference will convene at this place. We are making due preparation for these two events, and hope to have a glorious time, spiritually. President Hunnicutt has already promised to be on hand in the interests of Centenary, and President McVoy, of Mansfield, is expected in the interests of Mansfield.

R. S. ISBELL.

BAY ST. LOUIS.

MR. EDITOR: Our people evidence a growth in grace by a ready response to every department of church work. My salary is paid regularly each month. I have raised up to date more than half of our Conference collections. Have forwarded $60 foreign missionary money. Am more than hopeful of a full report at Conference, the Lord being gracious. Am doing what I can for the ADVOCATE.

Many of our preachers speak of the kindness shown them by their people. I wish to say that our people of Bay St. Louis are thoroughly methodistic—always ready to receive the preacher sent them, and to do for and by him the very best they can, and by many tokens show their appreciation of the Lord's servants.

The Woman's Aid Society deserves special commendation. They have just celebrated their second anniversary with gratifying reports. Though but few in number, with untiring zeal and energy they have put a new roof on our church, added the vestibule, new lights, and a new organ, and have on hand $40 towards purchasing new pews for the church. Truly this is an age of progress; and one of its most advance movements in church economy is the Woman's Department of Church Extension. Sister B. Jones, district secretary, came down the other day, and placed the matter fully before the ladies of the society, and without hesitancy they said: "Yes, we are ready to help build parsonages everywhere." (Just like, Mr. Editor, all preachers could get married, if they wanted to.)

P. C.

MOORINGSPORT, LA.

MR. EDITOR: I beg space in the ADVOCATE to explain a few facts and correct a few mistakes that appear in a letter published in the ADVOCATE, of March 28, 1889, headed, "A Quarterly Meeting," and signed "J. P." The part of the letter I refer to is as follows: "A most paradoxical report came from ——— Church; more than a hundred members enjoying a higher degree of spiritual life. A stove had been placed at the door, and the preacher donated the brick to put it up; yet the Sunday-school in winter-quarters two winters, the children perishing for the bread of life, and no one found to put up the stove." I am sorry that Bro. "J. P." ever heard such a report in my quarterly meeting. If the brother when making this report to Bro. "J. P." had spoken loud enough for me to have heard him, I could have proven it to be false by every other member of that quarterly meeting, and can do so yet. I do not remember all that was said in the meeting on the subject; but the facts are as follows: The said stove was bought in 1882 or 1883, and when I came to this circuit, I found it sitting in one corner of the church. I donated the brick, and made an effort to get it up; but at our last quarterly meeting the stove was reported, "Not up." The part that I wish to correct is this: There are but fifty-five members of the said church, instead of "more than a hundred." There is but one male and five female members of said church who profess and enjoy the "higher degree of spiritual life," instead of "more than a hundred." "The Sunday-school in winter-quarters two winters." If there has been a Sunday-school run through a single winter on this circuit during the past ten years, I have not heard of it. We also reported one church, with a nice new stove; glass just replaced in the windows, and the house made comfortable. I am sorry that Bro. "J. P." found a man that was in my quarterly meeting who would so misrepresent the truth. At the season that Bro. "J. P." visited my work the roads were bad and the weather very disagreeable; but, notwithstanding that, my stewards, like men of God, were at their places in the quarterly meeting, save one, who lived thirty miles off with two ferries to cross, near a mile wide. My congregations at Mooringsport are always small, and are very small in winter, and at the time of which we speak some of our church-going people were in New Orleans, and some sick. It was a bad day at that place for worship: the church on the bank of a lake, where the wind sweeps six or seven miles cross the water from the north, and no stove, made it a bad day for the sacrament or love-feasts. I refer Bro. "J. P." to the report from this circuit the past year, and I think that it will show that the wrong impressions have been made upon him.

I make these statements because I feel that they are due my people and the cause of Christ. As for myself, I prize the presence and power of the Holy Spirit above the praises of men.

J. S. SANDERS.

EDWARDS, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: Our pastor, Rev. I. W. Cooper, is now giving us his fourth year, and other denominations as well as our own seem edified and built up in their most holy faith" by his ministrations. Yesterday seven were received into the church, one of the number having walked many miles from his home in the country to attend.

Some weeks ago Rev. W. W. Hopper, of Jackson, was here six days, preaching and "expounding the Scriptures" day and night; and we trust that much good will eventuate from his labors. Earnestness in any good cause is always highly esteemed; and surely he was earnest and fearless in presenting the truth as he sees it. The minister of the gospel, above those of all other professions or avocations in life, has a right to be earnest, and he can not afford to be lukewarm in these matters. And as sensible sick people do not refuse needed medicine, however unpalatable, so poor, weak, sinful human nature should not rebel when representatives of the "Great Physician" find it necessary, in their efforts to save souls, to cauterize an ugly wound, or even to amputate a diseased limb. Our Savior's teachings on this subject are explicit enough. Neither should a phenomenal success of evangelists discourage the regular workers in the vineyard; for have they not previously prepared the soil of human hearts for the successful sowing of "the Word," and for consequent abundant reaping? This giving to every field the best culture of so many different workers is the crowning glory of Methodism. What one fails to do is supplemented by the labor of another; and this process goes on year after year, until finally the whole Conference field is literally pulverized and fertilized with the soul-wealth of hundreds of good men, all intent upon their Master's business, and each striving to render a strict "account" of his own noble "stewardship."

O what a privilege for Christian people of all churches and creeds to often meet to worship God! The writer of this once dwelt where churches were all destroyed and not rebuilt for years, and at another time on a convict plantation where a church-bell was never heard; and to such what sweet, peaceful feelings fill the soul as bell after bell rings out on Sabbath morning, or even as the sound of passing footsteps on their way to church are heard from the street at night! And if so pleasant now, what will it be on that endless Sabbath in the eternal city above? Words are inadequate to express; we must wait until a "new life" shall have given us a new celestial language, wherein our augmented joy may be correctly told.

E. E. H.

PLAQUEMINE BRULEE AND RAYNE CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: This field is large and inviting. While but three appointments, yet the membership is scattered all over this country, and I must hunt them up and teach them and comfort them at their homes as well as at church. As my Bossier friends predicted, I am making "school-house" appointments. I can't help it. The people are asking, begging for it, and the Spirit of God is upon me, and the holy fire burns in my very bones. The devil has been here as well as in other places. These people have suffered greatly at his Satanic hands, and are still suffering. Politicians have given the people rounds during the heated campaigns—and everybody knows what that means. Generally the devil gets on both sides of a political raise. This circuit is in a new parish. This parish had to have its domicile located. It had to be officered, and then State elections had to be held; so, with all its battles, it is a source of gratification that anything is left for Christ. Of course, there are left upon this battle-field the wounded and dying. There are old scars that will live long in some of our dear people. But, glory to God! the Lord is here, and we are gaining ground. Old troubles between parties are being broken down and cast out, and we are singing and praying in all this beautiful land.

I am so full of this work that I scarcely know where or how to find a moment for rest. There are so many excellent people; yet so many of these excellent people that claim no satisfactory knowledge of Christ in the salvation of their soul. While I am trying to preach a good deal, I devote much time to the prayer meetings and class meetings. If I would do your soul good, Mr. Editor, come to visit one of my red-hot prayer meetings, and see our people are, unknowingly, working this charge up into a grand revival. Yes, it is coming through the prayer meeting.

Our first quarterly meeting was well attended, and the presiding elder, S. L. Keener, preached us good sermons. We sent him on his way rejoicing with a good collection of finance to his support.

I am now at Lafayette, assisting Bro. Harry in a revival meeting. To the date (Saturday night, April 6) the meeting is "booming." Pray for us. The Lord is shaking up this town. Praise his name! Yours in Christ,

R. M. BLOCKER.

WATERPROOF, LA.

I have, after four years' effort, at last succeeded in getting this paper into a good family. After preaching in the neighborhood at 4 o'clock P. M., I spent the night with them. Next morning, having taken the ADVOCATE along in my saddlebags, sitting in the room alone reading, I turned first to Bro. Sawyer's article, and it stirred me in every way that I determined never to give up or get out of patience in working for my blessed Master; and though I had often pleaded with this good people, I resolved to try again, and I did, and proved a success. My congregations at these two appointments are growing. There were more at church this month than at any previous time this year. We very much need a church edifice in the Elizabeth neighborhood, and are going to try and convince the people of this fact. Then they'll build, believe.

Our Quarterly Conference, which convened some time ago, was a most delightful occasion with us all, and but for the rainstorm, Sunday evening, a wonderful amount of good might have been accomplished, as at 3 o'clock P. M. was the appointed hour for a missionary address by our able presiding elder. My best people speak of him as a powerful preacher, and his power lies not less in his eloquence than in his earnestness of soul and soundness of doctrine.

JAMES F. HUDDLE.

HILLSBORO, MISS.

We are moving on smoothly on the Hillsboro circuit. I think we are making some advancement all along the line. We have bought a house and lot in the village of Hillsboro, which we use as a parsonage. Our church in this place has just been painted, and lumber is on the ground to ceil it. This is due to the heroic efforts of our efficient steward, Dr. V. M. Neal. He is a son of the late Rev. W. B. Neal, of Alabama Conference, and is a chip of the old block."

Our people are very kind and thoughtful in regard to their pastor's wants. We have three faithful local preachers, full of the Holy Ghost.

We are praying and working for a sweeping revival. The ADVOCATE is not forgotten. Fraternally.

J. W. TINSLEY.

A Monument over the Grave of Rev. Charles E. McLean.

MR. EDITOR: Permit me to tender my thanks through the ADVOCATE to the members of Algiers M. E. Church, South, for the token of appreciation for my beloved brother, Rev. Charles E. McLean, in the form of a beautiful monument furnished by them, which now marks the resting-place of him they loved so well, bearing this inscription in gilded letters:

In Memory of Our Beloved Pastor.
REV. CHARLES E. McLEAN.
Died April 15th, 1888.
Aged 26 Years, 10 Months and 14 Days.

Members of Algiers M. E. Church, South.

Brethren of the Algiers Church: Your constant care and love manifested during the long affliction of your beloved pastor, is much appreciated by his aged mother, brothers and sisters, and another whose heart is yet sad because he is no longer with us. And, dear members, your love for him was warmly reciprocated to the last. He was ever anxious to hear from the dear brethren of Algiers. On several occasions, after opening a letter from Bro. Frank A. Daniels (who wrote for all), and it was found that you cared materially for his temporal wants, he would weep, and exclaim: "What have I done to cause them to think so much of me!"

He is gone to his reward. He tried to be faithful to you when in charge of your church. You were faithful to him while living and now perpetuate his memory by placing a neat monument over his grave. All who have seen it are well pleased with your selection.

And now, dear brethren, it is my prayer that Heaven's choice benedictions may be poured out abundantly on you all; and may it be our happy lot to clasp hands on the shore of eternal deliverance.

Yours fraternally,

D. W. M'LEAN.

LESSON IV.—April 28.

struction of the Temple Foretold

Mark xiii, 1-13.

OLDEN TEXT.—But I say unto you, that in place is one greater than the temple.—Matt. 6.

TIME.—A. D. 29.

PLACE.—The Mount of Olives, east of Jerusalem.

1. He went out of the temple—With is act ended his public ministry. As withdrew, the gracious presence of d left the sanctuary, and the temple, with all its service, and the ole theocratic constitution, was ven over to destruction. One of his ciples saith—Note St. Mark's vivid y of giving the very words of the ciple, instead of saying, with St. tthew, that they "came to show" buildings of the temple. What manner of stones—"In that temple," ys Josephus, the Jewish historian, were several stones which were forty-e cubits in length, five in height, d six in breadth;" that is, more an seventy feet long, ten wide, and ft high. These stones, of such normous size, were principally used building the high wall on the east de from the base to the top of the ountain. They were also, it is said, antifully painted with variegated lors.

2. There shall not be left one stone on another, that shall not be thrown down—To Jesus the sole beauty of a mple was the sincerity of its worshipers; and no gold or marble, no licate sculpturing or native gems, uld change for him a den of robbers to a house of prayer. When the mans had taken Jerusalem, Titus dered his soldiers to dig up the undations both of the city and of the mple. The Jewish writers themlves acknowledged that Turentius fus, who was left to command the ay, tore up with a plowshare the undations of the temple, hereby fulling the prophecy of Micah iii, 12.

3. over against the temple—Sitting wn on a knoll, to enjoy the magnifint view, so full of unutterable oughts to the rejected One, the apos-s had Moriah once more before them its whole glory, crowned by the marble temple, like a mountain with snow. ter . . . James . . . John . . . Andrew—The ur fishermen first called, and first med in all the list, the confidential ciples. Asked him privately—That they dared to put the question to m apart from the rest. Yet we may ll suppose that before the discourse self was commenced all the disciples thered to hear its important announcement.

4. When shall these things be—The estion embraced these points: (1) e time of the destruction of the mple; the sign (2) of his coming, d (3) of the end of the world. The n when all these things shall be fulfilled—The double question of the disciples first, respecting the destruction of Jerusalem, and especially the me when it was to happen; and, secd, respecting the signs of his advent, d of the end of the world, required a uble answer; the two parts referring ch to one of two events.

5. Began to say—Our Lord takes his n way of meeting their questions. r Lord, instead of beginning with e signs or premonitions of his secd coming, as many seem to think he es, and as the twelve may have exected, begins by telling what was not be so received, although apt to be taken for the signs in question. ke heed—Accordingly, this question the apostles drew from him the eat eschatological discourse, or discourse of the last things, of which the r moral key-notes are "Beware!" d "Watch!" and "Endure!" and "Pray!"

6. I am Christ—That is, claiming to Christ. Among false Christs, distinctively, were Dositheus, appearing the Christ foretold by Moses, and non Magus as son of God. Josephus s. Many affirmed the time of the vent to have arrived; and Hegesipus says, that many false Christs came. ll deceive many—His purpose in this st part of his discourse is not to tell at are, but what are not, the preonitions of the great catastrophe to hich he here refers.

7. Rumors of wars—Such, undoubtedly, were the three threats of war ainst the Jews by Caligula, Claudius d Nero; of the first of which sephus says, "that it would have ought extermination to the Jewish tion had it not been for Caligula's ath." Be ye not troubled—That is, not immediately take to flight. st words be—It is better, with most cent interpreters, to take the expression as only denoting the certainty the events predicted. This is the ound of the believer's tranquility.

8. Nation shall rise, etc.—There were rious disturbances—(1) at Alexandria, in which the Jews, as a nation, ere the especial objects of persecution; (2) at Seleucia, about the same me, in which more than 50,000 Jews ere killed; (3) at Jamnia, a city on e coast of Judea, near Joppa. The incipal earthquakes occurring between is prophecy and the destruction of rusalem were: (1) a great earthquake Crete, A. D. 46 or 47; (2) one at me on the day when Nero assumed e manly toga, A. D. 51; (3) one at ampea in Phrygia, mentioned by citus, A. D. 53; (4) one at Laodicea Phrygia, A. D. 60; (5) one in Campania. Famines—There was a famine retold by Agabus (Acts xi, 28), which mentioned as having occurred, by cilius Suetonius, and Eusebius; and ich was so severe in Jerusalem, sephus says, that many people perished for want of food. Four times in e reign of Claudius famine prevailed Rome, Palestine, and Greece. Trouble—(Terrifying confusions.) Mark ne gives this. The word denotes imarily a shock, or commotion; then mmotion of mind, overwhelming, a ght; and hence, with respect to pulic circumstances, public terrifying nfusion. Beginnings of sorrows—ose more distant troubles and tribulations, while they have no connection th the end of the world, are but the ens of the coarer catastrophe to the e and temple about which you have quired.

9. Take heed to yourselves—Not as a means of escaping from persecution, but as a means of preparing for it, as Christ bade Peter take heed against temptation. Shall deliver you up to councils—To the great council, or Sanhedrim—for this is the word in the original. This was fulfilled when Peter and John were brought before the council. Mark further adds that they should be delivered to synagogues and to prisons to be beaten, and should be brought before rulers and kings for his name's sake. All this was remarkably fulfilled. Peter and John were imprisoned; Paul and Silas also. They were also beaten. Paul was brought before Gallio, before Felix, and before Agrippa.

10. The gospel must first be published among all nations—The preaching of the gospel was helped forward by the very persecutions. When Jerusalem was being destroyed, already a church was collected from among the Gentiles. And even so while many of his hearers were yet alive the gospel was proclaimed throughout the Roman Empire, from Arabia to Damascus, from Jerusalem to Illyricum, in Italy and in Spain. But further, the gospel has yet to be preached universally for a testimony. And the universal diffusion of it by modern Christian missions is now a leading sign of the end.

11. Take no thought beforehand—(Be not anxious, as in the Rev. Ver.) The idea is: you need not distress yourselves by anxiously considering beforehand how you ought to speak before such high and august personages. For it is not ye that speak, but the Holy Ghost—"Ye who speak are nothing but the Holy Spirit." The Greek is not susceptible of the translation in our English version. The contrast is between "ye speaking" and "the Holy Spirit." The Holy Spirit is every thing. Every thing depends on him, not on you.

12. The brother shall betray the brother to death—The nouns are in the Greek without the particle, brother shall deliver up brother, and are thus, perhaps, more forcible statements of what should happen often. We learn from Tacitus that Christians were delivered up by their parents, brethren, kinsfolk, friends; from Josephus, that contention sprang up in their very houses; and that the Idumeans slew many of their own kindred; and from the Scriptures, that the Jews persecuted those of their own country.

13. Ye shall be hated—Tacitus says that Nero, for the conflagration of Rome, persecuted the Christians, "a race of men detested for their crimes." Endure unto the end—The primary meaning of this seems to be that whosoever remained faithful till the destruction of Jerusalem should be preserved from it. No Christian, that we know of, perished in the siege, or after it. But it has ulterior meanings, according to which the end will signify, to an individual, the day of his death, his martyrdom, as in the case of some of those here addressed; to the church, endurance in the faith to the end of all things.

Missionary.

The Missionary Cause.

BY HON. E. L. FANCHER, LL.D.

It is a mysterious truth that the cause of missions and the advance of the kingdom of Christ in the world should be impelled or impeded by human endeavor.

That the gates of heaven, which have been opened to all believers, should not be sought by millions of our race comprising the heathen world until Christian hearts have awakened sympathies in their behalf and Christian efforts are put forth for their salvation, is a proposition that is calculated to startle all thoughtful minds and to impress all Christian hearts. If this be true, how must other worlds of blest intelligences gather round this orb of earth to watch our movements, and to applaud every step that tends to advance the knowledge of the gospel among men!

The kingdoms of this world belong to Christ, and are his by costliest purchase; yet, strange truth! he awaits the movements of his church that he may take possession of his own inheritance.

When we look on the page of prophecy the future glows with brightest colors to heighten the promise of the present, and the fairest prospect in all the coming grandeur of humanity is the final triumph of the glorious gospel of the blessed God. Eighteen hundred years have elapsed since the great commission was given to the church to proclaim the gospel to all nations; yet how slow has the church been to comprehend and how tardy to execute the great commission!

There are yet numerous populous territories where no messenger of the glad tidings has been heard, and there are many tribes of immortal men who have never heard that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners. Yet the epochal hour seems to have come for which the church has waited long, when the gospel may be preached in all lands. The ancient and mysterious nations of the East are opening the gates of exclusiveness, and becoming ready to learn of him to whom so many knees are bowed in Christian lands, and where he is confessed by so many tongues.

The Lord answered Job out of the whirlwind, and said (ch. xxxviii), . . . "where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth, . . . when the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy?"

It is said that on Assyrian tablets that antedate by centuries the time of Moses it is written that on the morning of creation the hymning hosts of heaven were gathered, and rejoicing in that mighty melody at the sight of the new world, with shouts of joy. Suddenly there was a discord in the harmony, and certain rebellious angels broke up the hymn of praise.

It has been thought that if that old Chaldean account be true this world would yet hear a renewal of that song when a sufficient number of souls saved through faith in Christ have been gathered out of it to make that broken choir complete. Then that vast multitude standing by the sea of glass, having the harps of God, would take up the intercepted chorus of the skies and swell it into a higher strain of glory to the Lamb that was slain, but lives again—creation's Lord and King!

The guarantee of an unfailing promise inspires the church to hasten its mission work so that the appointed triumph shall soon come. It is not so far away that faith can not bring it nigh. In every year new colonies are annexed to the growing kingdom. The gospel light is rising on many a land of heathen darkness. Messengers of the cross are pointing inquiring souls to that light, and these forerunners over the earth, with their ever-present Leader, who inspires and sends them, are bearing the love of heaven into the benighted dwellings of men.

What will ere long be the grand result? A new spiritual creation is not less sure than the foliage of the budding forest that in spring-tide bursts into bloom. There has been a slow and wintry but necessary preparation; yet let the church keep courage; the missionaries are gone where the Master has sent them; his mantle is on them; his providence is around them; his spirit is aiding them, and his glory will crown them in his own good time. The Gospel in All Lands.

Temperance Notes.

Here is a description taken from a Portland, Me., newspaper, of the magnificent banner made for, and presented to her department, by Mrs. Hannah J. Bailey, of Winthrop Centre, Me., the well-known National superintendent of the department of peace and arbitration. It is intended for the Paris Exposition, and will be found in the W. C. T. U. headquarters there:

"The material of which it is made is heavy white silk; the size three by four feet. The center piece is an angel whose soft, floating drapery and tapering wings blend harmoniously with the delicate background and give added charm to the message, 'On earth peace, good-will to men.' 'Nations shall learn war no more,' is engraven upon the waving scroll of blue ribbon, held lightly in her slender hands, together with an olive branch of 'peace.' This dainty and attractive figure hovers directly over a collection of the flags of every nation, painted in their respective designs and colors, arranged in admirable grouping, lying carelessly and easily together, with the grand old 'Star Spangled Banner' possibly a little more prominent than its companions. Over the whole is the inscription in large silver lettering outlined in deep garnet, 'United States of America,' while arranged in curves at the sides, in small gilt letters are the lines, 'Our song is the song of the angels,' 'Our sword is the sword of the Spirit,' 'Our march is the march of peace.' Beneath the group of flags are the words in larger inscription, 'National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Department of Peace and Arbitration, organized 1887.' At the top of the banner an extra fall of silk or 'hood' covers the words, 'Presented by Hannah J. Bailey, Winthrop, Me., 1889,' while on the outside, at each corner of the hood, is painted a gilt circle, one inclosing the clasped hands of fellowship, the other a small white-winged dove of peace outlined against the pale blue of the summer sky, holding in his bill an olive leaf. This work of art is from the brush of Miss Alice Gould, of Portland, who thus tastefully executed Mrs. Bailey's design. The silver fringe which adorns the entire edge and heavy silver tassels add charmingly to the general effect. The banner is attached to a standard of ash by fine wide white satin ribbon bows, and swings by a thick silver cord from the pole.

"The whole is surmounted by a silver dove nearly life size, perfectly carved, and strikingly poised upon a small silver globe at the summit of the pole."

In Japan, the publication of the temperance papers and magazines is rapidly increasing. On February 11, 1889, the very same day of the promulgation of the new constitution, the prominent men in Tokio, Messrs Sen Tenda, T. Okuyama, and J. Ikeda, decided to publish a new temperance paper named Hino Maru (the round sun, or the sign of the Japanese flag).

Helen Chalmers, daughter of the noted divine, devotes her life to work among the drunken men and their families in the city of Edinburgh. She lives in the midst of poverty and suffering in an alley, and can be seen on dark nights with her lantern going through the lanes of the city, hunting up the fallen and wicked, and bringing them to her reform meetings. She is known and beloved by every one.

Governor Larabee says that the banking interests of Iowa show the good effects of prohibition. Since its adoption the number of banks in the State has increased from 186 to 244, and the amount of deposits have increased nearly $8,000,000. He avers that the talk about depreciation of real estate there is the sheerest nonsense. Tramps are very scarce, their recruiting stations, the saloons, having been closed.

Temperance is making giant strides in Norway, and that country is said to bid fair to be the first in Europe to prohibit the manufacture and sale of alcoholic drinks.

Dyspepsia

Makes many lives miserable, and often leads to self destruction. Distress after eating, sick headache, heartburn, sour stomach, mental depression, etc., are caused by this very common and increasing disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla tones the stomach, creates an appetite, promotes healthy digestion, relieves sick headache, clears the mind, and cures the most obstinate cases of dyspepsia. Read the following:

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. In an hour after eating I would experience a faintness or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. Hood's Sarsaparilla did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced. It relieved me of that faint, tired, all-gone feeling. I have felt so much better since I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, that I am happy to recommend it." G. A. PAGE, Watertown, Mass.

He Was Dead.

It seems to have been an impossibility for the friends of Jesus to believe that he would die. They could not believe that he who had the marvelous power to deliver others from the grasp of death could himself die. His most intimate friends seemed not to have understood him when he spoke of dying. Others could die and would die, but how could he die who had a power superior to death? So abhorrent to their minds was the mere thought of it that when Jesus announced it to his disciples, the impetuous Peter rebuked him for its utterance: "Far be it from thee, Lord; this shall not be unto thee."

Not only were the friends of Jesus complete skeptics on the subject of his death, but the more they saw of him, the stronger and more pervading did that skepticism become. They saw him control tempests, and cast out devils, and read men's thoughts, and heal their sick, and raise their dead, and the natural conclusion was, "Death can have no power over such a Being!" Here evidently was the King of Death and the Prince of Life. "Who so worthy to be the successor of King David as he who could give life to the dead, and thus assert his supremacy over the 'king of terrors'?" His last entry into Jerusalem, just after raising Lazarus from the dead, demonstrated that the people were ready to crown him King of humanity. He die? Not so! Visions of the establishment of an earthly kingdom with Jesus at its head—a kingdom of peace and plenty and glory, whose King carried the keys of all power and authority at his girdle—became the predominant idea in the minds of his disciples. All the long-cherished anticipations of their race were about to be realized. What their great kings wished and what their noble prophets desired they expected to see very soon. Those nearest to Jesus began to distribute the offices of the kingdom, and to hold hot disputes about place and power and honors. There needed but one thing to consummate the grand desire, and that was, that Jesus should make a formal, public avowal of his kingship. Everything was ripe for the setting up of the kingdom. Desire could be no grander; faith, no stronger; hope could rise no higher. But just as this tide reached its flood Jesus was apprehended, tried, condemned, and put to death! It was a blow which shattered into a thousand fragments all the expectations of his friends, and crushed all their hopes in the darkness of despair. There wasn't a ray of light left. That was the darkest day humanity ever saw—"the black Friday" of the world's history! The stifling gloom that suffocated the souls of our first parents as the gates of Eden closed behind them was nothing compared to the gloom that filled the minds of the disciples during those few hours that Jesus lay dead in the tomb of Joseph. They had laid down their dead hopes in the same tomb. Of all the people in Jerusalem who knew anything of Christ's life they were about the only ones thoroughly convinced of his death. Those who would not believe that he could die were now in absolute despair over the actual and awful fact that "he was dead." Crushed in heart, broken in spirit, with their affections bruised and bleeding at every pore, they looked out upon a rayless future, and gave up all for lost. "He was dead." The beautiful hope of the kingdom, with its honors and its glories, had been buried with Jesus in the tomb of Joseph, and that tomb was sealed and guarded by the mighty power of the Roman empire. The mysterious shadow that crept over the city and filled all hearts with awe was as light compared to the darkness that spread its raven wings over the souls of the disciples. Their friend, the friend of the poor, the friend of the sick, the friend of justice, the friend of humanity, the friend of the Eternal God, "was dead" and buried, and locked up in a strong sepulcher, and guarded by the vigilance and military skill of Rome. They were not only convinced that he could die, but they, of all in the city, knew that "he was dead."

He Is Risen.

To-day we are witnesses to a most wonderful spectacle! A little more than 1850 ago there lived and died and rose again from the dead in the small territory of Palestine a man called Jesus of Nazareth, and to-day millions and milhons of men, women and children are celebrating, all over the world, the anniversary of his resurrection. According to Paul, the whole system of Christianity is built upon the fact of that resurrection. "If Christ be not raised, then is your faith vain." According to the enemies of our holy religion, to-day Christianity is an effete thing. It has exhausted all its energies and is in a dying condition. Such was their estimate of it in the last century, and in all the preceding centuries. Such was their estimate of it when the Man of Nazareth hung in his death-agonies on the cross! And yet the fact which we lay alongside of this estimate is, that it has been growing in power and enlarging in influence from the day the excited Mary rushed into the company of the disciples with the news, "The Lord is risen," until now; and to-day this same pean of victory is ringing its notes of triumph in every land beneath the sky! This does not indicate decay of energy to any fair-minded thinker.

The resurrection of Christ has a stronger hold upon the followers of Christ to-day than it ever had. This is the one fact which has laid its divine grasp upon the deepest faith of every Christian sect in the world. They all—every one of them—are rejoicing to-day in the sublime importance and renewing energy and hope-sustaining power of this greatest of all miracles. They look not down into the cold marble tomb of Joseph to gaze upon the body of their Lord, but they look up to the throne of the heavens, and see that body in eternal union with Godhead, exalted to that high eminence through the processes of the resurrection and ascension. A risen Jesus means a risen humanity after awhile. Men can not endure the thought of eternal sleep. The heart of humanity throbs with the desire for a future existence. This life, as great as it is, as wonderful as it is, is too little and too short to satisfy the aspirations of a human soul. Hence the resurreetion of Christ, being the pledge of man's resurrection, is the only faet known that can give hope that those desires shall be fulfilled and those aspirations reached. Henee Christians in all parts of the world are to-day rejoieing in the resurrection of him "who brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." The Christian poet has voiced the deepest sentiments of the human heart when he said:

And did he rise?
Hear, O ye nations! hear it, O ye dead!
He rose, he rose! he burst the bars of death,
. . . . . Shout earth and heaven
This sum of good to man! whose nature then Took wing and mounted with him from the tomb.
Then, then, I rose; then first humanity
Triumphant passed the crystal ports of light,
(Stupendous guest!) and seized eternal youth,
Seized in our name. Man's mortality
Was then transferred to death; and heaven's duration
Unalienably sealed to this frail frame,
This child of dust—man, all immortal, hail!
Hail, Heaven, all lavish of strange gifts to man!
Thine all the glory, man's the boundless bliss.

Alive Forevermore.

Jesus had laid down his life of his own accord. It looks as if he had forced his way into the realm of death. His presence among the dead showed that his work was not wholly confined to this life. In the act of his death he was pursuing sin to its bitter end that he might reverse the terrible doom which it inflicted upon humanity. And while his death destroyed all the earthly hopes of his friends, and fastened despair upon their hearts, we imagine that his entrance into the realm of death created a commotion such as was never felt in that realm before. No doubt, there was a stir in the city of the dead when Jesus entered its gates and the sound of his feet was heard echoing along its gloomy streets! No doubt, the "king of terrors," though trembling with awful surprise, prepared to celebrate in a suitable manner his victory over the second Adam! See him as Jesus enters his sombre palace, seated upon his ebon throne, the circling clouds of despair enwraping his brow, his right hand clutching a bloody scepter, his eye red with the gleam of a fiendish satisfaction, and his weighty foot pressing heavily upon the neck of dead humanity! Hear him speak to his ministers, as they gather about him to learn who is this stranger that has intruded himself upon their dominions: "This is he whose works on earth caused our throne to totter, but we have him now in our power, the most illustrious captive in our realm. Bring forth the chains that have been forged for the giants, and let him be loaded with them. Bar up the gates of the city and double the watch, lest he escape our prison walls."

Away down in the darkness, where no eye, save the eye of the All-Seeing, could witness it, the battle between Jesus and the power of death was fought. It was a contest for the lawful possession of the human race. The grandness of the prize, the might of the combatants, the issues involved in the struggle, the moral and physical efforts of this contest over the whole universe of God—all mark it as the turning-point in the history of man. All the hope of the race centered here! All future life poised on the issue of this struggle! Here was the pivotal point of human destiny! That short space of time between the death and the resurrection of Jesus was the most momentous period in the annals of our race! The battle was fought in the realm of darkness; and it is well that it was. Could human eyes have looked upon that struggle, the vision of the fury and fierceness of death and the resistless outgoing of the measureless might of Jesus would have crazed the brain of the on-looker forever. Though the battle was fought in the realm of darkness, the issue has been declared in the broad light of day. Jesus conquered. How do we know he conquered? Because he did not stay in that sealed and guarded tomb! Because before the dawn of that first Easter began to peep over the horizon the angels rolled away the stone from the sepulcher; and while the earth was quaking under their mighty tread, and the hardy soldiers of Rome were falling in prostrate terror before the flashings from those heavenly helmets, Jesus rose from the dead; and that meant victory—eternal victory.

Now look at his disciples. He alive? Not so. He was too thoroughly dead to even admit the hope of it! The women were the first to bring the news of his rising! "Idle tales," said the disciples. Mary reported her conversation with the risen Jesus. "The devils had taken possession of poor Mary again." Peter added his testimony. It availed nothing. He is dead; and though his tomb may be empty, our enemies have taken his body away to afflict us more deeply. There they sat in their despair, which was deepened by this added perplexity of his missing body. All at once there seems to be a flash, and Jesus stands before them, and by the sight and hearing and touch their persistent unbelief breaks down, and all-conquering and everlasting faith in the resurrection of their Lord takes its place. They are now so thoroughly convinced of the fact of the rising again of their Lord that they are willing to die in and for the proclamation of that fact; and some of them did.

The mental conditions of these friends of Jesus during that week constitute them the very best witnesses of his resurrection. Study the circumstances as fully as we can, and every time it comes out plainly that his resurrection is the only thing that can explain their conduct. On the one side is their persistent unbelief that he could die, and their overwhelming sadness when he did die. On the other side is their persistent unbelief that he had risen, and their high joy when convinced that he was alive. These opposite states of mind in such a short time are inexplicable on any theory, except that which accords with the facts as given in the record. This makes them the best witnesses to the resurrection of Jesus. From that faith they never wavered, nor has the church to this day, for millions upon millions are at this very hour proclaiming their belief in the same stupendous fact. By the utterance of the lips, by messages through the mails, by telephone and telegraph, they are sending greetings to each other to-day, and the one universal greeting is in the words: "The Lord is risen." The first vision John saw in Patmos is as real to the church to-day as it was to John when, in terror, he looked upon its supernal splendors. It was the vision of the risen and glorified Son of man: "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive forevermore. Amen."

Easter.

We are told by those who are presumed to know that the word "Easter" is "a survival from the old Teutonic mythology, like the names of the days of the week." It is an Anglo-Saxon word, derived from Eostre, the Anglo-Saxon goddess of spring, to whom the fourth month was dedicated, and hence called Eostur-Monath. Among people of Latin origin an entirely different word is used, such as paques, pasqua, pascua. We can see at a glance that these words came from the Latin and Greek, pascha, and that is derived from the Hebrew name of the Passover festival, pesach. Easter is the annual festival observed throughout Christendom of the resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ. Among the Jews the Passover was observed in commemoration of the deliveranee of the Israelites from Egyptian bondage, and among Christians, Easter is observed in commemoration of the greater deliverance of the human race from the more galling bondage of sin.

Canon Venables says: "There is no trace of the celebration of Easter as a Christian festival in the New Testament or in the writings of the apostolic fathers. The sanctity of special times or places was an idea quite alien from the early Christian mind, too profoundly absorbed in the events themselves to think of their external accidents." One of the ancient ecclesiastical historians says that neither Christ nor his apostles enjoined the keeping of this or any other festival, and he attributes the introduction of the festival of Easter into the church to the perpetuation of an old usage. He accounts for it in this way: "The first Christians being derived from, or intimately connected with, the Jewish Church, naturally continued to observe the Jewish festivals, though in a new spirit, as commemorations of events of which these had been the shadows. The Passover, ennobled by the thought of Christ, the true Paschal Lamb, continued to be celebrated, and became the Christian Easter. Thus the human instinct, which everywhere craves for the commemoration of marked epochs in the personal, social, ecclesiastical or natural life, found its legitimate gratification in the public celebration of an event which is the foundation of the Christian faith."

Many very curious customs have been observed in connection with this festival, some of which have been very widespread and have come down even to these matter-of-fact times in which we live. We can not go into detail in these matters, but at the request of a friend we give the history and meaning of the widespread custom of sending pasch or

EASTER EGGS.

Gebelin, in his "Religious History of the Calendar," informs us that the custom of giving eggs at Easter is to be traced up to the theology and philosophy of the Egyptians, Persians, Gauls, Greeks and Romans, among all of whom an egg was an emblem of the universe, the work of the Supreme Divinity. Hutchinson says: "Eggs were held by the Egyptians as a sacred emblem of the renovation of mankind after the deluge. The Jews adopted it to suit the circumstances of their history, as a type of their departure from the land of Egypt, and it was used in the feast of the Passover as a part of the furniture of the table with the Paschal Lamb. The Christians have certainly used it on this day, as retaining the elements of future life, for an emblem of the resurrection. It seems as if the egg was thus decorated for a religious trophy after the days of mortification and abstinence were over and festivity had taken place; and as an emblem of the resurrection of life, certified to us by the resurrection from the reign of death and the grave." Another author says: "Easter eggs are symbolical of creation or the recreation of spring. The practice of presenting eggs to our friends at Easter is of Persian origin, and bears allusion to the mundane egg for which Ormuzd and Ahriman were to contend till the consummation of all things. It prevailed not only with the Persians, but also among the Jews, Egyptians and Hindus. Christians adopted the custom to symbolize the resurrection, and they color the eggs red in allusion to the blood of their redemption." Another author says: "The practice of painting and decorating eggs at Easter, amongst the Catholics, arose from the joy which was occasioned by their returning to this favorite food after so long an absence from them during Lent."

We could fill this whole issue with the customs that have at different places and in different times been connected with Easter; but we wont't do it.

Notes.

Is this true? The Episcopal Bishop of Virginia says that there is as much said in the New Testament about giving as about praying! And we haven't time just now to verify or disprove it, suppose, reader, you get your Bible and Concordance and see if it is really so.

The neatest thing in the way of reportorial work was done by a member of the Times-Democrat staff, last Monday morning, in reporting Dr. Milburn's sermon delivered the night before in Carondelet Street Church. Those who heard the sermon were rather surprised at the report, and the Rev. Doctor avers there is not a word of the report true. How is that for a progressive, wide-awake journal?

If your article does not appear, don't come to the conclusion that your piece is a failure, or that the editor has his favorites. If you could look into the "waste-basket," you would see D. D.'s and circuit riders, school teachers and college professors, doctors and lawyers all in a harmonious quiet. And way down in one corner you would see several very fine editorials looking demurely at you, as if to say, "We are here too; don't be discouraged."

This is for you, brother preacher. An exchange asks:

Can a pastor be faithful if he does not instruct his people in the scriptural ideas of this grace of giving? Only when every member shall regularly give something to the church treasury shall the membership of our churches be clear and right. And the pastor must bear the brunt of the battle. The Lord's cause must have money, or it can not even hold its place, to say nothing of moving forward, in the life of the world.

If you are using conscientious efforts to live a right life, this note from the New York Advocate will help you:

To make the best use of the past we must know how to forget. The art of forgetting is almost as important as the art of remembering. Some things are better hurled. Forgetting those things which are behind is one happy secret of a successful runner in the race of life. The old lessons we learned in Satan's school, the old grudges and antipathies which we cherished, the old vows of vengeance and purposes of selfish ambition must be forgotten, or they will hamper and hinder us at every step.

Here's a wholesome hint for you from the Mid-Continent:

We fear that President Harrison has overlooked the supreme advantages of youth in the selection of his Cabinet. Look at their ages. Secretaries Blaine, 59; Windom, 62; Proctor, 52; Tracy, 59; Noble, 57; Wanamaker, 52; Miller, 48; Rusk, 59. Their average age is 56, just the age of President Harrison himself. All of these far past the dead-line for preachers. This thing of taking elderly persons for office and culling out the young men is evidently dangerous. Do we not all the wise people in the churches cry for young men—fresh, lively, inexperienced, and tarrying in the Jerichological seminaries until their heard is grown?

We commend the following from an exchange to the special attention of our young ministers:

A Southern writer, speaking of a minister recently deceased, said that he was possessed of a mind clear, penetrating, logical, an imagination rich and brilliant, and a memory from whose grasp nothing seemed to escape. Accordingly he should have reached a position of prominence and distinction, but he did not. Why? In early life he failed to form the habits of study which are essential to progress. And then he lacked the laudable ambition which impels to close, continuous application. How true it is that a man must work hard if he means to make anything of himself! Even piety and brains will not enable a minister to make his mark unless he be a constant student.

One of the sweetest truths of the Bible is that we have a sympathizing Savior; one who "knows what sore temptations mean, for he hath felt the same." We take great comfort from the fact that his sympathy arises from the fact of his having passed through similar sufferings as afflict us. But we ought to remember that his sympathy for us is helpful to us, because he "suffered victoriously." It is not simply that he suffered that he is prepared to help us, but that he passed through the dark valleys of suffering up to the radiant peaks of peace. From that eminence he sends down the word: "My peace, give I unto you."

A regular contributor to the Advocate has this compliment to the Methodist emphasis of a "present salvation:"

A friend, a Methodist by faith and profession and somewhat unsophisticated by training, has lately found it expedient to worship at the Episcopal Church. She has come home frequently from the service and uttered her mellow indignation against the church people for calling themselves so often "unworthy sinners." "Of course," she says, "if they want to be sinners, and miserable sinners in the bargain, they may be, but I am not one of that sort. I am redeemed by Christ, redeemed now." I am reminded by her earnestness to ask if the Methodist Church does not make more eminent than we Congregationalists the doctrine of a present salvation. And are not the Methodists at once wise and scriptural in such an emphasis?

Personal and Otherwise.

A brother writes: "I have, after four years' effort, at last succeeded in getting the ADVOCATE in this family." Nothing equals persistence!

Bro. Sawyer closed a successful meeting last week at Felicity Street Church. He was assisted by Bro. Wimberly, of Plaquemine. The church was greatly revived, and there were eleven accessions.

Mr. Carradine's pamphlet—"The Louisiana State Lottery Company Examined and Exposed"—is now ready. It is the ablest and most thorough discussion of that subject that has ever appeared in print. Let our friends everywhere go to work earnestly to scatter it all over the land. It contains fifty-eight pages. Price, ten cents. Order from this office.

President Runnicutt, of Centenary College, will preach the commencement sermon for the Opelousas Female Institute, Sunday, June 16.

The distinguished French scientist, M. Chevreul, died April 9, in his one-hundred and third year.

George F. Wharton, No. 5 Carondelet street, has brought us under special obligations for a bundle of Raphael Tuck & Sons' Easter Cards. This is as fine a collection as we have yet seen.

Bro. Lamar, presiding elder of the Mobile district, writes us, that "advices from Birmingham and Montgomery indicate a large attendance from both cities to the approaching camp meeting at Seashore in July."

W. D. Howells recently declared in Harper's, that "Christ and the life of Christ is at this moment inspiring the literature of the world as never before, and raising it up a witness against waste and want and war."

Is not this month a good time to work with "might and main" for new subscribers? Many of the brethren are doing handsomely in that direction. This personal is to remind you that all such work is fully appreciated in this office, and will be a blessing to all you induce to take the paper.

Don't forget Children's Day, May 19. Our Sunday-school Department has the programme all ready, which you can procure for seventy-five cents a hundred by mail. Address J. F. Barbee, Agent, Nashville.

Morgan City Free Press: Captain John N. Pharr has, at his own expense, built a fine church upon the Fairview plantation for the colored people. It is really a little gem and is greatly appreciated. During the week the building is used as a school-house and is well attended.

We have received a bright little paper from Donaldsonville, La., called The New Era. It is edited by a bevy of sprightly girls belonging to Prof. B. G. Cole's Academy in that place. We wish the young ladies great success.

Dr. Parkhurst, of the Presbyterian Church in New York, says: "The problem of evangelization is solved when you have dissolved the unwillingness of each Christian to be an evangelist." In our view, that postpones the solution indefinitely. If we are to wait until everybody wakes up, then evangelization is a dream.

According to G. P. Rowell & Co.'s Directory, there are now issued in this country and in Canada 17,107 newspapers, being 797 more than a year ago.

One of the New York Methodist preachers speaks of a "preachers' meeting" as "a gathering representative of well-dressed impecuniosity."

Friday, the nineteenth, is set apart as a day of fasting and prayer by our Woman's Missionary Society for the divine blessing on the annual meeting to be held at Little Rock, Ark.

During the past week, William Reynolds, of Illinois, president of the Fifth International Sunday-school Convention, gave some interesting lectures on Sunday-school work in Dr. Carradine's, Dr. Bussey's and Dr. Palmer's Churches.

Rev. Dr. Milburn, Chaplain to Congress, preached to a large audience in Carondelet Street Church last Sunday night. Next Sunday he will preach at 11 A. M. at Rayne Memorial, and at 7:30 P. M. at Moreau Street Church.

Postal Card Reports.

—Rev. G. W. Bachman, writing from Kosciusko, Miss., April 8, 1889, says: "I have just returned home from a five weeks' itineracy, during which I visited the churches at Water Valley, Abbeville, Waterford, Holly Springs, Potts Camp, New Albany, Red Banks, Victoria, Byhalia, Olive Branch, Lone Station, Senatobia, Sardis and Duck Hill. The Grenada District Conference was in session at the last-named place. During the trip I was enabled to preach twelve sermons, deliver several Sunday-school talks; to sell $200 worth of books and collect $55 60 for the church papers. We are much gratified at the increasing interest for good literature and in the Sunday-school cause. The Sunday-schools at Kosciusko, Victoria and Red Banks have procured libraries, and we hope others will do so soon. The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE is growing in favor."

—Rev. John T. Sawyer, of Felicity Street Church, writes: "The Rev. William Wimberly was with us during our protracted meeting and did all the preaching. He gave us ten sermons of thoroughly Methodist type—clear, straight, strong, eloquent and effective. His word was in power and many were brought under conviction, a goodly number converted and about one dozen added to the church. The church has been greatly revived and solid work done. We heartily thank Bro. Wimberly for his coming and for his burning words of truth. Unto God be all the glory!"

—Rev. I. W. Cooper writes from Edwards, Miss: "On last Sabbath, April 7, we were greatly encouraged. Seven united with the church. One gentleman, who is working in the country, walked eleven miles to join the church. The outlook is very hopeful. A spirit of religious inquiry is taking hold of this people. Our last year with this delightful people gives promise of being the best. God bless them!"

—Rev. T. S. West writes from Orange Grove, Miss., April 10, 1889: "Bro. B. Jones saw fit to protract from the Quarterly Conference at this place. Quite an interest is awakened; eight or ten accessions; altar crowded with penitents, and the meeting continues. Orange Grove is an orderly place; no whisky and beer are sold here. A disorderly wayfarer passed this way a few nights ago and savagely attacked an old man. Some twenty men, young and old, gathered to arrest him, and only one pistol was found in the crowd. No walking arsenals here."

—Rev. J. M. Weems writes from Tolnca, Mexico, April 10: "No doubt the friends who have been so kind to write to us are thinking strange of our long silence; but my wife has been too ill and I too anxious and my whole time occupied to write to them. Ten days ago the doctors attending her, in the City of Mexico, told me they could do nothing more for her, and that her only chance for life was in a change to Tolnca. We are now in this city and she is improving very slowly. We hope, however, to return to the City of Mexico in a few days."

—Rev. T. W. Adams writes from Pearlington, Miss: "The shadow of a great sorrow rests upon our community. Sister Mary H. Poitevent, wife of Capt. John Poitevent, of Pearlington, died on last Saturday, April 13, after a brief illness. The burial took place yesterday at three o'clock P. M. The funeral services were conducted by the pastor, at the dwelling of Capt. Poitevent, amid expressions of the profoundest grief from the great concourse of people present. The loss to our church in Pearlington by the death of Sister Poitevent is irreparable. Two of our official members remarked to the pastor: 'We could give up any other member of our church with less loss than Sister Poitevent.' Hers was a beautiful, useful and happy life."

BOOKS.

REDEMPTION SONGS. Compiled by L. W. Munhall, J. J. Hood, Philadelphia. Price, thirty-five cents by mail.

This is a collection of hymns and tunes from the popular devotional songs of the day. We think most books of this kind are rather below a good level for church and social religious devotion. This seems to be about as good as any.

HOURS WITH LIVING MEN AND WOMEN OF THE REVOLUTION. A PILGRIMAGE. By Benson J. Lossing, LL.D. Square octavo, 239 pp. Price, $2. New York: Funk & Wagnalls.

As to the intrinsic merits of this work, the name of its author, the celebrated historian, might seem to be a sufficient guarantee. But the work before us possesses solid worth. Charming in style, sweeping a wide field, discussing lofty themes, and pervaded with the spirit of true patriotism, it fairly bristles with life. Each of its twenty-one chapters has all the vivacity of a bewitching romance, while its value is immeasurably enhanced by the reality of its characters and the reliability of its statements.

A WOMAN OF HONOR. By H. C. Bunner. Ticknor and Company, Boston. George F. Wharton, New Orleans. Price, fifty cents.

PERIODICALS.

The Gospel in All Lands, for April, is devoted almost exclusively to India. Under the heading, Woman as a Missionary, it gives an extended quotation from Dr. Black's Christian Womanhood. This monthly may be had for $1 50. Methodist Missionary Society, 805 Broadway, N. Y.

—The Home Maker, for April, is on our table and full of matters of the home and its surroundings. Home Maker Company, New York. Price, $2.

—The Treasury, for April, is full of its usually good matter for the pastor and the people. E. B. Treat, 771 Broadway, New York. Price, $2 50.

An Address.

To the Preachers and Sunday-school Superintendents of the North Mississippi Conference—

DEAR BRETHREN: The steady growth of the Sunday-school cause in our Conference is gratifying and encouraging. We have reason to thank God for past success, and to redouble our diligence for further achievements in this department of church work. With the opening of spring let there be renewed enterprise and effort for the improvement of existing schools, and for the organization and equipment of new ones, wherever ten persons can be collected for that purpose. See to it that the schools are sufficiently supplied with lesson helps, the Sunday-School Visitor, and circulating libraries. In any case where financial aid may be needed to furnish these requisites, let not the pastor hesitate nor delay to make application, either to myself or to Rev. J. L. Futrell, chairman of the Sunday-school Board, as per instructions in Conference Minutes, pages 21 and 22. State numbers in school, and character and amount of literature needed.

By all means let us have Children's Day services in every Sunday-school within our bounds on the third Sunday in May, if practicable; if not, then on some convenient day in May or June. Let pastors and superintendents see that timely and proper preparations be made for the occasion. Send, in time, to the Publishing House, or to myself, and procure the suitable programme prepared by order of the General Conference. Price, 50 for fifty cents, or 100 for seventy-five cents. We were much gratified at the increased interest in this day's observance last year, and we do hope that no pastoral charge will report blank on it this year. Let us do all that we can—though it be at a cost or sacrifice—to give the dear children proper recognition, at least, one whole day in the year.

Brethren, let me know when, where or how I can help you in the furtherance of this blessed cause, and I am ready to serve to the extent of time and ability.

Your fellow-laborer in the Lord,

G. W. BACHMAN, S. S. Ag't.

KOSCIUSKO, Mississippi.

Literary Notes.

Mrs Martha Livingston Moodey's story of "Alam Thorne"—the "antidote" to "Robert Elsmere" that D. Lothrop Company issue this month, has already received the stamp of approval by several professional critics and leading clergymen to whom it was read in manuscript. It is said to be almost dramatic in certain of its incidents, while its grouping and character sketches are particularly attractive.

Leo and Shepard, Boston, have in press Samuel Adams Drake's "Decisive Events in American History. Burgoyne's Invasion of 1777, with an outline sketch of the American invasion of Canada, 1775-76." It will be an admirable historic narrative, intended to be used as a text-book, or as a Supplementary Reader in schools, as well as for general reading.

Horace Lunt's charming pictures of rural out-of-doors, "Across Lots," is a capital book for spring purchase. One can follow nature's developments, book in hand, sympathetically and in the spirit of the season of life-renewing.

A handsome American edition of Bonrlenno's famous "Memoirs of Napoleon" is about to be issued immediately by the Scribners. For sixty years this book has been a standard authority, and Prince Metternich pronounced the work to be "the only authentic memoirs which have ever appeared." The Scribner edition will be in four 12mo volumes, and be an exact reproduction of the latest English edition, including all the portraits and illustrations, as well as all the other features that give distinction to the work. The price will be placed low, so as to appeal to a large popular sale.

Prevent Attacks of Fever.

We ask but a glance at this, and it will pay any sufferer from liver complaint, enlarged spleen or ague cake, bilious affections of any kind, deranged secretions, prostration from disappetite, constipation, dropsy, or any affections where liver, bowels, blood and stomach are involved. A guaranteed cure for all this class of diseases is offered in J. & C. Maguire's Cundurango. Doctors are astonished and invalids delighted.

Children's Day Programme.

Our Sunday-school Department has issued the annual programme for Children's Day—the third Sunday in May. It is a neat booklet of eight pages. The music of the principal songs is given in full, and all the exercises are so arranged as to present the true objects of the day in an entertaining and instructive manner.

Let every superintendent furnish his school with these programmes at once, and see to it that the coming Children's Day is more generally observed and more fruitful of good results than in any former year. The programmes may be had at our Publishing House—fifty copies for fifty cents, or one hundred copies for seventy-five cents.

Publisher's Department.

Competent experts estimate that nearly, if not quite, $30,000,000 will be spent for newspaper advertising in the United States during the year 1889; and that over five times that amount will be diverted into the coffers of those manufacturers and firms who advertise that would otherwise go into the hap-hazard channels of chance trade.

An Indiana man has made a ballot-box which can not be stuffed. He will have to take it out of his State if he expects to make it work.

The reason for having Monday washing-day, the next after Sunday, is probably because cleanliness is next to godliness.

Next to your subscription the greatest favor you can extend the ADVOCATE, in a business point, is to mention the paper in writing to advertisers.

ONLY A BOY.

BY AUNT LUCY.

I am only a boy, with a heart light and free;
I am brimming with mischief and frolic and glee;
I dance with delight, and I whistle and sing,
And you think such a boy never cares for a thing.

But boys have their troubles, though jolly they seem;
Their thoughts can go farther than most people deem.
Their hearts are as open to sorrow as joy,
And each has his feelings, though only a boy.

Now oft when I've worked hard at piling the wood,
Have done all my errands, and tried to be good,
I think I might then have a rest or a play;
But how shall I manage? Can any one say?

If I start for a stroll, it is "Keep off the street;"
If I go to the house, it is "Mercy! what feet!"
If I take a seat, 'tis "Here! give me that chair!"
If I lounge by a window, 'tis "Don't loiter there!"

If I ask a few questions, 'tis "Don't bother me!"
Or else, "Such a torment I never did see!"
I am scolded or cuffed if I make the least noise,
Till I think in this wide world there's no place for boys.

At school they are shocked if I want a good play;
At home or at church, I am so in the way;
And it's hard, for I don't see that boys are to blame,
And 'most any boy, too, will say just the same.

Of course a boy can't know as much as a man,
But we try to do right, just as hard as we can.
Have patience, dear people, though oft we annoy,
For the best man on earth once was "only a boy."

—Ohio School Journal.

NOW, HERE'S A DOG.—The military poodle, Mustache, who shared the victorious fortunes of the French army, had a wonderful record. A writer in Blackwood says: "He won special honors at Marengo and was decorated on the battlefield of Austerlitz by Marshal Lannes as a reward for having rescued his regimental standard from an Austrian soldier when in the act of snatching it from the grasp of the standard-bearer as he fell mortally wounded. The plucky poodle drove off the assailant and then seized the standard in his teeth, dragging it triumphantly to the lines of his own company. Many were the scouting parties he detected, many an Austrian ambush, and on at least one occasion he drew attention to the presence of a distinguished spy in the camp. To his vigilance was due the failure of a night attack of a body of Austrians, of whose vicinity in the valley of Balso the French were apparently ignorant." Dogs of various breeds are being trained and experimented with on a large scale in both the German and French armies. The system, as developed, is said to have given excellent satisfaction.—Exchange.

"ONCE."—The junior class of a Southern college had assembled in a student's room to spend the night in riot and debauch. Amid the crowd was one who had never recited a bad lesson since his matriculation. In his studies "he was head and shoulders" above the class. That day he had failed. A shade of the deepest gloom came over him, and he was melancholy. But the wine and jest passed round while he felt like Lucifer in Eden, where all was joy and gladness around him. Said a classmate, "Come, Bob, quaff this bumper, and it will make you feel bright as the hermit's lamp."

The tempter whispered in his ear "Drink once and forget the past." A powerful struggle seemed to be going on in his mind for a moment; but at last he silently shook his head, and retiring from the room gave vent to a flood of tears. That boy never drank—not even once. He took the valedictory, and is now the president of a college.—Times of Refreshing.

MR. EDITOR: Please allow me space to answer the question of Mary S. Hodges. The 117 Psalm is the shortest chapter in the Bible. It has but two verses. Will any of your little readers tell whose son Noah was? Pearlington is our new home. We have been living here nearly three months and are very much pleased with the people. They are very kind to us. They have given us a real "pounding," and continue to show us great kindness. We have a good Sunday-school. Mr. W. T. Stocker is our good superintendent. Miss Eucharist Favre is my teacher. I love her very much. I have several nice little playmates. Sister Wilmoth and I are piecing a missionary quilt. We are anxious to give to missions some money that we have made. I think that will be better than to have our father to give us the money. With best wishes to you and all your little readers, I am,

Your little friend,
LERA ADAMS.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl in my teens, and this is my first call at your office, and I hope you will let me in. I am going to school to Prof. A. J. Jones, and we all like him very much. I am studying spelling, reading, writing, arithmetic, geography and grammar, but not far enough advanced in the latter to write grammatically. Pa takes your valuable paper, and we all read it. I am very fond of the little people's column. Our preacher this year is Bro. H. M. Banks. We all like him very much and think he is going to do good work here this year. Now, Mr. Editor, I must tell you of our Sunday-school at Union Star School-house, which was organized a few Sundays ago with forty-eight scholars enrolled. Mr. S. W. B. Colvin is our superintendent. Now, Mr. Editor, if you could just pay us a visit and give us a lecture on Sunday-school, it would be so nice. But, no doubt, your whole time is occupied in arranging so valuable a paper as the ADVOCATE. Now, for fear I worry you, I will close by asking the little cousins a question: What book in the Bible has ten chapters that the first verse reads exactly the same? Wishing the editor great success and all the good things a worthy editor needs, I remain,

CATHERN R. SIGLER.
SUGAR TOWN, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little boy eight years old, and, seeing so many letters in your valuable paper, I thought I would write one. I love to read your paper, especially the little cousins' letters. My papa is a preacher, and has the Grand Cane circuit for his work, and we hear that everybody is well pleased with him. Bro. R. J. Harp is our preacher, and we children all love him. We have an interesting Sunday-school, and Mr. W. J. Sullivan is our superintendent. I go to day-school, and our teacher is my aunt, Miss Fannie E. Henderson, and everybody likes her very much. I study history, geography, fifth reader, grammar, arithmetic and dictionary. I have no pets. I will close by saying, "Do not put it in the waste-basket, as this is my first attempt." Your friend,

FRANK HENDERSON.
KEITHVILLE, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: Mamma says she wants me to write to some paper. We take several, and everyone has a place for children's letters; but I suppose I should write my first to our church paper. In a few days more I will be nine years old, and have never been in a school-room yet. I am not anxious to go to school, I had rather mamma would always teach me. I wish you would make the children quit writing so much about the waste-basket; it has become so tiresome. I will not write any more now, but will see if you think my first attempt worthy of a place in your paper.

Yours truly,
CLYDE M. ANDERSON.
PICKENS, Mississippi.

STRANGE a disease as Scrofula is, it is not stranger than the power exercised over it by Lactu-pi-a.

HOWEVER long you may have suffered with a Chronic Ulcer, don't despair, but take Lactu-pi-a at once.

MR. EDITOR: I have not seen a letter, from this place, in the children's corner since I've been here, so I thought I would write. I am a little girl nine years old. Dr. Hannicutt is our pastor. Bro. Richardson is our Sunday-school superintendent. We like them so much. My papa is off from home on his district a great part of the time. I go to school to Millwood Institute. The people are very kind to us, and we think well of our new home. I have four sisters and three brothers. I hope you will come to our commencement.

Household.

HOSPITALITY.—Christians who are blessed with happy homes may well take to heart the suggestion of a writer in the Homiletic, relative to the duty of opening them occasionally to the homeless and discouraged ones of earth: Hospitality is the attestation of love to one's fellow through the medium of the home. It is not simply a formal, ceremonial reception extended to him under one's roof, but a cordial entertainment. Its invitation is larger than the simple Come; it is Welcome. It is offered not in the mere extending of the hand, but in the expanding of the heart. It opens not merely the door of the spare room, but that of one's own room. It is willing not only to bring a stranger in, but to turn one's self out. It greets not only with a Take, but Share. It not simply acquiesces, but urges with sweet compulsion. It needs not many-voiced convention, but hears a single voice, "I was a stranger, and ye took me in."

Not yet, we believe, have Christian men and women begun to realize the wonderful evangelizing power there is in a true spirit of hospitality; nor have the possibilities of its proper exercise begun to be seen. Our home doors signify not so much protection as exclusion. Their bolts and bars are eloquent of limitations set upon love. We meet men on a level in our business offices and upon the street, but recognition of equality, and in many respects of obligation, ends there. Our houses are our castles, surrounded by impassible moats, across which the drawbridges fall only for those of our immediate social circles. We have not yet learned with our Master to say to him who inquires of us, "Where dwellest thou?" "Come and see," save as such an invitation will further some self-centered purpose; have not learned to "use hospitality without grudging." The spirit of caste is undeniably one of the mightiest obstacles in the way of that kingdom whose single and comprehensive law is love.

RELIGION IN THE HOME.—I heard once of a young person who went to live in a home supposed to be a thoroughly religious home. She said afterward that from what she saw in that home she was inclined to think there was very little in religion. She saw disagreement and contention and strife and unkindness, which did much to lead her toward infidelity. Lovers of Christ, is there not for us a very solemn lesson in this? How closely all we do and say is watched by the world, and if they see in us exhibitions of temper, anger, passion, unkindly feeling, censoriousness, etc., how greatly it will tend to undo all the influence of our professions and our efforts for the cause of God. One of the great wants of the age is more of Christ in the homes. Let us get so much of the religion of Jesus that we will everywhere exhibit the mind and temper of Christ. Christ said, "If I be lifted up I will draw all men unto me." He may be lifted up in our lives, and if so the drawing influence will be felt. It matters not how gifted the minister or leader or Christian worker is. If there be exhibitions in his life of those things not in harmony with his teaching, it neutralizes his best efforts. Nothing can take the place of a consistent life. Jesus is saying to-day, "Return to thine own home and show how great things Jesus hath done unto thee." We can show by mild, Christian temper what he has done, and the world will be powerfully drawn to him.

You are stirred with truest joy and braced to labor best at your little tasks while you welcome and keep before you the loftiest ideal of the method and the aim of work and being which God has made known to you. That is indeed his revelation, the vision of himself. So he declares what he would have you do what he will enable you to do. So he calls you to be prophets.

Why They Lead.

Dr. Pierce's medicines outsell all others because of their possessing such superior curative properties as to warrant their manufacturers in supplying them to the people (as they are doing through all druggists) on such conditions as no other medicines are sold under, viz: that they shall either benefit or cure the patient, or all money paid for them will be refunded. The "Golden Medical Discovery" is specific for catarrh in the head and all bronchial, throat and lung diseases, if taken in time and given a fair trial. Money will be refunded if it does not benefit or cure.

Dr. Pierce's Pellets—gently laxative or actively cathartic according to dose. 25 cents.

MANY A LIFE

HAS been saved by the prompt use of Ayer's Pills. Travelers by land or sea are liable to constipation or other derangements of the stomach and bowels which, if neglected, lead to serious and often fatal consequences. The most suitable means of correcting these evils is the use of Ayer's Cathartic Pills. The prudent sailing-master would as soon go to sea without his chronometer as without a supply of these Pills. Though prompt and energetic in operation, Ayer's Pills leave no ill effects; they are purely vegetable and sugar-coated; the safest medicine for old and young, at home or abroad.

"For eight years I was afflicted with constipation, which at last became so bad that the doctors could do no more for me. Then I began to take Ayer's Pills, and soon the bowels recovered their natural and regular action, so that now I am in health."—Mrs. C. E. Clark, Tewksbury, Massachusetts.

"I regard Ayer's Pills as one of the most reliable general remedies of our times. They have been in use in my family for affections requiring a purgative, and have given invarying satisfaction. We have found them an excellent remedy for colds and light fevers."—W. R. Woodson, Fort Worth, Texas.

"For several years I have relied more upon Ayer's Pills than upon anything else in the medicine chest, to regulate my bowels and those of the ship's crew. These Pills are not severe in their action, but do their work thoroughly. I have used them with good effect for the cure of rheumatism, kidney troubles, and dyspepsia."—Capt. Mueller, Steamship Felicia, New York City.

"I have found Ayer's Cathartic Pills to be a better family medicine for common use than any other pills within my knowledge. They are not only very effective, but safe and pleasant to take—qualities which must make them valued by the public."—Jules Hauel, Perfumer, Philadelphia, Pa.

LACEY—Died, in Sartartia, Yazoo county, Miss., February 26, 1889, of congestion of the lungs, Mrs. ADA C. LACEY, aged twenty-two years and eight months. She was born June 27, 1866, in Yazoo county, Miss., and was the eldest daughter of Mr. Samuel H. and Georgia Childress.

Death at all times is a sad and solemn messenger; but when he comes, with icy hands and destroying blade, and cuts down one in the beauteous bloom of life and joyous scenes of youth, his terror and gloom are almost intolerable. The deceased was raised near Phœnix, Yazoo county, Miss.; attended the public school there, and was soon prepared to enter the East Mississippi Female College, at Meridian, Miss., where she graduated in 1883, with accomplishments and culture rarely equalled. Returning home fresh with vigor, health and knowledge, she seemed to enjoy life with a bright and lovely future before her. In early youth she united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, south, and lived up to its teachings in an exemplary manner, and though not demonstrative, she possessed the quiet, placid and deep sentiments of religion characteristic of the true Christian. She was wedded to Mr. J. R. Lacey, of Sartartia, Miss., December 9, 1885—a gentleman of promise, kindness and competency—and their union was one of congeniality, pleasure and happiness. Among her acquaintances she was the favorite: cheerful, entertaining, happy and obliging. She never spoke of another's faults, and was charitable, cautious and kind towards all. As a friend, she was constant, true and confiding; an amiable lady, generous, neighbor, loving mother. She was a good and affectionate daughter, the pride of a father's love; an indulgent, vigilant, gentle sister; a model wife, always contented, hopeful and striving to promote her husband's interests, property and love. Oh, that one so young, so good and mild, and so beloved, should go so suddenly to the grave! Her mellow voice, sweet smile and happy laugh are hushed in the stillness of death. She has gone to the realms of joy and bliss, and leaves behind her dear and precious little Georgie, a bereaved and disconsolate husband, a sad and heart-broken father, two sorrowing brothers and a weeping sister. May they treasure and imitate her admonition and example and meet her on the golden shore!

MAGEE—Mrs. AMANDA G. BURNS, wife of Marcus F. Magee, was born February 8, 1866; was married to Marcus F. Magee, January 6, 1887, and departed this life at the home of her husband, near this place, March 23, 1889. The subject of this sketch joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in early life and lived a consistent Christian up to the day of her death. The writer visited her more than once during her sickness, which was of two weeks' duration, and when I asked her in regard to her spiritual condition, I heard from her own lips that she was putting her trust in her blessed Savior, and that he was the strength of her hopes. The light of a happy home is gone out, not to shine any more in this life, but is shining brighter in the world above. Oh, how crushing it must be to the heart of the young husband, and also to the aged father, with sisters and brothers! But, thank God, there is a radiance to illuminate the dark cloud of sorrow, and that is found in the fact that she was a Christian and that her short life, that was so much cherished by husband and relatives, ends in a large reward in the bright home of the blessed.

J. H. EVANS, P. C.

BURNS—Died, March 4, 1889, near Slaughter, La., BELLE LEA, aged four years, daughter of W. T. and R. F. Burns.

During the few short years of her life, Belle Lea was a constant little sufferer, yet patient and cheerful through it all, filling with sunshine and happiness the home blessed by her presence. But it was with a thrill of joy that she welcomed the white-robed messenger sent to bear her spotless spirit across the dark river to her bright home on high. There, amid songs and praises, she now awaits the coming of the loved ones rendered desolate by her absence. Yet a few short years, and what a glorious reunion!

While we deeply sympathize with the bereaved parents, we can only point them to the mercy and goodness of our kind heavenly Father, whose power and love "passeth all understanding," and who alone is the source of all consolation. He takes our treasures and lays them up in heaven, leading us to fix our affections more firmly on him, and to look forward to a happy reunion in our bright home above, where parting and death are unknown.

HALE—The hearts of Bro. and Sister Hale were made sad on February 22, 1889, by the death of their little daughter, IDA KATE, aged five years and sixteen days. Little Ida was a bright, sweet child. She was obedient and loved her parents and pastor. The last time I visited the home of her parents before her death, she paid me her missionary money, saying, "Now is the time for me to pay it." Though we miss little Ida's bright, happy face, we feel sure she has only been transplanted to the better world, and is now enjoying the realms of eternal bliss. Kind parents, weep not for little Ida. She has only gained the heavenly home a short time before us. We shall meet her "by and by" to be separated nevermore.

Her pastor,
JAMES F. ROBINSON.

MITCHELL—Resolutions of the Grenada District Conference:

Whereas, In the providence of our heavenly Father, we, as a church and Conference, are made sad and poorer by the death of our brother, R. P. MITCHELL, which occurred in Memphis, Tenn., April 3, 1889; therefore, be it

Resolved, That by the death of the Rev. R. P. Mitchell the North Mississippi Conference has lost a worthy and faithful member; the Methodist Church, a consecrated, devout and successful preacher of the gospel, and the general church an honored servant, whose fidelity to her every interest has been proven by his earnest life and early death.

Resolved, That while we bow in humble submission to the wisdom and providence of Almighty God, we sorrow deeply as those who have lost a brother beloved.

Resolved, That we tender to our Sister Mitchell, in this sad hour, our sympathy, and that we pray the blessings of our God to be with her in her loneliness.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to Sister Mitchell and to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication, and made part of the Minutes of this Conference.

LAWSON—Died, at Williams, La., January 17, 1889, after a short but painful illness, Little IRENE WARDA LAWSON, adopted daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Scarborough, aged three years, five months and nine days.

Oh, death! insatiable monster, art thou never appeased; must always pluck the fairest and dearest for thine own? Could'st thou not have spared the blossom? Had'st thou not enough of thine own that thou must need'st lay thy icy finger upon little Warda, the light of the mother eye, and the darling of the father heart. Though theirs by adoption, no little one of their own could have been more tenderly cared for or more dearly loved by the household. She had been from babyhood with them; her every look, her every tone was linked to them like leaves to flowers. Baby, when thou shalt meet the mother in heaven, canst thou not tell her of the mother on earth, who so sorely grieves for thee, and who was so loth to let thee go in answer to thy Maker's summons? And now, farewell, you are at rest, I know; but 'twas hard to give thee up to death, so like a gentle slumber on thee.

May we meet in that realm where the rainbow never fades, where the stars will be set out before us like islands on the bosom of the ocean, where the beautiful beings, that pass before us like a meteor, will stay in our presence forever!

SISTRUNK—THEODORE SISTRUNK, son of J. B. and Margaret Y. Sistrunk, was born in Copiah county, Miss., December 19, 1862, and died January 8, 1889; professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1875. Bro. Theo., as he was familiarly called, was a child of affliction all his life here, but his afflictions seemed to serve only to bring him near his Savior. His example was one which seemed to speak to all who knew him that he had been with Christ. As a member of the church and Sunday-school superintendent, though his opportunities had been limited, he was very efficient. His place in the house of God is now vacated; so also his seat around his father's fireside, and we shall no more hear his voice singing his favorite hymn, "Jesus, lover of my soul." Yet we verily believe his voice has been attuned to the song of redeeming love in heaven above, where all is love. Weep not, aged parents, brothers and sisters. Theodore is not dead, but sleepeth here until the resurrection morn, when he shall rise a glorious form.

J. M. JOHNSTON.

CRAVENS—On March 14, 1889, Sister LAURA C. CRAVENS died, of consumption, at her home, in Smith county, Miss. She was born in Jasper county, Miss., July 7, 1858, and married February 1, 1877, to Bro. Ed. Craven, with whom she lived in the bonds of love till her death. She united with the Congregational Methodists soon after her marriage and proved herself an acceptable member. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, last May with her husband. She leaves four children of her own and two step-children. She requested that her children should be kept together and brought up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

Her last hours seemed to be her happiest, as the time was spent in songs and praise to God, and exhorting all around her to be Christians and meet her in heaven. Her last request was that her husband should sing, "There's a lily-white robe in heaven for me;" and, as he could not sing it, he asked her if she felt like there was a robe in heaven for her, and her last dying words were, "Yes, and I will soon be there to put it on."

Sister Cravens' death was a most triumphant one. "She now rests from her labors."

Good News.

Here are two instances of the beneficent action of Compound Oxygen. The one in a severe case of consumption, the other in the weariness of general debility. Concerning the first we receive the following:

PORTAGE, Wis., January 30, 1888.

"My wife has been taking your Compound Oxygen for two years for consumption and has derived much benefit from its use. In fact, I think she would have died long ago but for it."

H. D. JAMES.

In the matter of general debility we give the following extract:

BENTON HARBOR, Mich., Nov. 28, 1888.

"I am indebted to you beyond all other Compound Oxygen purchasers."

BENJAMIN J. EAMAN.

We publish a brochure of 200 pages regarding the effect of Compound Oxygen on invalids suffering from consumption, asthma, bronchitis, dyspepsia, catarrh, hay fever, headache, debility, rheumatism, neuralgia; all chronic and nervous disorders. It will be sent, free of charge, to any one addressing Drs. STARKEY & PALEN, 1529 Arch St., Phila., Pa.; or 120 Sutter street, San Francisco, Cal.

BENEFITS OF THE MOON.—The moon ministers to human wants in several ways that are not so apparent as its light-giving function, although some of them are much more important.

It is by observing the position of the moon with reference to the fixed stars that the navigator determines his longitude. Upon the revolutions of the moon about the earth is based a convenient division of time—the month—intermediate between that furnished by the earth's daily rotation, and its revolution through its orbit. Doubtful points in ancient chronology have been frequently settled by means of eclipses of the moon, the dates of which could be accurately determined. The intervention of the moon in eclipsing the sun gave astronomers the opportunities for obtaining their first knowledge in regard to the solar envelope. But the largest effects on human welfare are produced by the moon through the agency of the tides. Twice a day the decomposing organic matter brought down to the sea-shore by rivers, or deposited along the water's edge by human agency, is swept away by the tidal-wave in its course around the globe. This sanitary service which the moon performs is of inconceivable value. In many harbors large ships and heavily-loaded rafts and barges are moved from the entrance to their wharves, miles above, by that slow but powerful tug, the flood tide. An amount of work is thus done which, if it had to be provided by artificial means, would cost for such a port as London thousands, perhaps millions of pounds yearly.—Popular Science News.

ADOPT SLEEP.—Rev. E. E. Hale says in one of his admirable papers, that his own rule is to devote nine hours of the twenty-four to sleep. While this intellectually and physically strong man finds this amount necessary for the preservation of his health, multitudes show their ignorance of hygienic laws by declaring, with evident pride, that they take but five or six hours, and indeed sometimes less. When, however, it is understood that nature demands that one-third of life be passed in sleep, their error, or ignorance, becomes apparent. It is not sufficient that eight hours of the twenty-four be passed in bed simply, but the requirement is this amount of sound, refreshing, tranquil sleep, else, as a rule, health can not be maintained. The following is from the Boston Journal of Health.

The amount of sleep necessary depends upon the habits and health of the individual; it should not be less than seven, and need not be more than nine hours. If profound and unbroken, less is required. The quantity must depend upon the facility with which the nervous system is restored. The most refreshing repose is that which is entered quietly and seems to have passed quickly. By discipline a certain control over the mind is acquired, and sleep can be summoned at will. It is proof of a disordered brain if this can not be accomplished.

A GALILEAN MICROSCOPE.—M. Govi, an Italian savant, has presented a paper to the French Academy of Sciences, in which he claims for Galileo the distinction of having discovered the microscope as well as the telescope. He has found a book printed in 1610, according to which Galileo had already directed his tube fitted with lenses to the observation of small near objects. The philosopher himself stated shortly after this date, that he had been able to observe through a lens the movements of minute animals and their organs of sense. In a letter written in 1614 to a Sig. Tarde, he stated that he has with his microscope "seen and observed flies as large as sleep, and how their bodies were covered with hairs, and they have sharp claws." The date usually assigned to the discovery of the microscope is 1621, and the invention is attributed to Cornelius Drebbel, a Dutchman; but according to M. Govi, the date must be thrown back eleven years, and the credit of the first construction awarded to Galileo.

Taking Time By The Forelock.

As a general rule diseases do not spring upon us at once in all their virulence. On the contrary, they usually creep upon us stealthily, to take us off our guard. They steal upon us first as small ailments, to which we are apt to pay little attention. Slowly these ailments increase in numbers and in severity until, before we are aware of it, they have developed into serious affections and dangerous complications. Now the wise man and woman will not wait until this serious stage of affairs, but will destroy disease in the bud by taking PE-RU-NA from time to time. NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

The steamship Chilian, loading at the head of Second street, this city, had a destructive fire on board on April 11. Her cargo contained 20,000 bushels of grain and 4 500 bales of cotton. The grain will prove a total loss, while about half of the cotton is damaged or destroyed.

The Cigarette Bill, before the Michigan Legislature, passed the House on April 11. It prohibits the "manufacture, sale, keeping for sale or giving away of any cigarettes or any imitation thereof composed in whole or in part of tobacco or any substance in the form of the cigarette containing narcotic elements; or any rice paper designed for cigarette wrappers."

The White Caps, unterrified by recent prosecutions, and rather emboldened by the release and acquittal of a number of the band, have commenced fresh depredations in Warrick and Dubois counties, Illinois. During last week, they entered the premises of an old man in Dubois county, who seized a shotgun and opened fire. They beat a hasty retreat, bearing five of their wounded companions with them.

Among the 300 saloon passengers on the Cunard steamship Etruria, for Liverpool, on April 13, were the members of the Samoan Commission, John A. Casson, Wm. Walter Phelps and Geo. H. Bates.

Minister Bragg has informed the Department of State that President Diaz, in his message to the Mexican Congress, with reference to the Weil and La Abra claims, asserts that in view of the fact that ground existed for the belief that the La Abra claim was fraudulent, he thought that the American Senate, being satisfied of the justice of the Mexican position in the matter, would take the necessary action to prevent the consummation of the claims.

Twenty thousand men threaten to quit the employ of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, and tie up the trains. Compulsory life insurance in the company's system is the cause of the trouble. The contract which the employees are asked to sign contains a clause making the insurance a release of all claims for damages against the company for injury or death.

A great many prospective settlers are hanging around the borders of Oklahoma, waiting for the date set for the opening of the territory by the President's proclamation.

The Minnesota House of Representatives, by a vote of 63 to 17, has passed the Kays Bill relating to elections which provides for what is known as the Australian system.

The entire western Arkansas border is a scene of bustling activity. People are striving to get into Oklahoma by the southeastern entrance, which is by far the richest portion of the new territory.

FOREIGN.

It is rumored that an attempt was made upon the life of the Czar, and that His Majesty was wounded by an exploding shell. The affair is said to have been hushed up by the Russian authorities.

New measures are being adopted by Governor-General Salamanca looking to the suppression of brigandage and the prevention of smuggling in Cuba—in fact, to the reorganization of the public administration in general.

Gen. Boulanger attended a soiree in Brussels, last week. Upon his arrival the officials of the French embassy, who were present, took their departure. The Belgian minister of foreign affairs and most of the other members of the Cabinet declined introductions to Boulanger.

The Bavarian government, replying to a memorial from the Bavarian bishop, asking to be placed in control of the educational system, declines to allow a daily school mass and refuses to make a denominational division of the middle schools. The government promises to consult the bishops in appointing teachers of the elementary schools.

The funeral of M. Chevreul, the distinguished French chemist and centenarian, was held in Paris on Saturday. The ceremonies, for which the Chamber of Deputies appropriated 10,000 francs, were impressive and were largely attended.

From the Herald of Faith, St. Louis Missouri, August 10, 1887:

Referring to Shallenberger's Antidote for Malaria, the business manager of the Herald of Faith would say, that he gave this medicine a personal trial, and was speedily cured of an unpleasant intermittent Fever. He then recommended it to F. J. Tiefenbrunn, 1915 Papin street, and to police officer Meidenger, at the Union Depot, both of whom were cured by it of chills and fever of several years' standing. Recently his wife, after a fever of several days' duration, took a single dose and was perfectly cured. In view of these remarkable cures, and remembering how much money is spent for quinine, so little to be depended upon, and often so injurious, we can only wish that Shallenberger's Antidote would come into general use.

B. F. ALEXANDER, P. E.

For restoring the color, thickening the growth, and beautifying the hair, and for preventing baldness, Hall's Hair Renewer is unsurpassed.

The Independent says the amount paid out for pensions by the government from 1861 to July, 1888, reaches the enormous sum of $963,088,444.

The clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policy-holders. The Episcopal Diocese of New York has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and The Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets; has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

East Tennessee, Virginia & Georgia R. R.

Well known as the Great Kennesaw Route, is now making twelve hours quicker time to Washington via New York and eastern points, with Pullman Buffet Sleepers from New Orleans to Washington without change. The mountain resorts of East Tennessee are reached in twenty-four hours, and Virginia resorts in thirty hours. For tickets, sleeping accommodation, circulars, schedule, etc., call at Kennesaw ticket office, 22 Carondelet street.

"Consumption can be Cured."

Dr. J. S. COMOS, Owensville, Ohio, says: "I have given Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites to four patients with better results than seemed possible with any remedy. All were hereditary cases of Lung disease, and advanced to that stage when coughs, pain in the chest, frequent breathing, frequent pulse, fever and emaciation. All these cases have increased in weight from 16 to 28 lbs., and are not now needing any medicine."

CHEAPEST FURNITURE HOUSE IN NEW ORLEANS. This is the heading of the advertisement of Mr. J. G. Grant's, 50 and 52 Baronne street, New Orleans. Now, we would suggest to our readers to peruse it carefully, and they will be astonished at the low prices which Mr. Grant is selling furniture for. As this gentleman is thoroughly reliable, and guarantees the smallest article that leaves his store, we feel satisfied that those who may try him once will have further dealings with him. There is no store of this character in the South that keeps a larger or finer assortment than his, and as his expenses are less than others in the same line, he has informed us that he can sell lower. Try him.—N. O. Weekly Picayune, January 24.

A Word about Corsets.

A corset may be an instrument of torture and disease or it may be a means of comfort and health. The ideal corset is one which allows freedom and ease in the movements of the body, while possessing sufficient firmness to prevent the wrinkling of the dress. Corsets stiffened with whalebone and steel are rigid and uncomfortable and very liable to break; on the other hand, those stiffened with cord or twine are too soft to retain their shape.

To meet these difficulties, the enterprising firm of Warner Bros., nine years ago, introduced a new material called Coraline, which is intermediate in stiffness between whalebone and cord. It preserves the shape of the corset perfectly, is very flexible and absolutely unbreakable. Coraline is made only by Warner Bros., and is used by them in twelve different styles of corsets, at prices ranging from $1 to $8 each. The merits of these goods are attested by their immense sales, which are now over two millions annually.

TWILIGHT MUSIC.

BY HELEN ELIZABETH HOOPER.

As I sat in my chair at evening,
After the hurry of day,
A lull of repose stole o'er me,
Bringing calm and peace in its way;
And a beautiful melody greeted my ear,
A melody rich and clear.

It came from the touch of a master-hand,
From fingers that thrilled with joy
As they swept across the ivory keys,
In a pleasure without alloy.

And thoughts came crowding of other days,
As the sounds reached my listening ear,
And to reverie sweet I lingered long,
While those beautiful strains drew near.

Oh, tell me the mystery of thy charm,
Sweet music borne on the air,
That entrances the soul and calms my heart,
Though no word be spoken there!

Tell me the mystery of thy power,
The balm, the joy, the peace
Thou scatterest freely to human hearts,
In the tones of thy grand release!

* * * * * * *

Part of our promised heritage,
In yonder land of bliss,
Is the choral wave of angelic song,
But the foretaste is given in this!

The Louisiana State Lottery Company Examined and Exposed.

BY REV. B. CARRADINE, D. D.

II.—OBJECTIONS TO AND CHARGES AGAINST THE LOUISIANA STATE LOTTERY.

Our first is in regard to its incorrect and even false representation of itself to the world and before the world.

In the public prints it declares that it is founded for educational and charitable purposes. We all know why this is done. That this is upon their part a peculiar recognition of the prevalence of Christian sentiment. The stockholders of the Lottery know, as many of you know, that open oppression and systems of robbery can not exist, much less flourish, in these days unless they take a name from the Christian vocabulary and counterfeit a Christian virtue. Satan can no longer go about as a roaring lion, but appears as an angel of light, or stands among the worshipers of God. The wolf is still among the people, and will ever be; but he appears not as a wolf: in order to succeed in his destructive work he has to wear the wool of a sheep and manipulate a sheep's voice. You will notice that Mormonism never confesses to bigamy, but, in strict conscientiousness and in the name of religion, takes to itself many wives. The saloon, with the fangs and fierceness of a wolf, bleats mildly about personal and private rights, and about every man being entitled to a living, and that he forces no one into his den. The church sets up its rattles that are nothing but the foolish spirit of gambling; but it pulls the wool of a Christian phrase over the gaming practice, and then the wool over the eyes of the people, and bans away to its heart's content about Christian benevolence.

And so, in like manner, the Lottery that is generally acknowledged to be, and is, the most stupendous gambling scheme upon the earth—will never admit the imputation, will not allow the name, but sanctimoniously draws down the corners of its mouth, rolls up its eyes until you can see nothing but the whites, folds its hands in its woolly cloak, and baas away about being run for educational and charitable purposes.

That it was not incorporated for that intent you and I know as well as the stockholders themselves; that it was a gaming institution from its inception; that it was founded to make money for its incorporators in a free, easy and immoral way, and that the sum paid the Charity Hospital was simply the toll exacted at the legislative gate.

And so we protest against this false representation of itself to the world. The protest is founded on justice, and is in strict harmony with the practice of men. When a man out in the world tries to appear other than he is, the laugh and jeer and advice of the multitude to him is, to come out and show your true self!

There is a deep disgust latent in the breasts of all for hypocrisy, no matter where you behold it, whether in the church, or out of the church in the world, where it oftener exists. Dreadful as are some sins, and painful as is the sight, yet I would rather see a man open and above board in his iniquity, out and out in his evil doings, than to see one of those deep, secretive natures, inwardly rotten, and yet pretending to be upright, and posing as a saint before the world.

That the Lottery is a gambling institution we have the words and decisions of countless judges in the land. Three Parliaments in Europe say so, and the Constitutions of twenty-six States in the Union make the same affirmation. Hence when it calls itself an educational and charitable institution, we are filled with an immeasurable disgust. And so, in the name of the Christian phraseology, which it outrages; and in the name of the Christian virtues, which it untruthfully assumes to possess; and in the name of the Christian conscience, which it pretends to have, and which it outrages; and in the name of the Christian's God, whom it insults—I protest against this hypocritical representation of itself as an educational and charitable organization, when it is the greatest gambling institution this day upon the face of the earth.

The second charge I make is, that by its doubleness of life it is destructive of certain moral distinctions that are essential to proper living here and salvation hereafter. Just a thought will convince you how important is the line that separates right from wrong. Instead of being less clearly defined, it should be deepened until it becomes at last the great gulf Christ spoke of as existing in eternity, and across which no one could pass. Whoever or whatever obliterates that line is our common moral enemy. Any institution of evil run in the name of good, or claiming to fulfill some Christian virtue, does that very thing—it is bound to obliterate the line that separates right from wrong. It confuses the moral perception, blunts spiritual discrimination, and lays a destructive hand upon that which is essential for proper living on earth and blessedness in the life to come. It is remarkable that God utters a Woe to the man who justifieth evil!—and, again, Woe to him who calls evil good! That is exactly what is being done in the case of the Lottery; a thing inherently and essentially evil is called good, and declared to be doing good. The reason that moved the Almighty to the utterance of this woe was, that just such a course struck at the moral integrity of a man, at his moral understanding and religious faculties, and tended to bring him down from the noble altitude and spiritually discriminative power of a spirit, to the life and level and unreasoning intelligence of the brute. Countless thousands of people are not given to inquiry and investigation of moral questions. They accept what they see printed in the newspaper as they would the gospel. There seems to be no interrogation point in their mental economy. What is printed in good clear type must be true. It matters not how bold-faced and baseless may be the assertion; it is an assertion and, therefore, the truth. Such people open our great secular journals and read there that the Louisiana State Lottery is run in the interests of education and charity. They, in their unquestioning simplicity, believe the statement, and are led blindly into the commission of wrong. They do more; they defend a gambling concern because of the avowed object.

Woe to the man, says the Bible, that destroyeth his neighbor's landmarks; not simply in the physical world, but in the moral world. Woe to him by whom offenses come in the spiritual life, said Christ; "it were better that a millstone were hung about his neck, and he were drowned in the depths of the sea." Woe to the man who spreadeth a snare or diggeth a pit for his neighbor, says the Word of God. And all these things this Lottery has done. It has ruthed out landmarks, and confused men in regard to their duty. It has brought offenses, deep and many, into our midst, and it has spread the snare and dug the pit for the fall of men and women. Hear the doom God pronounces for such proceedings: "He shall be accursed." And certainly, if there is any institution in this land that has the execration of upright men and true lovers of their race, it is the Louisiana State Lottery! But this is not all the doom. Into the pit, says God, that they have dug for another they shall fall themselves. As certainly as you live, you will all see that fall—fall of individual, and fall of corporation. From the depths of my soul I do not believe that the judgment and awful retribution which this institution has, by long years of shameless iniquity, been creating against and for itself, will be long deferred. The axe is at the root of the tree, and the storm is in the air. If there be such a thing as signs in the spiritual world, its destruction is at hand.

A third charge I make is, that the Lottery is gagging and silencing the Christian Church in this city and surrounding country. It has long ago silenced the Legislature; and in ways that each legislator who has lost his condemning voice can best tell, and must answer to his conscience and at the judgment bar of God at last. It has also silenced the newspapers of this city. A glance at the Lottery advertisements in their columns will explain their stillness. They will not find fault with a stock concern that pays them at the rate of an hundred dollars a day, besides other courtesies and attentions thrown in of remarkable nature and value; it has likewise silenced quite a number of people who were once outspoken against it by giving them positions, offices and clerkships. All this we could stand, for the world is going to be saved and redeemed in spite of all the silent Legislatures and newspapers in Christendom. But that which comes with an unutterable pang is the sight of a silenced church.

I suppose that just now there is being presented to the world one of the most amazing spectacles ever beheld. Here is a gambling institution that is the natural enemy of the church of Christ, in that it undoes its teaching, violates its commandments and stands as a bar to its progress—and yet, wonderful to say, is not found in a state of antagonism with it, but, on the contrary, is in good-fellowship and amity, and is seen pouring its gifts into its bosom. And lo! the church itself has drooped its fair head upon the shoulder of the Louisiana State Lottery, and says candidly, "You are so nice and so kind and so free with your money that I can not say anything against you to save my life." O the doubly contemptuous sight!

Here is a gambling institution, turning the prize or fortune wheel with one hand and pumping wind into a church organ with the other! Did you ever see such a spectacle? What kind of creature is it?

I never liked those curious compound creatures that mythology tells us about. Part fish and part man; part human and part devil. Give me a whole fish, and an entire man. Give me an out-and-out Christian and an out-and-out sinner. Save me from a creature half saint and half devil.

This kind of mixed life confuses me, and makes us all lose our hearings. Just as I think the Louisiana State Lottery is going to join the church, I hear that it is having a monthly drawing at the Academy of Music. And just as I suppose that it has gone back to the world and is in a hopelessly backslidden condition, I am informed that it is pumping wind again into a church organ, or is painting a church or is building a sanctuary or is offering ten thousand dollars to the Young Men's Christian Association for the erection of a new edifice.

Then look at the church? Professing to be the bride of Christ, called upon by virtue of the holy spiritual wedlock that exists to turn from such an enemy to the Son of God as is this institution—please behold it! One hand is uplifted to the skies toward the absent Bridegroom, and the other adulterous hand is in the pocket of the Louisiana State Lottery.

I never thought when I was a child that I would have use, as an illustration, of Lord Ullins' daughter. She was sinking, you remember, in a stormy lake. The poem said about her as she sank,

"One lovely hand outstretched for aid,
And one was round her lover."

So with the church as she sinks!

One lovely hand outstretched to Christ,
And one is round the Lottery!

Do I refer to any particular church? I refer to twenty different churches in this city and State. The church is silenced. Who has heard her voice uplifted against her earthly lover? Is she not seen with him? Does he not support her—deck her neck with ornaments and prepare beautiful habitations in which she may reside? How can she speak against one whose bounty she receives?

Alas! for the people—for the land—and for morals, when the church of Christ, which is the voice of God, is silent on the earth.

And the Louisiana State Lottery has silenced her. It has stuffed her ears full of bank-bills, so that she can not hear. It has placed silver dollars on her dead eyes, so that she can not see. And it has sewed up her lips with golden thread so that she can not speak.

The recording angel in Heaven has written a most amazing sentence about the church of Christ in New Orleans and Louisiana. This is the sentence: "Silenced by a gambling institution!"

The Lost Opportunity.

BY REV. A. D. MILLER.

MR. EDITOR: I must say I was surprised and sorry when I saw Bro. Cammack's article—surprised at the position he took with regard to the Indians, and sorry that he has thrown cold water on what I was trying to do for them; but I hope our Methodist people will not be so easily satisfied as to lull their consciences to sleep by giving a few dollars to the Baptist people or Church to assist them in preaching to the Indians. For I am satisfied that hundreds and thousands of our people will not give anything in that way, as they do not believe the doctrine taught by the Baptist Church. Hence they will not pay out their money to have them taught contrary to their conception of the teaching of the Bible, and I do not blame them, for I could not do it myself.

The Indians are ignorant of God and his holy Word; and shall we, in attempting to help them, teach or hire a man to teach them contrary to our conception of the teaching of the Bible? No. Let's give them the gospel from a Methodist standpoint. The Baptists say and teach that immersion is the only scriptural mode of baptism. Now, do we believe that? No. I do not believe that immersion is a scriptural mode of baptism at all. I believe that sprinkling or pouring is the scriptural mode; and shall I pay out my money to get a man to teach the ignorant Indians contrary to my own belief? No, never. The Baptists say and teach also that when a man is once converted or regenerated that he can never so fall as to be lost; or, in other words, they believe and teach the final unconditional perseverance of the saints; that when a person is converted he is not accountable for the works of the flesh, and that he is just as sure of heaven as if he were already there. Do we believe that? No. We believe in the possibility of apostacy, and that there is a great danger of it. "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." And shall we, as a church, pay a man to lead them astray at this point, and expose them to the danger of apostacy by putting them off their guard? Surely not. And then they teach that we are not fit subjects, or worthy to take the sacrament. Is that scriptural? Not according to the teaching of the Bible. If so, I would like to see the chapter and verse in the Bible where it is taught. And yet Bro. Cammack would have us give our money to a church that would teach all these doctrines contrary to our belief, and also teach the Indians that we were not a church at all, but a society organized by men and of men, having no right to claim that we are a church, or administer the sacraments of the church. Can we afford to do that? No, never; but let's turn on the light from a Methodist standpoint. Let's put Methodist glasses on the Indians, so that they may see it as we do. Let's spend our money to build up our own church and doctrine, as we believe it is the doctrine of the Bible.

But Bro. Cammack thinks it is too late now. Why so? Because the Baptists have been preaching to them, and have some organized churches among them. Is that any reason? None in the world. Shall we, because somebody else is ahead, sit down and do nothing at all?

The Baptists claim to be much older than the Methodists as a church, and we admit that the Primitive Baptists are a little older. Well, now, suppose our fathers had said, because the Baptists have a church already organized, and have a start on us, we will make no effort at all, what would have been the result? Why, there would have been no Methodist Church. But they did not believe the doctrine taught by the Baptists, and hence they rose up and built for themselves; and to-day the Methodist Church is the stronger of the two, financially and numerically, and so it may be in a few years with regard to the Indians, if we only do our duty. Anyway, we ought to make the effort; and whether it amounts to much or not, we will have done our duty. God will not hold us accountable for the result. It will be the effort we will be accountable for. And as to the Indian population being too small to divide out between the different denominations, if there were only ten, I would claim them for God and Methodism; and if all the older ones were Baptists, I would contest every inch of ground for the children. If the Baptist Church and doctrine is all right for the Indian, why not for the white man? Why not all be Baptists? But you say: No, I can not be a Baptist; I do not believe their doctrine. But you think it is all right for the Indian. Now, brother, be consistent. I do not blame the Baptists, if they believe their doctrine, to preach it, and I must say that I commend their zeal, if not their judgment, in the efforts they make to build up their church.

But Bro. Cammack thinks it would be an unwise expenditure of means. Well, maybe so; but I can not believe it. If we think we are right, we ought to make every possible effort to get others to believe it, and what is money when compared to souls? One soul is worth more than ten thousand worlds like this. The world, with all its wealth, will pass away; but the soul will live in weal or woe while God and eternity last. If we could only get up on the mount of faith and, with the telescope of God's Word, look down on this little world, and see it as God sees it, and then, from that high eminence, turn our telescope on the soul, with its possibilities and future destinies, either in eternal torture and pain, or bathing its wings in the sunlight of glory, surely we would not stop to count up the cost in dollars and cents of the salvation of a soul; and I think that not only the soul of the Indian is exposed, but ours also, if we fail to do our duty toward their salvation. "Go ye and teach all nations;" "Go ye and preach the gospel to every creature," says Christ. Now, have we obeyed the covenant or not? "No." and have we the right to turn the work over to some one else? "No." And if we fail to do our part, can we ever expect to see the pearly gates and walk the golden streets of the New Jerusalem? "No." And if we do, and should meet up with one of the Indians from Mississippi, would he rise up to call us blessed? "No." May God have mercy on us as a church, and forgive our failures in the past, and help us do our duty in the future!

But now, in conclusion, I wish to say since writing my first article I have written to Bishop Galloway on the subject, and he assures me that the man can be had as soon as the money is in sight, and that he thinks the move a good one.

And now, brethren, let us have the names; and as soon as five hundred dollars can be raised, the Bishop says we can get the man; and let's raise it and put him to work at once. My first proposition was to get one hundred persons that would obligate themselves to pay five dollars annually for five years, making five hundred dollars a year: but if any want to pay more, all right; and if any want to help, and can't pay that much, send your name to me, with amount you can pay annually for five years, and as soon as we can get enough names to run it up to five hundred dollars a year, then we will turn the whole matter over to the Bishop. I have four names already. Now, who will be one of the ninety and six? Address me at Cuto, Rankin county, Miss., and I will acknowledge receipt at once on postal card.

Your brother in hope of the salvation of the Indians in Mississippi.

Centennial Thanksgiving.

A PROCLAMATION BY THE PRESIDENT.

A hundred years have passed since the government which our forefathers founded was formally organized. At noon on the 30th day of April, seventeen hundred and eighty-nine, in the city of New York in the presence of an assemblage of the heroic men whose patriotic devotion had led the colonies to victory and independence, George Washington took the oath of office as chief magistrate of the new born republic. This impressive act was preceded at 9 o'clock in the morning in all the churches of the city by prayer for God's blessing on the government and its first President. The centennial of this illustrious event in our history has been declared a general holiday by act of Congress, to the end that the people of the whole country may join in commemorative exercise appropriate to the day. In order that the joy of the occasion may be associated with a deep thankfulness in the minds of the people for all our blessings in the past, and a devout supplication to God for their gracious continuance in the future, the representatives of the religious creeds, both Christian and Hebrew, have memorialized the government to designate an hour for prayer and thanksgiving on that day.

Now, therefore, I, Benjamin Harrison, President of the United States of America, in response to this pious and reasonable request, do recommend that on Tuesday, April 30, at the hour of 9 o'clock in the morning the people of the entire country repair to their respective places of divine worship and implore the favor of God that the blessings of liberty, prosperity and peace may abide with us as a people and that his hand may lead us in the paths of righteousness and good deeds.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States of America to be affixed. Done in the city of Washington the fourth day of April in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-nine, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and thirteenth.

BENJAMIN HARRISON.
JAMES G. BLAINE, Secretary of State.

The Call of Our Bishops.

THE WASHINGTON CENTENARY.

In accordance with the recommendation of the President of the United States in his proclamation of April 4, whereby he calls the people of the entire country to assemble in their respective places of worship at 9 o'clock A. M., April 30, to commemorate by thanksgiving and prayer the inauguration, one hundred years before that day, of George Washington as first President of the republic; recognizing now, as our ecclesiastical predecessors and fathers in God were prompt and first formally to do then, the hand of God in the elevation of that eminent man to exalted station; we, the Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, urge the members of our church, ministers and laymen, to meet at the time designated for the worship of the God of nations, who hath granted us civil and religious freedom, and to pray his continued blessings on our country, its institutions, and its people.

This national event is a re-affirmation and reminder that "there is no power but of God." He hath ordained both governments and rulers, and rules over them in righteousness. This man whose heroic virtues and exalted character have made illustrious alike the land of his birth, the office he filled, and the nation over which he was called first to preside, in his first official act and on the very day we commemorate, made "a fervent supplication to that Almighty Being who rules over this universe, who presides in the councils of nations, and whose providential aid supplies every human defect," for national blessings; thereby recognizing at the dawn of our national existence the same great truth that now calls the people of the entire country to assemble for thanksgiving and prayer to God.

When we shall meet to supplicate divine blessings on the future of our country, let us pray especially that men of such character as Washington may ever rule over us, remembering that "when the righteous are in authority, the people rejoice; but when the wicked beareth rule, the people mourn."

AFTER DARKNESS, LIGHT.

BY MRS. A. S. STOW.

Not one long night, beloved,
With never, here and there, a gleam of light,
With not a single star to shine above us,
Else we should falter and give o'er the fight.

In darkness lies the promise
Of some glad day that on the soul shall rise
Just when the blackness seems to be the fairest,
A sweet surprise to weary, tear-dimmed eyes.

Upon creation's morning
The gracious mandate fell, "Let there be light!"
And though at eve the lengthening shadows gathered,
Morning arose, and chased away the night.

Scarce is a day unclouded;
The fairest promise disappointments close;
Yet patient waiting goes not unrewarded;
Trusting that light will come to bring sweet repose.

Why murmur then, beloved?
Into the sunlight we shall come at last!
What if our lives are cramped, and dark, and joyless;
A day will come when this shall all be past!

With no uncertain accents
The King of Heaven will claim us for his own—
Joint heirs with him who purchased our salvation,
And crowns us with great joy before his throne.

O blessed, blessed prospect!
To walk with him in purest garments white;
With never tiring zeal to love and labor
In that fair land that knows nor pain nor blight.

"Christian Womanhood."

The determined Miss Doctress Susie, finding it utterly impracticable for her to practice medicine, single and alone, still felt herself equal to the emergency, however. So she set her bangs to catch a man for her to marry, and have a husband as a constant attendant. And soon she captured one, Jonathan Fellow; and they were "pronounced man and wife" according to the forms of law. And it began to look to her like she was getting fixed up all right for the business she was determined to follow. For awhile the partnership seemed to be getting along swimmingly.

But eventually it happened that another little Fellow was added to the family. But, then, what to do and how to get along with the new accession and carry on their former business Mrs. Doctress Fellow and her Fellow partner found to be the most difficult problem they had ever had to solve before, for every few minutes the little Fellow was wanting something or other; and every now and then it clamored loudly for something that Mr. Jonathan could not furnish himself, and which Mrs. Fellow alone could supply of the proper quality and in the proper quantity, according to the established law of nature. And so again Mrs. Doctress Fellow found herself inextricably involved in as perplexing a dilemma with a baby as she had before found herself without a husband; for how was it possible for both the big Fellows together to do justice to the little Fellow and a lot of out-door patients that might be calling for Mrs. Doctress Fellow to visit them at any and all hours of the day and night, and in all sorts of weather? Even Jonathan himself couldn't stay at home and attend to the wants of the baby, as proud as he seemed to be of it, for he would have to go along and drive the doctress. They could neither leave it at home, nor carry it along with them. Will anybody be so unfeeling as to suggest that the innocent, helpless little Fellow be put out on a "baby farm," and let the two big Fellows go ahead with their unsuitable business as before?—the one practicing his calling as carriage-driver, and the other one now neglecting her own family to attend to other people! "God forbid." To neglect home and children for fortune or fame would be unnatural, suicidal and unpardonable. Parents can not delegate to others the peculiar duties they owe the dear ones at home without sinning grievously against them and God, who will hold them to rigid accountability for such criminal neglect. Which is higher, nobler and more pleasing to God and man—for a mother to love her children, "train them up in the way they should go," so that "when they are old they will not depart from it"? or to leave home and neglect the dear ones thus, to go around and attend to other people? Did the mother of George Washington, or John Wesley, or any of the other great and good men that have accomplished so much for the world, commit such mistaken follies? There is far more hope of accomplishing good with the young than with the old. "An ounce of prevention is worth more than a pound of cure." "As the twig is bent, the tree will incline." The right sort of mothers at home will turn out the right sort of people abroad. And it is "righteousness that exalteth a nation."

Dear woman, God-given woman, accept with contentment your heaven-born destiny: to be the loved and honored "helpmeet for man" that God "made you" to be; for if you don't preside at home and promote the order and happiness of the family, who will? who can? And what nobler sphere and grander employment could occupy your heart and head and hands? Ever bear in mind the fact that the child of to-day becomes the man to-morrow that governs the nation, and that you will be "the power behind the throne" upon which your son sits. Pollock has said: "To be observed some scramble upon thrones and sit in vestures dripping wet with gore." Had you, woman—infinitely more beautiful and lovely in your modesty and retirement—rather desert home and neglect the dear ones there, and let them come to worse than nothing that you may unsex yourself wrangling in the hustings or handling dirty cases at the bar, or dabbling in other unsuitable occupations?

While we look with wonder akin to admiration upon the rare comets that sweep across the heavens so grandly now and then, we admire more and hold dearer the fixed stars that abide in nobler spheres, as central suns to grander systems.

An Episode of Court.

There is no doubt but one of the great needs of our country is that of Christian officers. In connection with this fact, I wish to relate a little episode that took place in our town a few days ago. Judge Chrisman, of Brookhaven, Miss., was holding court. He is well known for his noble Christian virtues, a leading official in the deliberations of his church. When the criminal docket was called, a man that had been indicted for deserting his wife and child was brought up for trial; but after the discussion of lawyers, Judge Chrisman decided that the case did not come under the jurisdiction of the court and remanded it back to the justice court. While this was going on there, the thinly clad, heart-broken woman stood, with a small, sickly child in her arms, leaning upon the balustrade for support, anxiously watching the proceedings of the court. The judge, though engaged in the duties of his office, had not failed to observe the more than widowed wife in her forlorn and pitiable condition. As she started to leave the court-room he had her called back. Addressing himself to Mr. Miller, the district attorney, who had just made a strong speech on such barbarous conduct, he said: "We must help this poor woman." He, leading the way, called upon the crowd to give; and never was an appeal more generously responded to. The large and liberal contribution of the judge had hardly reached the table before a shower of silver came down upon the desk. All this time the judge was exciting them, with cheerful words, to give. Then said the judge, "Call up the woman, and turn over the money to her." With the child in her arms, and yet with a bright smile on her face, she came forward to the attorney's desk and received the money, thanking his honor for the sum. Then the poor and broken-hearted deserted wife left the court-room with a sense of gratitude that, likely, she had never felt before.

I thank God for such episodes while traveling along life's way. It cheers our faith in our holy religion and, doubtless, makes us better people. But this is to me a very remarkable case. A judge on the bench, amid his official duties, stopping his court long enough to raise a public collection for an object of charity! Surely we are getting to be a better people, and that act of Judge Chrisman was what St. James calls pure and undefiled religion before God and the Father—is this to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction; not long prayers or salaried ministers or gorgeous churches are pure and undefiled religion—the only religion God recognizes. The word "visit," we all know, is to help them, relieve them in their distress; and if this be true, the churches had better wake up. Yes, we need Christian officers. Judge Chrisman's act was the loudest preaching that court-house ever heard.

A. B. NICHOLSON.

The Bishop's Cabinet.

"Forasmuch" as several of the brethren have, of late, given us their views as to laymen in the Bishop's cabinet, allow me a little space, "most excellent Theophilus," that I may make some suggestion that will require no legislation by the General Conference, and will, I think, obviate any necessity that may now exist for laymen in the "cabinet." Let me preface what I have to say by this: No man in the Methodist Church honors the presiding eldership more than I. I have never looked upon it as a fifth wheel, but a very necessary part of our itinerant machinery, and it can be so arranged that the presiding elder can furnish the Bishop all the information he may want, both as to the preachers and the work of his district. We do not need laymen in the cabinet; we have too much of this already. But how can the matter be arranged so that the presiding elder may be more effective both of the district and in the cabinet? Why, just in this way: Make the districts smaller. Let the maximum be twelve appointments. No man living can fill a district as large as eighteen or twenty appointments, fill it successfully, obtain the necessary information for the Bishop, etc., unless every moment of his time is spent away from his family (if he have one), and in going from house to house. I know he can go four times a year; one-half of them in the middle of the week, and hold Quarterly Conference; but what time has he at his disposal to inform himself as to the work, when he has to hurry off to his next appointment, perhaps, to preach the same night at another quarterly meeting? Let us not, my brethren, discount these consecrated men of God by crowding into the cabinet a lay element unacquainted with the preachers, and not as well acquainted with the work as the presiding elders can be. But let us untie their hands by making the field smaller, sending more of them into the vineyard, that they may till the ground better, and become better acquainted both with their people and their preachers. The day of overgrown circuits is past. The call for small districts is just as great.

In Memoriam.

REV. R. P. MITCHELL.

We, as individuals, as a church and community, are often called to halt and consider the end of the life we are living by family afflictions and sore trials, and in our troubles are often led to exclaim, "Why is this?" In looking back over the history of this church, and gathering from the record the names of her faithful pastors, we instinctively enquire, Where are they? On the record as pastor of this church, we find that in 1879 Robert Paine Mitchell was in the vigor of youth, a full and well-developed minister of Christian manhood, walking by faith before this people as pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Kosciusko. On the first Sabbath in April, 1879, he delivered to this church and people the message of peace, delivered by the angel "to the shepherds that watched their flocks by night," on the night of the birth of the Savior of men; and to-day we, with sad hearts, sorrowing for our departed friend and brother, come together as the sheep over whom he once watched, as a tender, loving shepherd, to give expression of our sorrow for this sad bereavement and, "to us," apparent untimely death."

As Bro. Mitchell had just reached his meridian of manhood and ministerial usefulness, with a well-rounded Christian character and a mind well stored with that knowledge which made him effective in reaching the hearts and consciences of men, and as an instrument in the hands of God in leading them to accept Christ as their Savior, we, as finite beings, looking at this dispensation of God, are led to exclaim, "Why is this?" Yet we know that God's ways are not like man's. God has a purpose in all that he does. We have no word from the lips of Bro. Mitchell for some days before his death; but from his consistent Christian life and his fidelity to the church of God, his close study of the Bible, his accepting the Bible as the Word of God spoken to him, his faith in Christ, we are assured that he was ready and waiting God's pleasure to call him from his loved employment, and that his faith has, ere this, been fully realized in the possession of those joys that are "inexpressible and full of glory," which joys he gave his life and labors to secure. Therefore, be it

Resolved, That we recognize in Bro. R. P. Mitchell a minister above the average in gifts, graces, and ability to teach and lead sinners to accept Christ as their Savior,

Resolved, That we, as members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Kosciusko, hereby express our sorrow and grief for the loss of our friend and brother, R. P. Mitchell, who was with us, prayed for and preached to us for four consecutive years, and whose energy, zeal, and Christian walk before us as our pastor, secured our love and highest esteem, and stimulated us to increased desires to serve our Creator with renewed fidelity.

Resolved, That our tender sympathies and remembered love and affections are hereby extended to our bereaved and heart-stricken Sister Mitchell in this, her irreparable loss, and direct her to look to God and continue steadfast in that faith which has secured to all who have continued to the end, a home in glory and a reunion with the loved ones who have gone before.

Resolved, That a copy of this, our appreciation of the services and worth of our deceased brother, be sent to Sister Mitchell, in token of our sorrow and sympathy for her great loss.

Resolved, That these suggestive facts and resolutions be spread on the minutes of the church record, and copies be furnished the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, the Kosciusko Messenger and Star for publication.

RUSTON, LA.

MR. EDITOR: I have some idea that you would like to hear somewhat of the doings in this, the Atlanta of North Louisiana—the driving, bustling and go-ahead town of Ruston. In many respects this is a phenomenal place. Four years ago it was a pine thicket, in which the whip-poor-will held sway, and the frightened hare found a safe retreat. No such rural sounds or sights now greet the eye or ear in Ruston. In place of the whip-poor-will's note we have the snort of the "iron horse," and not hares, but drummers find covert in the brick stores filled with goods—from a pen to a crowbar; a cradle to a road wagon, or a gunny sack to a silk dress—anything that man may want, in any measure or quantity, except whisky; that he must take by the jugful, or none. It would require a fine accountant to determine which are the most numerous on the streets—mules for sale or drummers to sell. Where the mules go to and the drummers come from has been to me one of Dr. Morton's wonders; when, as you may remember, he lifted the preachers of the Louisiana Conference at Mansfield to the tune of five hundred dollars for church extension by his "wonder-struck" speech; then prayed for Dr. Young, who had to take a missionary collection the next night; then left before daylight for fear the Louisiana Conference would move to reconsider.

I believe that it was Fanny Fern who said "that the way to a man's heart was down his throat;" and if that be so, Ruston is a most wonderful place, for your correspondent this day was most royally feasted at the board of our live editor; and the nicest dish among all the nice dishes was canned peaches—the output of the Ruston Canning Factory. A blind man would have thought by the taste the peach had just reached perfection and loosened its hold upon the parent stem. The intention of this company for the coming season is to enlarge its capacity, so as to preserve all kinds of vegetables; and to this end truck gardens will be one of the investments of the farmers.

While this people have been mindful of the physical man and his comfort, they have in no sense been regardless of the intellectual and spiritual needs. There is located in this Hill City one of the most successful colleges in the State, under the management of Prof. Sleigh and his accomplished wife, aided by a corps of twelve competent professors. In the halls of this Institute are daily gathered two hundred and eighty-seven pupils—male and female; in which there is a most healthy emulation between the sexes, and each seems to vie with the other as to who shall hold the best and highest standing in studies, art and music. Mrs. Sleigh, the vice-president of this school, is one of those remarkable women that have been the product of this generation. In kitchen, parlor or study-hall she is equally at her ease, and seems for the time in either of the three "the eight person in the eighth place." She can take rank with a Willard, Hunt or Chapin; for while they are doing noble work for men and women, she is doing a nobler in training the children and youth in paths of "wisdom, knowledge and truth." So much for the intellectual and temporal.

The religious and spiritual interests of this community are not at all behind in the race of progress and development. Two handsome churches beautify our embryo city—the one Baptist, and the other Methodist. The Presbyterians will build in the fall, and the Catholic, it is said, will soon follow. We (the Methodist) are at present the strongest, both in numbers and finance. Our first quarterly meeting was held on March 30 and 31. It was an old-fashioned quarterly meeting—preaching on Saturday, eleven A. M.; Conference at three o'clock P. M.; and preaching again at night; love-feast on Sunday, nine A. M.; service and communion at eleven; missionary meeting at three P. M., with preaching at night. The reports from the pastor were all up to date. Fourteen accessions for the quarter; five infant baptisms. The presiding elder paid his first quarter in full; the pastor in charge, ditto. Somehow, Mr. Editor, that presiding elder and preacher left the Conference with smiling faces. Can you divine the reason? Then, too, on Sunday morning the elder preached like he had something to back him; the preacher in charge listened, for he had something to sustain him; and the people could not flag in interest, for they had done their duty. Mr. Editor, there was one man at that Conference and in that Sunday morning congregation who was even happier and more smiling than either the elder or the preacher, and that man was Bro. Rinehart, from the Douglas Church. This brother is a model steward. When he came to Conference, he was not only up on first quarter, but something ahead. And the way he did sing, "I am bound for the promised land," on Sunday, at love-feast, would have given you an inspiration for the next Wednesday's leader. Let all stewards take notice and "govern themselves accordingly"—that is, if they want to sing.

T. K. F.

OKOLONA STATION, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: Our second quarterly meeting for this pastoral charge embraced Saturday and Sunday, March 23 and 24. Rev. Amos Kendall, our presiding elder, who is in reputation for punctuality, among many other virtues, was on hand, and attended well to all the duties of his office. The occasion was one of delightful Christian fellowship, religious privilege and spiritual edification. We had an informal service on Friday night; talks by the pastor and presiding elder. It was intended as a prelude and preparatory to the regular services of the quarterly meeting. Bro. Kendall preached on Saturday at eleven, held Quarterly Conference on Saturday night, preached again at eleven on Sunday, and conducted the love-feast on Sunday afternoon. By request of the presiding elder, the pastor occupied the pulpit Sunday night. The stewards made a good report, emphasizing specially "the eighth question," bringing the finances well up to time. Nine members were reported as received by certificate. Some of them are valuable accessions, bringing increase of strength and influence to the church.

Bro. Kendall is an able minister of the gospel, of easy address and impressive style in the pulpit. He served his probation, as a young preacher, near the fountain-head of Methodism, in England, his native land. He uses well the Anglo-Saxon tongue, and speaks it plainly, calling things by their names. Out of the pulpit he has fine social qualities, and with his excellent wife he makes friends wherever he goes.

The former pastor, Rev. John Ritchey, left behind him many friends, and his name is often spoken in kindly mention by outsiders, as well as by his own brethren.

Methodism is growing, and the outlook is cheering in Okolona. A good brother, who is active in all the departments of church service, said to me not long since: "There seems to be a strong under-current of revival spirit."

Worthy of special mention is an excellent working element among our good women, who take an active part in the Sunday-school, woman's prayer meeting, missionary society, and Parsonage Aid Society. Bless the good women of the church! They don't know how much encouragement and help they give to the pastor. Our Lord will reward them in that day. They are working in good earnest for a parsonage in Okolona, and we expect to build or buy one before the close of the Conference year. And then may the preachers of the North Mississippi Conference turn their wistful eyes to this pastoral charge, as the gem of the prairies.

RED RIVER, LA.

MR. EDITOR: I am glad to be able to write encouragingly about my circuit. Church enterprises have been carried forward with energy and crowned with success. Some three weeks ago our church at Campo Bello was begun, and last Sunday, April 7, it was thrown open for services. The old church was demolished by a wind storm, last October; the new one now stands, cozy and attractive, on the same site. Mrs. A. M. Hutchinson, who has led this good work from beginning to end, has set a fine example to the host of other lady members in our church. After arriving on Red River, I made three different pastoral visits to this good sister's house, and she was absent on the church business every time! Verily, were all our church women as zealous, what success would crown the work!

The rebuilt church has cost $319, and is a model country church. The old organ, though badly knocked to pieces, has been put together, and sweet music again pealed forth from it last Sunday. Our parsonage, too, is well in hand. The lumber was to have been ordered yesterday, April 8. Mrs. J. J. Atkins and Mrs. T. B. Moss, of Knox Point, are busily engaged in securing the remaining funds necessary for the erection of the parsonage. It is to cost $450. Thus the church, parsonage, grounds, etc., will be worth over $1,000. Yet the membership there is only six. Outside friends have been indeed, liberal.

Elsewhere on the work matters are encouraging. Our Sunday-school at Ash Point numbers about forty pupils and teachers. Another Sunday-school was to be reorganized last Sunday at Knox Point. Our first quarterly meeting, at Lindsley Chapel, March 30 and 31, was well attended. Brother Cassity preached on Sunday with power, and many came forward for prayer. We felt the Spirit was with us.

With regard to my new appointment at Ash Point, I am very hopeful. A building fund for a church at this place is on foot. Miss E. M. Platt has kindly consented to be secretary and treasurer of the fund, and she will "push things" in securing money for a church.

Our church in the hills—Bossier Point—shows up with twenty members, and a neat, though unfinished church building. The outlook there is promising. With the help of God we expect a good year's work.

G. E. GREESE.

WAYNESBORO AND STATE LINE.

MR. EDITOR: I have just closed a very successful revival meeting at State Line. The meeting lasted about ten days, and increased in interest and power each day. Truly the Lord was with us in wonderful grace and power. Sinners were awakened and converted; backsliders, hoary with age and sin, were reclaimed, and the church graciously revived and filled with the spirit of rejoicing. There were five substantial additions to the membership, with others to follow soon. In addition to the regular prayer meeting, a young men's prayer meeting will be held every Wednesday night; and I trust a ladies' prayer meeting also will be held every Thursday evening. The ladies have begun work in earnest; they are taking steps toward repainting and beautifying the church. Every heart thrilled with joy and every tongue sing praise to the Lord. To God be all the glory and honor and praise.

To Rev. W. B. Hines, of Blunsville, Mississippi Conference, who was with us most of the time, we are unduly indebted, so far as human agency is concerned, for this glorious work. Bro. Hines is a preacher of great earnestness and power. His words were burning words; they went like arrows from the quiver of truth, piercing the hardest hearts. Although passed his seventieth summer, he is as active and vigorous, physically and mentally, as he was many years ago. Truly Bro. Hines is a "chosen workman, a vessel fitted for the Master's use." May God bless and preserve him many years yet to the church, for he is eminently useful and qualified.

By way of parenthesis, I would say this charge is now enjoying prosperity all along the line. Our second Quarterly Conference was held recently, which showed up encouragingly. Finances all up to date.

Our much-esteemed presiding elder, Rev. R. D. Norsworthy, was with us in the spirit of the Master. He gave us two most excellent, soul-reviving sermons, and encouraged and strengthened us greatly. He is a faithful, diligent presiding elder, always keeping an eye single to the good of the church and the pastor.

Sunday-School Lesson.

(Hurlburt and Simpson's Lesson Commentary, Phillips & Hunt, New York.)

LESSON V.—May 5.

THE COMMAND TO WATCH.

Mark xiii, 24-37.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Take ye heed, watch and pray: for ye know not when the time is.—Mark xiii, 33.

TIME.—A. D. 29. Tuesday afternoon [before the crucifixion.

PLACE.—The Mount of Olives.

PARALLEL PASSAGES.—Matt. xxiv, 23-51; Luke xvii, 22-37.

24. But in those days, after that tribulation—This language is inconsistent with the idea that the judgment immediately succeeds the tribulation of Jerusalem's downfall. The judgment is broadly described as being in those days after the Jerusalem tribulation. The those days of Mark may, by perspective, be made to cover the entire time of the dispersion, as described by Luke. The sun shall be darkened—Two of those then listening to the Lord have themselves described the signs of the physical world which are to usher in the end. St. Peter, in his second epistle, iii, 1-13; and St. John, in Revelation xx, 21. These phenomena are visible previous to the coming of the Judge, which is described in the next verse. As that great event is to be attended by the conflagration and renovation of the earth, so the organic convulsions and exhalations of the globe will darken the skies.

25. The powers that are in heaven shall be shaken—By some understood to mean the heavenly host (or forces), an expression applied elsewhere both to the heavenly bodies and the angels. Others, with less probability, attach to it the abstract sense of physical forces, or the powers of nature; those mysterious influences by which the celestial motions and phenomena are caused and regulated. The essential sense, upon either of these suppositions, still remains the same; namely, that a total change in the appearance of the heavens.

26. The Son of man coming in the clouds—The sign of the Son of man is some other than the presence of the Son of man himself coming in the clouds of heaven, in the ineffable glory of his majesty. And here, too, we must remember that we are still in the region of apocalyptic symbols. All such imagery falls short of the ultimate reality, and a "sign from heaven" is something more than a visible appearance of the sky.

27. Send his angels—It is likely enough that a certain number of angels may be called peculiarly the angels of Christ, although all are subject to him. Gather together his elect—Separately, in a glorious resurrection order, both living and dead, at Christ's right hand. Afterward the wicked are in like manner taken, perhaps, by evil angels, to the left of the Judge. From the four winds—That is, from the four quarters of the globe: east, west, north and south. The Jews expressed those quarters by the winds blowing from them. From the uttermost part—Probably an allusion to the apparent junction of earth and sky at the visible horizon, but in any case it refers to the whole world.

28. The fig tree—Our Lord spoke this on the Mount of Olives where fig trees were growing all around him. It was near to Bethphage (or Figville), so called, probably, from the abundance of this product. It was now about the twenty-third of March, and though the time of figs was not yet, the trees were doubtless beginning to verify the words by opening signs of the season. Summer is near—When the juices return from the roots into the branches, and the buds swell and burst, as if tender, and too feeble to sustain the pressing and expanding leaves. When you see that, you judge that spring and summer are near.

29. In like manner—If in so humble an example as the fig tree you discern the nearness of a season, much rather should you in these sure and awful signs discern the approach of the end.

30. This generation shall not pass—These words were spoken on the 30th year of the Dionysian Era, and it was A. D. 70 that they came to pass. It does not mean to exclude here the reference to the judgment, but to say that the destruction of Jerusalem would be such as to make appropriate the words of the prediction, were there nothing beyond. So when death was threatened to Adam, the propriety of the threatening would have been, and the threatening would have been fulfilled, had men suffered only spiritual death. At the same time the threatening had a fullness of meaning, that would cover also, and justify, eternal death in hell. Thus the words of Christ, describing the destruction of Jerusalem, had a fullness of signification that would meet also the events of the judgment, and whose meaning would not be filled up till the world was closed. The generation which has these signs under observation. Had the generation of that time been meant, then the end of time, at least, could have been specified; while Christ says, on the contrary, the day and the hour knoweth no man.

31. My words shall not pass away—That is, the predictions of the catastrophe so early as in that generation. Not only would the temple, Jerusalem, the Jewish State, pass away, but heaven and earth would pass rather than his prediction fail.

32. Of that day and that hour knoweth no man—It is the clear purpose of this verse to affirm that the judgment day is unknown to any being below God the Father Almighty. Neither the Son—This is a most important text to prove that mere humanity of the Son of man. The humanity was neither infinite nor omniscient. In his childhood he grew in stature and wisdom; at his temptation he struggled with the deceptions of a crafty adversary; at his agony his soul was exceedingly sorrowful, and while he knows not the day or the hour of his own second coming. As his human soul was not omniscient, so there were facts to it unknown. His voluntarily not knowing the day of judgment, during the days of his flesh, is a warning against chronological curiosity and the fanatical calculations in the exposition of Scripture prophecy.

33. Watch and pray—To watch denotes, (1) to be sleepless; (2) to be vigilant. The two great duties which in prospect of trial are constantly enjoined. The attitude of the Christian watcher is not that of fear and dread, as though Christ's coming was one of danger and calamity. Ye know not when the time is. It is the obedience of faith neither to postpone the second advent to a distant future, nor to say that it has actually come.

34. Left his house—The Christian Church is here compared to a great house or palace left for a time by its Lord and Master, the Son of man. He left his church at his ascension, and he will return again to take account of it at the general judgment in the end of the world. He came at the same time to every individual at his death. Gave authority ... to every man his work—As each member of the body has its own office, so has each servant of the household his separate work. The eye can not act for the ear, nor the foot for the hand; so can no servant do the work of another. There is work enough for all, and each has his own. It is for one area that we are responsible, and for no more. Commanded the porter—Contemplating them with reference to the church this side of eternity, the porters are, of course, the apostles (and ministers) of Christ, together with the body of Christians. To watch—He should both keep awake and guard the house, as well as be in readiness to re-admit his master, should he unexpectedly return.

35. Watch ye therefore—For the individual, death is the virtual coming of the Son of man. Not that the coming of the Son of man here is death, nor truly to be identified with death; but the being on the watch for judgment is pressed instead of the being on the watch for death, inasmuch as death is nothing but a passage to judgment. If a man live in preparation of judgment, he is in preparation for death. At even, ... midnight, ... cock-crowing, ... morning—The four watches here mentioned are those into which the Jews, after the Roman supremacy, and following the Romans, divided the night. The first, or evening, lasted till 9 P. M.; the second till midnight; the third till the early cock-crowing, or 3 A. M.; the fourth till about sunrise, or 6 A. M. The language here is somewhat indefinite, but it is that of the common people. In the temple the priest whose duty it was to superintend the night sentinels of the Levitical guard might at any moment knock at the door and demand entrance.

36. Lest coming suddenly he find you sleeping—During the night the captain of the temple made his rounds. On his approach the guards had to rise and salute him in a particular manner. Any guard found asleep when on duty was beaten, or his garments were set on fire—a punishment, as we know, actually awarded.

37. I say unto all—Who do not hear me. For they were representative men. Through them our Savior addressed all ages. His words speak to the congregated church, to you, reader, and to me—Watch. Divine truths are like a well-drawn picture, which looks particularly upon every one among the great multitude that look at it. It is great folly for a man to live in such a state as he would not dare to die in.

houses were burned down or looted. The riot grew out of a difficulty between the police and some of the natives. Two foreign gunboats and a company of Chinese soldiers were quickly sent to the scene of the disturbance, and quiet was restored. No lives were lost.

There is a hitch in the scheme of building the railroad from Tientsin to Peking, and the work has been stopped for the present. Several high officials in Peking are opposed to it, and it may be seriously hindered, if not indefinitely postponed. There are some indications that the Emperor, who took over the reins of government on the 14th of February, is largely under the influence of reactionary counsellors, and hence that the introduction of various foreign innovations may be greatly delayed. But God rules, and though railroads, mining, etc., be delayed, the gospel is making its way, and will triumph.

The Emperor's marriage was to have taken place last Tuesday, February 26, and general rejoicing throughout the country will be the order of the day for some time to come, though the calamities that are afflicting the country will throw a damper on the joy of both officials and people.

I have already sent a notice of the marriage of Rev. W. B. Burke, of our mission at Sungkiang, to Miss Addie E. Gordon, of Suchow. The wedding took place at the house of the undersigned at Suchow, in the presence of a number of friends, native and foreign, including Gen. J. H. Kennedy, United States Consul-General at Shanghai. It was a very pleasant occasion, and everyone seemed to think that it was according to the eternal fitness of things that thus it should be. The bridal couple left the same evening for Sungkiang. Our sincerest prayers and good wishes go with them. Mrs. Burke will find an extended field of usefulness in Sungkiang. She is the first foreign missionary lady to go to that city to live and work. She can and will do as effective work, though in a different way, for the heathen women in her new relation as before. The Woman's Board, so far from objecting to her transfer, may rejoice in the part they have had in establishing a Christian missionary home in the city of Sungkiang, and inaugurating the work among the women of that city.

Three of our boys, from Buffington Institute, have determined to give themselves to the work of preaching the gospel. Bro. Anderson and I have formed them into a class to teach and train for the work; they giving part of their time to study and part to preaching and distributing books. The Lord pour his Spirit upon them!

Letter from China.

Widespread famine prevails in several parts of China; even more calamitous than that of 1877. Foreigners and natives have been raising money and soliciting contributions in China, England and America for the relief of the famine-stricken people. Missionaries and natives are engaged in the distribution of the funds. A telegram from the English Baptist Mission, in the province of Shangkiang, says that all mission work has been suspended and the missionaries are all engaged in the distribution of famine relief. More than $150,000 has thus far been raised by foreigners and sent to the relief of the famine districts, and large sums will yet be needed before the next crops are gathered. The breach in the Yellow river has been reported closed, though some doubt is entertained as to the actual state of affairs there.

A riot occurred in Chinkiang in the early part of February, in which the British Consulate, three or four mission houses and some other foreign

What is Scrofula

It is that impurity in the blood, which, accumulating in the glands of the neck, produces unsightly lumps or swellings; which causes painful running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which develops ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or many other manifestations usually ascribed to "humors." It is a more formidable enemy than consumption or cancer alone, for scrofula combines the worst possible features of both. Being the most ancient, it is the most general of all diseases or affections, for very few persons are entirely free from it.

How can it be cured? By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the cures it has accomplished, often when other medicines have failed, has proved itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. For all affections of the blood Hood's Sarsaparilla is unequalled, and some of the cures it has effected are really wonderful. If you suffer from scrofula in any of its various forms, be sure to give Hood's Sarsaparilla a trial.

From an exchange:

Postmaster-General Wanamaker has determined to effect one greatly needed reform. There is a provision in the United States Revised Statutes which forbids that any postoffice should be established in any room in which liquor is sold, or in any room from which there is an entrance into a room in which liquor is sold; but for some time this very salutary regulation has been overlooked, and in a great many country places postoffices have been established in taverns, bar-rooms and groceries which really are groggeries. When it is remembered that the average country postoffice is a place of universal and necessary resort—frequented by ladies and children and by pliable youths as well as by grown men—it is easy to see how disagreeable to some and injurious to others must be the reception and delivery of letters in a saloon atmosphere. If the enforcement of a law terminating this practice in thousands of rural hamlets is a specimen of "Sunday-school politics," by all means let us have more of it.

The Book Editor furnishes the following figures:

Number of traveling preachers, 4,684—increase, 154; local preachers, 6,309—increase, 117; white members, 1,123,498—increase, 32,753; colored members, 644—decrease, 105; Indian members, 4,958—decrease, 288; total preachers and members, 1,140,093—net increase, 32,537; infant baptisms, 31,052—decrease, 1,581; adult baptisms, 53,363—decrease, 5,150; collected for church extension, $51,341 59—increase, $4,278 08; for Conference claimants, $116,713 63—increase, $14,591 47; for foreign missions, $225,852 16—increase, $6,207; for domestic missions, $104,473 31—increase, $12,046 75; total for foreign and domestic missions, $330,325 47—total increase, $18,253 56.

The London Methodist Times thus it this way: "Please write briefly and send your communications promptly; let everything be short and smart."

The Christian Woman's Exchange.

We had the pleasure of looking through this noble institution a few days ago, from kitchen to garret. The splendid building, facing Lafayette Square to the north, is well equipped from top to bottom with every appliance and convenience for the comfort and well-being of its patrons. There are waterworks on three floors to supply all demands in that direction, and Zimdar's patent air bells on every floor, and a telephone for the use of consignors and patrons. The rooms are all newly and handsomely furnished in modern style. The building contains forty-eight rooms, consisting of parlor, committee-room, sales-rooms, library, dressing-room, lunch-room, serving-room, kitchen, and twenty six-hed-rooms, with twelve rooms in the attic. The dressing-room has been fitted up especially for the comfort of ladies coming to the city for a day, where for a trifling sum they can leave their valises and packages for safe keeping.

The library is a popular branch of the establishment, affording good reading to a large number of persons. The number of volumes, we are informed, is about 3,500. The sales department occupies three rooms, and the display of articles on sale is very fine. This department offers special advantages to women who have quick wits to contrive and deft fingers to manufacture articles to gratify the tastes of all who may visit the rooms. The lunch department is elegantly equipped, and the table supplied with the best that can be had. Breakfast, luncheon and dinner can be had of the first quality, and at reasonable rates.

Besides supplying the wants of patrons in the matters of meals and lodging, this institution is managed in the interests of poor women, many of them being employed in various duties in the establishment, and many more, placing the product of their own hands in the sales-rooms, reap a good investment on their toil.

Altogether, this is a valuable institution to our community. We say to our sisters in the country: When you come to town, send your husbands and brothers and sweethearts to the hotels, and take up your lodging at the Christian Woman's Exchange, where you will find quiet, comfort and elegant entertainment.

Two Trips to Memphis, and Reflections Thereon.

I have been to Memphis, Tenn., twice of late to attend two different meetings in two different churches—Hernando Street and Central Methodist Churches. Rev. J. M. Spence is pastor of the first named, and he was assisted in his meeting by Rev. J. M. Bowen, of the North Mississippi Conference. Bro. Bowen is a man of evangelistic gifts. His ministry, as evangelist and as pastor, has been eminently successful. He is the most hopeful man I ever saw. He preaches a gospel of encouragement from first to last. I have never heard him whine or abuse the church and ministry at any time or in anything. He pats the oxen on their heads, speaks kindly to them, and encourages them till they get ashamed of themselves and pull like five hundred. Bro. Bowen sees everything in roseate, rainbow colors. Every meeting is a good one. A revival is always imminent. His enthusiasm acts like contagion. It spreads itself over the whole assembly. He sees no difficulties, and will not hear of any from anyone else. The Lord is going to do great things, whereof he is glad; and in this faith he lays to and works like a Trojan both day and night. Bowen is an optimist of the optimists. He never belittles or ignores the pastor; never puts himself between the pastor and his people; never assumes pastoral functions in meetings outside of his own charge. This shows his good sense and the high plane of his religious experience. It would be well if it were so in every case. They had a good meeting at Hernando Street, but not as good as the pastor and Bro. Bowen hoped for. However, Bro. Bowen's ideal of a meeting is very high—every soul saved in a given circle, and the circle widening like a prairie on fire.

Rev. R. W. Erwin is pastor of Central Church, and he was assisted by Rev. G. G. Smith, of Georgia, the very numerous correspondent to the Southern Methodist press, and the author of so many good books. This meeting was a special one for the children and young people. Frivolity and such diversions as can not be used in the name of Christ run at high-tide in Memphis; so the pastors report. One minister in the city had gone so far as to champion the dance and theater-going. Bro. Smith is a specialist in the children's and young people's 'work,' and gifted in exorcising devils of the kind that vex the saints in Memphis. I went up to see him and study his methods of work to see if I could improve my own. It is in this as it will be in the resurrection of the last day—"Every man in his own order." Some have one gift, and some another. I could not plow with the heifer of either of these men if I were to try. I shall cling to my sling and a few small stones. My individuality and personality is an essential factor in my ministry, and, for me, the best factor, if only thoroughly sanctified by grace. It took me less than half of my first year to learn that I could not be some other man; could not successfully imitate any other. Bro. Smith is as voluminous as a talker as he is a writer. He does both rapidly and well. When his flood-gate is once opened, small fish had just as well resign themselves to drift with the current. To stem the tide is impossible. He talks right on over all obstacles. One may hear without obtaining a hearing in his presence. I had held back, till by the time he fell to sleep at eleven P. M. I was ready to pop open for a chance to talk some myself. He closed his lips and eyes at the same time, and then I put in an hour in good style. Bro. Smith was not much edified, but I was relieved, and slept sweetly till sunrise next morning. Bro. Smith's preaching is after his own order, and not according to the rules laid down in any of the books I have seen. He gets there all the same. He understands the philosophy of hand-shaking better than anyone I have ever known. He took time before every service, while I was with him, to go round and shake hands with every child and young person in the house. He had a gentle, tender word about personal salvation for each. The pathetic, the tender prevails in his ministry. The touches of humor were refined, and few and far between—a sort of condiment sandwiched in between more solemn and serious things. Of all the men with gifts suited to work among the children, Bro. Smith has the tenderest and the best. Under his ministry the children bowed their heads, dropping tears, like the dew falling from bearded wheat before a gentle wind. My own eyes were misty and my heart beating fast while he preached the Word of God in demonstration of the Spirit and of power. Little Stanley Erwin, the pastor's son, still in short dresses, and lisping baby talk, came forward to join the church; and Bro. Smith examined him, as to his faith in and knowledge of Christ, before the congregation, and his answers would have shamed many hundreds of grown people I know. Some lions, fierce with the rage of sin, had a little child to lead them that day. Hardly anything I ever saw got so close to me as that scene. Samuel was called to be a prophet of the living God at four; and why not Stanley Erwin at near the same age? Our Lord, himself, at the age of twelve astounded the doctors of the law in the temple by the questions he asked and the answers he gave. Why should it be thought a thing incredible with us that Christ should find saving entrance into the hearts of the youngest children? Is he limited to knocking and forbidden entrance until their hearts are barred and locked by the bolts of sin? Nay, verily. "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not."

Last, but not least, a toning up among the young people in Memphis on the matter of sinful diversions means improvement in my own charge. Memphis and the Memphians set the tune for nearly everything down this way, and, largely, for a hundred or two miles in all directions. What Memphis is and what they do in Memphis, the people in a wide circle of country will be and do. Memphis may be the center of heavenly influences or the seat of moral contagion and corruption to a large part of Mississippi, Tennessee and Arkansas, and in the regions beyond. The importance of evangelizing great centers of trade never struck me so forcibly as now. I never before lived in the shadow of a large city; and shadow it is in this case. There is sunshine in the city, but the rays are so few and feeble that the "shades" shut them nearly all out at this distance—thirty-seven miles. The Christian people of this great Nation need to rise up as one man, and concentrate their prayers, their efforts, their men and their money upon the rapidly increasing centers of trade in our midst. We can not let these centers go quickly down to hell, for they will carry the country with them. I see now, as I never saw before, why the Spirit sent Paul and other apostles evangelizing in the cities. The evil of the city is manifest and open every day, and meets the visitor at the gate. The good—and much good there is—is hidden away in corners and on back streets and out-of-the-way places, until the careless or casual observer would think the devil had it all his own way, and would begin at once, as too many do, to drift with the tide to the house of dancing and revelry and debauch. Oh, for the means and the courage to have, at any cost, a footing, a large and eligible possession, on every Mars' Hill in every city in this wide land! Right where the unknown god is worshiped, where God is most unknown, there we ought to combine our forces.

GILDEROY.

The Mississippi W. C. T. U.

The above convention met in annual session at Crystal Springs, Miss., April 18, and adjourned the twenty-second. The center of its attraction was Miss Frances E. Willard, president of the World's W. C. T. U.; Miss Anna Gordon, superintendent of juvenile work, and Mrs. Mary Read Goodale, of Louisiana, superintendent of the Southern work of the National W. C. T. U. These and the Revs. H. R. Singleton and Mason, of Crystal Springs; also Revs. J. B. and J. H. Gambrell, of Meridian; Mr. and Mrs. Henry Ware, of Pass Christian; Rev. W. C. Black, of Jackson, Miss., and the representative of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE were made honorary members.

The spirit of Christ prevailed. In its deliberations one aim controlled its actions—the glory of God in saving man from drunkenness. All the sittings of this body of noble Christian women were opened and closed with devotional exercises, and each part of its large and important work pressed steadily to result-ful decision.

Important addresses were made by Miss Willard, Mrs. President Mount, Mrs. Vice-President Snell, Mrs. Goodale, Miss Anna Gordon, Mrs. Kerr (wife of a Presbyterian minister), Mrs. Kells, editor of The White Ribboner; Mrs. M. S. Middleton, of Crystal Springs; Miss Parnel, president of Christian Woman's Exchange, of Meridian.

A beautiful tribute of sisterly appreciation was telegraphed Miss Frances E. Willard's mother, while the wires carried expressions of condolence and regret to Mrs. Irwin, of Columbus, Miss., the former and highly appreciated president of the Mississippi W. C. T. U.

W. C. T. U. work for and with colored people occupied the attention of the convention four hours. The discussions brought, in varying features, the efforts, defeat, discouragement and encouragement met with by the numerous unions laboring in this difficult line.

At the close of the discussions a resolution was unanimously adopted that a colored woman lecturer, of the right kind, be employed by the Mississippi W. C. T. U. for the purpose of organizing this auxiliary work among the colored women of the State. So important was this deemed by Miss Willard, that she pledged liberal financial support from Northern friends for the maintenance of such a lecturer.

The Mississippi White Ribbon, the organ of this convention, was unanimously endorsed, and Mrs. Kells, its editress, highly complimented as a journalist ranking as high as any of her sex in the land. In order to widen the influential reach of this paper, it was decided to change its name to The White Ribboner, and to seek the patronage of the Prohibition party in all the Southern States. A plan was put on foot to establish it on a good financial basis.

The report of the auditor, Mrs. Hillman, showed that over $2,000 had been expended by the W. C. T. U., of Mississippi, during the past year.

A novel incident—the first of its kind, we believe, in the woman's work—was the greeting by the following gentlemen, prohibitionists, composing the City Council of Crystal Springs: C. A. Head, mayor; W. C. Wilkinson, B. S. Terrell, T. M. Eagan, W. T. Smith and J. Marlow.

The critical event of the convention—one which threatened its perpetuity—grew out of a resolution, favored by 18 of a committee of 24 which would have placed the Mississippi W. C. T. U. abreast of the most advanced third-party movement of the United States; but after able, calm, earnest addresses on both sides of the question, Miss Willard, with masterly wisdom, bound together the hearts and purposes of the entire delegation by the unanimous adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That we, as Christian women, can not lend our influence to any party which refuses to place a prohibition plank in its platform.

Mrs. Snell and Mrs. Kerr, respective representatives of both phases of this question, were selected to prepare and present a memorial, embracing this resolution, to the next Mississippi Democratic Convention.

Mrs. Kells, superintendent of scientific instruction, whose encouraging report showed how rapidly Mississippi is advancing in this branch of temperance work, was greatly enjoyed. Mrs. Kells was requested to present in person to the next Legislature of Mississippi a memorial that the bill entitled, "Scientific Instruction," which was vetoed by the governor, be re-enacted, and thus compulsory scientific instruction be secured for the children of Mississippi.

The hospitalities of the good people of this sober, quiet, clean prohibition city, Crystal Springs, knew no bounds, and the pleasant Christian friendship began, cemented and fostered by this convention, like all of God's gifts, will continue to distill sweetness and delight both in the present and the eternal hereafter.

H. L. M.

"It were better to sing nothing else than the Psalms than to encourage the introduction into congregations of hymn-books, born not of spiritual feeling, but of pecuniary greed. Especially is it unfortunate that the children in our Sunday-schools are taught bad taste in music, bad morals and worse doctrine by what they sing. The full effect of this mistake has not yet appeared." We found the above in a Commentary published twenty years ago, and we are beginning to see the "full effect" of which it speaks.

If you are a Sunday-school teacher this is for you. An exchange says:

How many Sunday-school teachers are in the habit of making their pupils the objects of special prayer? No one occupying this important position, who fully realizes his responsibility and opportunity, will neglect this invaluable ally in his work. To go from one's knees to the class means often the difference between a half-hour of dull, mechanical instruction, and one in which both the teacher and scholars are alert mentally, and profited spiritually.

Personal and Otherwise.

Hon. T. Marshall Miller, attorney general of Mississippi, is to deliver the annual address at Whitworth College, Tuesday, June 11.

Rev. Dr. Fitzgerald, editor of the Nashville Christian Advocate, will preach the commencement sermon at Whitworth College, Sunday, June 9, at eleven A. M. The editor of this paper will preach the sermon at half-past seven P. M., same day.

The seventy-fifth anniversary of the American Baptist Missionary Union will be held in Boston, May 15.

The Southern Baptist Convention meets in Memphis, Tenn., May 10.

Isaac Pitman, inventor of a short-hand system, although past seventy-six years of age, begins work at six A. M. and does not stop till 6 P. M. So says an exchange.

A son of Gen. Sherman is to be ordained a priest in the Catholic Church in Philadelphia, next July.

A private note from Bro. Faunt Le-Roy, Ruston, La., gives the gratifying information that his health has much improved since his return to North Louisiana. He represents his work as most encouraging.

The price of Lossing's "Hours with Living Men and Women" (New York: Funk & Wagnalls), announced in these columns last week, is $1 50, instead of $2.

We know exactly what the Arkansas Methodist means by this:

A gentleman sends a communication of four pages, written on both sides of the paper, saying "re-write this," etc., "and publish it and I will write you some more pieces!" With thanks for his kind offer, we do not need them now, and besides have not time to re-write them.

Edward Mayes, H. H. Estes, R. P. Lake and M. G. Dubard are the lay delegates to the North Mississippi Conference from the Grenada district. J. W. Wells and G. P. Lake are the alternates.

A writer, J. B. L., in Richmond Advocate, says that Col. G. W. Carter, who figured here so conspicuously during reconstruction days, is lecturing in Virginia on Temperance under the auspices of the Good Templars. The writer says, "He is a reclaimed man and an humble Christian, and comes back to the church of his early love."

Our Sunday-school literature for May is on hand—bright and beautiful and instructive.

Rev. Luke Tyerman, the distinguished English Wesleyan biographical writer, died in March. He wrote the great work, "Life and Times of John Wesley."

Bro. Kirkland, of the Southern Christian Advocate, has had a serious time for several weeks. He and all his family have been sick. We are glad to note that at last accounts all were improving.

A writer in one of our exchanges begins his article with this sentence: "The call to write a newspaper article is possibly much like the call to preach—a certain 'woe is me' conviction must possess the mind before attempting either."

One of our preachers writes, "I have enjoyed and felt very much benefited by your editorials this year." That's what we write for, and are grateful for success.

Dr. J. B. Walker has been indisposed for several weeks, being unable to attend to his regular work. We trust he will soon be restored to his usual health.

The Twelfth Anniversary of the Seaman's Bethel will be celebrated next Sunday at 4:30 P. M. Rev. Dr. Snively, of the Episcopal Church, will deliver the annual address.

Rev. Dr. Milburn, "the blind man eloquent," preached an able sermon to a large and appreciative audience last Sunday morning at Rayne Memorial, and at night to a crowded house at Moreau Street. Both these churches had an enjoyable feast of fat things. Dr. Milburn left Tuesday for Texas on a lecturing tour.

A brother, renewing his subscription, sends the following:

Of papers to evangelize,
And better man's low state,
We all can warmly recommend
The CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Postal Card Reports.

—Rev. I. W. Cooper, writing from Edwards, Miss., April 15, 1889, says: "There are twenty-seven sons of ministers members of the North Mississippi Conference, and three members who are grandsons of ministers, and eleven members who married daughters or grand-daughters of ministers."

—Rev. B. F. Jones writes from Woodville, Miss., April 18: "My work is moving on smoothly. Congregations good and attentive. Hope to forward all my foreign missionary money in a short time. Our new presiding elder has adjusted himself to the official harness and is making a good impression. The people like him. Hope to see you at the District Conference, May 16."

—Rev. O. L. Savage writes from Shaw, Miss., April 15, 1889: "Falsonia and New Salem is in good condition. The people all seem to be hopeful. My first Quarterly Conference was a very pleasant and profitable occasion. Rev. R. M. Standifer was very much himself; preached to the delight and edification of all. We look forward with pleasure to his coming again. Think he will do the people good. Some signs of progress in spiritual things. We are working and looking for a Pentecost."

—Rev. R. M. Blocker writes from Rayne, La., June 22: "Our Easter services yesterday were a success. At Crowley service was held in our new church; congregation the largest that ever worshiped in that town. One child baptized and five persons received into the church. At Roberts' Cove, in the afternoon, the congregation was large; fourteen children baptized and two persons received into the church. At Rayne, at night, we had a full house and good service. Thank the Lord!"

—Rev. H. M. Banks writes from Sugartown, La.: "Since last report I have received one into the church; organized two Sunday-schools, and taken two subscriptions for the ADVOCATE, and I think others will join soon."

A Reunion.

There will be a reunion at Edwards, Miss., May 28-30, of the Mississippi Conference class, ordained deacons in December, 1878. The following are members of the class, viz: Revs. J. P. Drake, B. S. Raynor, W. W. Simmons, C. A. Powell, J. W. Cooper, T. C. Bradford and B. F. Jones.

At the session of the Mississippi Conference, held in Vicksburg, last December, the class effected a permanent organization with B. S. Raynor, chairman, and B. F. Jones, secretary. It was resolved to have annual reunions, to be held at such a time and place as may be decided upon at each Annual Conference. The object of these reunions is, for both the literary and theological edification of the class. At these meetings each member is expected to read a paper on some one of the live questions of the day. As it was resolved to ask the ADVOCATE to publish the subjects of the papers to be read at the approaching reunion, I hereto append them, viz:

B. S. Raynor, "Arminianism vs. Calvinism;" J. P. Drake, "The Proper Attitude of the Church to the Temperance Cause;" W. W. Simmons, "Influence;" J. W. Cooper, "How the Church of Christ Can Reach the Masses;" C. A. Powell, "The Relation of Methodism to Temperance." The secretary may have something to say of "Methodism and Missions."

Bro. T. C. Bradford is now in the Indian Territory, and we regret he will not be with us. However, we hope to hear from him. Bro. A. F. Watkins has accepted an invitation to participate in the exercises, and will read a paper on, "A Glance at the Perils and Duties of Southern Methodism."

We would be glad if the editor and publisher of the ADVOCATE would delight us with their presence.

Yours cordially,

B. F. JONES, Secretary.

The annual meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society of North Mississippi Conference will be held in Greenville, Miss., Thursday, June 6.

A preliminary meeting will be held at ten A. M., and it is very desirable that all officers and members be present at this meeting. Let all the juvenile societies send delegates. We urge it as a matter of importance to their development and encouragement. Let no auxiliary fail to send a delegate. If this is impossible, send a written report. Let all delegates and friends who expect to attend this meeting, send their names to Mrs. Robert Somerville, Greenville, Miss. A full attendance is earnestly desired. We invite our pastors cordially to be with us and help us in our great work.

MRS. C. N. TERRY, Pres.,
MRS. H. H. WALL, Rec. Sec.

Notice.

Will the preachers of the Woodville district please send me the number and names of delegates, together with those of local preachers, who will attend the District Conference which will be convened at this place, May 16, 1889. Fraternally,

FRANK M. KEEN.

AMITE CITY, La., April 16, 1889.

Notice.

The Woodville District Conference will be held at Amite City, La., beginning May 16, 1889, at 9 A. M.

"I have tried A. & P. Manzitre's Cundurango on myself and others, and it is my opinion that in producing a healthy and safe action on the Liver, Kidneys and secretions generally, there is not a better medicine known, and for persons of Bilious or Costive habits its action is most effective and salutary." BOOKS.

THE STORY OF METHODISM. By A. B. Hyde, D. D. M. W. Hazen Company, New York.

This is "the story of Methodism throughout the world, from the beginning to the present time; tracing the rise and progress of that wonderful religious movement, which, like the Gulf stream, has given warmth to wide waters and verdure to many lands, and gives an account of its various influences and institutions of to-day." The book is fully and elegantly illustrated. It has also a full index. It has the commendation of the principal men of Methodism in this country. "The Story" is so well told—so pleasantly told, so sincerely told—that we at once class Dr. Hyde among the best "story tellers" of our time. This is eminently the book for the home. It is the book to put into the hands of the young Methodists. They will find it as delightful as it is instructive. Here is a real history, whose facts and incidents are as romantic as they are real. It is fair and frank. It is an epitome of what Methodism has done and of what Methodism is, and we commend it to all.

THE SPIRIT OF CHRIST. By Rev. Andrew Murray. A. B. F. Randolph and Company, New York. Price, $1 25; sent by post on receipt of price.

Here are "thoughts on the indwelling of the Holy Spirit in the believer and the church," arranged in the form of short lectures with a text heading and suited to every day in the month. There are seventy-five pages of "notes" appended. We have read these thoughts with profit. The style is clear and smooth and the thought most reverent. The author seems to have but two objects in view—one to enlighten, instruct and profit the reader, the other to honor the Holy Spirit—and it seems to us that he succeeds admirably in both.

AMERICAN RESORTS; WITH NOTES UPON THEIR CLIMATE. By Rushrod W. James, A. M., M. D. Intended for invalids and those who desire to preserve good health in a suitable climate. American Biographical Publishing Company, 1206 Chestnut street, Philadelphia. Octavo, 300 pages, cloth. Price, $2.

This seems to be a most carefully prepared work on the health resorts of our country. It treats of Medical Climatology, Benefits and Dangers of Health Resorts, Seaside and Fresh Water and Mountain Resorts, Trips on Ocean, Lake and River, Mineral Springs, Summer and Winter Resorts, Therapeutics, Mexico and South America, and a translation from a German work on The High North, Middle Latitudes and Tropical America, The Atlantic Ocean. The whole concluding with a copious index. We judge this will be a valuable book to invalids and summer tourists.

The Colporteur.

MR. EDITOR: Your favorable notice of our book business in a former issue emboldens me to ask a little space to explain and to answer numerous inquiries in reference to my opening a store for the sale of our literature in this city.

1. My circumstances were such that I felt compelled to do so, or turn my attention to other things for a support.

2. Prominent brethren—pastors and others—in the city thought such a step highly expedient and conducive to the furtherance of our cause, not only in Louisiana, but in all this southern and coast country. Impelled by such circumstances, backed by such influence, and encouraged by the kind words and prayers of Christian people, I have deliberately ventured my all of financial ability in the enterprise, determined to do my best to merit and achieve success.

As to rates, I propose to furnish preachers and people our books here at just what they are now, or have been, paying for them at Nashville. So if any dealer, or preacher, has special rates, he has only to inform me what they are to have no duplicate his former bills.

As to terms, I can only sell for cash, or on short time and to such parties as have a good financial standing with our House at Nashville, or where they live. Our brethren in the ministry understand this, and they must not blame me if prompt settlement is expected. I hope and expect to attend all of the District Conferences I can reach with a fair supply of our books.

Our new hymn book is promised by April 25, and orders will be promptly filled in their order as on file.

Praying God's blessing upon the venture, and asking the earnest and hearty support and patronage of the Methodist preachers and laity of all that territory adjacent and convenient to New Orleans, I am,

Three Reasonable Requests.

1. Let every subscriber carefully read this issue of the ADVOCATE, and then show the paper to some neighbor who does not take it, and ask him to subscribe.

2. Let every minister arrange for a complete canvass of his circuit, so that every family of every Methodist congregation may have the paper offered to them. Where the minister can not do this personally, let him appoint some suitable person to do it.

3. Let the benefit and duty of subscribing for our church paper be mentioned in every congregation, and all reasonable efforts put forth to obtain new subscribers, and secure the renewal of old ones.

"O, mamma!" exclaimed a little Burlington boy, on seeing a calf for the first time, "there's the little cow that gives the condensed milk."

Next to your subscription the greatest favor you can extend the ADVOCATE, in a business point, is to mention the paper in writing to advertisers.

THREE LITTLE MAIDS.

BY MRS. F. M. HOWARD.

Three little maids one summer's day
Determined to take a ride
In quite a novel and curious way,
So they to the livery hied;

And thus to the livery clerk they spoke,
"Pray hasten, good man, and dress
That cute little donkey; to yonder cart
Let him be hitched with express."

The donkey was small, and thin, and gray,
With ears uncommonly long.
To which blue ribbons were tied, and his bray
Was also uncommonly strong.

And he winked one eye at the three little maids,
As they harnessed him up to the cart,
As if he would say, "I'll show you, my dears,
A trick or two ere we part."

The three little maids jumped in, and away
They went in the grandest of style;
Laughing and chattering, full of glee;
But the donkey's head, meanwhile,

Was hung with a sober, solemn air,
As if he scorned such folly;
And he trotted along, in a meek-faced way,
In a settled melancholy.

They came to a bridge, which the legend bears,
"Five dollars fine," you know it.
The donkey raised his humble eyes,
And stood in a study before it.

'Get up! Get up!" the little maids cried,
But the donkey looked over his shoulder,
"When we get over this bridge, my dears,
We'll be quite a few minutes older."

In vain they chirruped and shook the lines;
He stood in deep meditation,
And pensively gazed at the notice there,
As if in all creation

He never had seen a sight so queer,
And then he burst into a roar
Of donkeyish laughter, the like of which
He never had brayed before.

His feelings relieved, in a solemn trot
He ambled quite comfortable;
But in spite of all that the maids could do,
He took a bee line for the stable.

But just before they did reach the door,
He ran one wheel on a stump,
And tipped the three little maids in the road,
In one disconsolate lump.

Slowly and sadly the three walked home.
And each declared to the other,
"The next time we take a donkey ride,
We'd better invite our brother."

MR. EDITOR: As I have never written to the ADVOCATE, I thought I would write. Mamma takes the ADVOCATE, and we all like to read it very much. I am thirteen years old, and I help mamma milk and wash dishes and sweep the floor and feed all the chickens. My papa is a farmer, and I help my mamma work in the garden. We have a very good Sunday-school, and we go most every Sunday. We live about a mile from town and I go to church and school. Our preacher's name is Mr. Moore. He is a very good preacher, and we like him very much. My Sunday-school teacher is Mrs. Suttles. She is very kind to me, and I like her very much, and she is our superintendent. Now, Mr. Editor, as this is the first letter I have ever written to your paper, I hope to see it in print. With many kind wishes to the dear old ADVOCATE and all the cousins. Your little friend,

VERONICA PLEASANTS.

MR. EDITOR: As I have written to the ADVOCATE once, I thought I would write again. I have a sweet little sister. She is four months old. We have a nice girl boarding with us. She is going to school. I go to school too. I am in long division in arithmetic, and am in the fifth reader. I read the Sunday-school Visitors. I like to read them very much. One of our old preachers sent me a kiss in a letter for the one that I wrote to the ADVOCATE. One of my aunts came down from Greenville. She was very sick. Please publish my letter. I remain, as ever,

Your little friend,

BERNIE BLUCKER.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl eleven years old to-day. I have been wanting to write a long time. We all like the ADVOCATE very much. I have two brothers and two sisters, Helen and Marcy, Bobbie and Preston. Santa Claus brought me a pretty little lamp full of perfume. I say my lessons to mamma every day. My papa is a farmer. I love to read the little letters so much. I hope my letter will not reach the waste-basket. With many good wishes to you and the dear old ADVOCATE, I am, Your little friend,

EDNA RICHARDSON.

WOODVILLE, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl seven years old. I live in the country and go to school. Miss Nettie Davis is my teacher. I study reading, spelling, arithmetic. I have four brothers. The baby is two months old, and weighs twenty-one pounds. Don't you think he is a fine baby? His name is Edgar Whitfield. We have to go four miles to Sunday-school. Mr. J. L. Ladd is the superintendent. Hoping to see this in print, I am, Your little friend,

LILLIE E. BELLEW.

AIREY, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little boy ten years old. My father takes your paper and we like it very much. I enjoy reading the little cousins' letters. I have two little sisters and one little brother. I have no pets myself, but my little brother has a pet colt. Her name is Binces. I am not going to school now, but will in a few days. I live at Olive Branch. Bro. N. J. Roberts is our pastor for this year. We all like him very much. Well, I will close. I am not writing this myself, but I have a dear cousin who is writing it for me. Nevertheless, I hope it won't find its way to the waste-basket. Your little friend,

JIMMIE LISENBEE.

Why Minnie Could Not Sleep.

She sat up in bed. The curtain was drawn up, and she saw the moon, and it looked as if it were laughing at her.

"You needn't look at me, Moon," she said, "you don't know about it, you can't see in the daytime. Besides I am going to sleep."

She lay down and tried to go to sleep. Her clock on the mantel went "tick tock, tick tock." She generally liked to hear it. But to-night it sounded just as if it said, "I-know, I-know, I-know."

"You don't know, either," said Minnie, opening her eyes wide. "You weren't there, you old thing! you were up stairs."

Her loud noise awoke the parrot. He took his head from under his wing, and cried out, "Polly did!"

"That's a wicked story, you naughty bird," said Minnie. "You were in grandma's room, so now!"

Then Minnie tried to go to sleep again. She lay down and counted white sheep, just as grandma said she did when she could'nt sleep. But there was a big lump in her throat. "Oh, I wish I hadn't!"

Pretty soon there came a very soft patter of four little feet, and her pussy jumped up on the bed, kissed Minnie's cheek, and and then began to "pur-r-r-r pur-r-r-r." It was very queer, but that, too, sounded as if pussy said. "I-know, I-know."

"Yes, you do know, kitty," said Minnie, and then she threw her arms around Kitty's neck and cried bitterly. "And—I guess—I want—to—see—my—mamma!"

Mamma opened her arms when she saw the little weeping girl coming, and then Minnie told her miserable story.

"I was awful naughty, mamma, but I did want the custard-pie so bad, and so I ate it up, most a whole pie, and then, I—I—Oh, I don't want to tell, but I 'spect I must, I shut kitty in the pantry to make you think she did it. But I'm truly sorry, mamma."

Then mamma told Minnie that she had known all about it. But she had hoped the little daughter would be brave enough to tell her all about it herself.

"But, mamma," she asked, "how did you know it wasn't kitty?"

"Because kitty would never have left a spoon in the pie," replied mamma.—Little Men and Women.

Household.

TABLE CONVERSATION.—Benjamin Franklin says of his father in his autobiography: "At his table he liked to have, as often as he could, some sensible friend or neighbor to converse with, and always took care to start some useful topic for discourse, which might tend to improve the minds of his children." This shows planning and forethought on the part of the parent, which are essential to redeem conversation at the table from mere chatter of foolish gossip. In too many homes meal time is reserved for pouring out all the complaints and annoyances which mar the day, or for discussing anxious household problems. In others the food is hastily swallowed in comparative silence, while the father, perhaps, is absorbed in reading the newspaper. Children brought up in such an atmosphere are certain to be constrained and awkward when invited to sit at other tables than their own. Nowhere are bon mots better appreciated than around the family board, and happy the homes in which one of its members is blessed with a gift of refined humor, to be used when they break bread together! Plato says that "all men, well questioned, answer well;" and parents who are too busy to devote much time to this matter of conversation at the table, can at least train the children to ask intelligent questions on topics of current interest.—Evangelical Messenger.

CONSERVE YOUR STRENGTH.—Some of our young people have read till they are crazed, of learned blacksmiths who at the forge conquered thirty languages, and of shoemakers who, pounding sole-leather, got to be philosophers, and milliners who, while their customers were at the glass trying on their spring hats, wrote a volume of first-rate poems. The fact is, no blacksmith ought to be troubled with more than five languages; and instead of shoemakers becoming philosophers, we would like to turn our surplus of philosophers into shoemakers; and the supply of poetry is so much greater than the demand that we wish milliners would stick to their business. Extraordinary examples of work and endurance may do as much harm as good. Because Napoleon slept only three hours a night hundreds of students have tried the experiment, but instead of Austerlitz and Jena, there came of it only a sick headache and a botch of recitation. We are told of how many books a man can read in the five spare minutes before breakfast and the ten minutes at noon; but I wish some one could tell us how much rest a man can get in fifteen minutes after dinner, or how much health in an hour's horseback ride, or how much fun in a Saturday afternoon of cricket. He who has such an idea of the value of time that he takes none of it for rest, wastes all his time.

A PERFECT HOME.—The late Helen Hunt, writing of a perfect home, said: "The most perfect home I ever saw was a little house into the sweet incense of whose fires went no costly thing. A thousand dollars served us a year's living for father, mother, and three children. But the mother was the creator of a home; her relations with the children were the most beautiful I have ever seen; every inmate of the house involuntarily looked into her face for the keynote of the day, and it always rang clear. From the rose-bud or clover-leaf, which in spite of her hard housework she always found time to put beside our plates at breakfast, down to the story she had in her hand to read in the evening, there was no intermission of her influence. She has always been, and will always be my ideal of a mother, wife, and homemaker. If to her quick brain, loving heart, and exquisite face had been added the appliances of wealth and enlargements of wide culture, hers would have been absolutely the ideal home. As it was, it was the best I have ever seen."

As certainly as your Master's love is in you, his work will be upon you.—Bushnell.

The reading public has reason to be disgusted with any medicine which claims to cure everything, from a corn to consumption. Shallenberger's Antidote for Malaria is simply what its name imports. If you have Malaria in your system, a few doses will destroy it immediately. So far as now known it is the only antidote for this poison. Sold by Druggists.

A Fact

WORTH knowing is that blood diseases which all other remedies fail to cure, yield to Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Fresh confirmation of this statement comes to hand daily. Even such deep-seated and stubborn complaints as Rheumatism, Rheumatic Gout, and the like, are thoroughly eradicated by the use of this wonderful alterative.

Mrs. R. Irving Dodge, 110 West 125th street, New York, certifies:—

"About two years ago, after suffering for nearly two years from rheumatic gout, being able to walk only with great discomfort, and having tried various remedies, including mineral waters, without relief, I saw by an advertisement in a Chicago paper that a man had been relieved of this distressing complaint, after long suffering, by taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I then decided to make a trial of this medicine, and took it regularly for eight months. I am pleased to say that it effected a complete cure, and that I have since had no return of the disease."

Mrs. L. A. Stark, Nashua, N. H., writes: "One year ago I was taken ill with rheumatism, being confined to my house six months. I came out of the sickness very much debilitated, with no appetite, and my system disordered in every way. I commenced to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla and began to improve at once, gaining in strength and soon recovering my usual health. I cannot say too much in praise of this well-known medicine."

"I have taken a great deal of medicine, but nothing has done me so much good as Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I felt its beneficial effects before I had quite finished one bottle, and I can freely testify that it is the best blood-medicine I know of."—L. W. Ward, Sr., Woodland, Texas.

MASON & HAMLIN

The cabinet organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of these instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.

Mason & Hamlin offer, as demonstration of the unequalled excellence of their organs, ORGANS at all of the $22 TO $900. great World's Exhibitions, since that of Paris, 1867, in competition with best makers of all countries, they have invariably taken the highest honors. One hundred styles from $22 to $900 or more. Illustrated catalogues free.

Mason & Hamlin do not hesitate to make the extraordinary claim for their pianos, that they are superior to all others. They recognize the high excellence achieved PIANOS GRAND & UPRIGHT by other leading makers in the art of piano building, but still claim superiority. This they attribute solely to the remarkable improvement introduced by them in the year 1882, and now known as the "MASON & HAMLIN PIANO STRINGER," by the use of which is secured the greatest possible purity and refinement of tone, together with greatly increased capacity for standing in tune, and other important advantages.

A circular, containing testimonials from three hundred purchasers, musicians, and tuners, sent, together with descriptive catalogue, to any applicant.

Pianos and organs sold for cash or easy payments; also rented.

TURNER—JOHN T. TURNER was born in Carroll county, Miss., February 23, 1810, and died at his home, in the same county, November 14, 1888. He was married March 6, 1867, to Miss Hattie Newell, who lived only two years after their marriage. In 1872 he married Miss Lou C. Newell, a younger sister of his former wife, who still lives to mourn the loss of a devoted husband and kind, affectionate father. He was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1853, and soon developed into an active Christian life. He was a man of strong Christian experience. He believed in religion of the heart and enjoyed and lived it, and also impressed its importance upon his home and church and the community in which he lived. Our brother was a man of strong convictions and uncompromising integrity. In an acquaintance of several years we never knew him to waver when the principles of right were involved. Bro. Turner filled all the official positions in our church held by laymen, except delegate to the General Conference. At the time of his death he was a member of the North Mississippi Conference. His church loved to honor him, because he loved her doctrine, studied her polity and delighted in her work. For years he was recording steward of the Carrollton circuit, and when he assumed the responsibilities of this office he discharged the duties imposed upon him with becoming fidelity. His love for Methodism seemed unbounded, and he gave cheerfully of his time and means for its support. He was, at the time of his death and for years before, an honored member of the Board of Trustees of Grenada Collegiate Institute, where he demonstrated his devotion to the cause of Christian education. We shall miss his wise counsel and sterling integrity in the transaction of the business of that Board. We were not prepared to give up such a man as John T. Turner, for he was a man eminently useful, and in his intercourse with his fellow-men he was governed by a sense of right and good-will toward all men. Such a life as his is a boon to any community and a benediction to any church, and its loss is a public calamity, especially to the young who so much stand in need of good examples and wholesome advice.

Such men are the "salt of the earth," and the record of their lives make up the history of the church. This brother had nothing to do but to die; the messenger found him waiting. After the transaction of some business of a temporal character, then his last blessing upon his wife and children, and messages of encouragement to a few friends with whom he stood shoulder to shoulder in the work of the church, he says: "I am ready; all but about two weeks of my conscious responsible life has been given to Christ, and I know he will not cast me off now." Thus passed away one of the best and truest men of our country.

We felt poorer when the news of his death reached us. But we know his mortal spirit is rich in the eternal beauties of heaven. We extend our sympathy to the sorrowing loved ones, and pray that we may meet him where death never comes.

S. M. THAMES.

QUINBY—Mrs. ELLEN W. QUINBY, wife of J. B. Quinby, died in Donaldsonville, March 18, 1889, aged forty-five years. Sister Quinby joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, when quite young, and was a faithful follower of Christ and loyal to the church till God called her home. For the last fifteen years she had resided in Donaldsonville, La., and until last year there was no church of her faith there; yet she held on to Methodism. No one of the few members, rejoiced more than she did when a beautiful little church was erected in Donaldsonville, and a successful revival was held, where many souls were brought into the church and communion with Christ.

Her house had been the Methodist preacher's home ever since their marriage. Many itinerants, as they read this, will remember how kindly and hospitably they were entertained at her home. She was a model Christian wife, always loving, gentle, patient and helpful to her husband. She was careful for his present and eternal welfare and, no doubt, her death was easier from the fact that she had united with the church and became one of its most active members. She was a devoted mother, and possessing, herself, all the admirable virtues and graces that are necessary to adorn and beautify Christian womanhood, she was competent to raise children to be a blessing to the church and the world. Three sweet girls mourn a precious mother's loss. Sister Quinby was the most courageous and patient sufferer the writer ever saw. For many long months she suffered intensely with cancer, and during that time two very painful, dangerous operations were performed, yet she did not murmur. She suffered for Christ's sake.

She is gone to heaven, but she will be missed. Friends will miss her; the church will miss her; and, oh, how much she will be missed in the home! There is a vacant chair and a vacancy in the home that can never be filled. But remember, husband and children, that "among the brightest and fairest" of all heaven's inhabitants is a fond wife and precious mother, "ever beckoning you onward and upward" to her celestial home. May you all be there!

W. WIMBERLY.

NEWTON—Died, at her home, near Mt. Carmel, Miss., Mrs. ELLEN NEWTON (nee MCCALOP), March 19, 1889. Sister Newton was born in Fayetteville, N. C., April, 1800. She was married to Major Newton, January 16, 1823, and moved to Marion county, Miss., near Water Holes, 1825. In 1826 she moved to Covington county, to her home on White Sand, where she has since resided. Sister Newton was left an orphan at an early age; but a kind Christian lady had extended to her a mother's protection, love and prayers. In 1845 she became a member of Mt. Zion Church, and shortly afterwards she followed her husband, Major Newton, into the Presbyterian Church, being a charter member of "Slago." When able to travel, she was prompt and punctual in attendance on public worship. For some eight or ten years past she has been an invalid confined to her room. She was a woman of superior native mind; was cultured and refined in manners; was gifted with rare conversational powers. It was a rare treat to be in her company, listen to her silvery voice, watch her sparkling eyes, while she conversed about her early Christian life. Her mind was well stored with varied knowledge. She loved to converse upon religious topics. She had a clear witness to her acceptance with God and maintained it to the last. She delighted to have God's ministers to visit her home, and loved the company of the young people. Although partially deaf, and thus removed from the privilege of having others to communicate freely to her, she murmured not, and bore her trials with Christian patience, willing to suffer God's will. The mother of seven children, she outlived all but one, the Hon. Isaac Newton, with whom she resided. She leaves him the legacy of a mother's prayers and love. God grant that he may meet that mother in heaven!

As she honored God in her life, God honored her in her sickness and death with his blessed presence. Her end was peaceful. She fell asleep in Jesus.

R. B. DOWNER.

TAYLOR—Died, December 19, 1888, near Vancleave, Miss., after a short illness, Mrs. ALMYRA TAYLOR, wife of Edwin M. Taylor and daughter of James and Mary Robberts. She was born in Jackson county, Mississippi, September 20, 1847.

Mrs. Taylor was a consistent member of the Methodist Church, was a loving wife, a fond mother, a true friend and Christian. Warm and confiding by nature, she reposed with childlike simplicity and trustfulness upon the promises of her Savior, and we have every assurance that she is now reaping the rich fruition of a life spent in the faithful discharge of every social, family and religious duty. The lengthening shadows of the dark valley seemed to rest upon her mind for months previous to her death. A gloomy presentiment of approaching death and separation from her husband and children seemed to have fastened itself upon her mind.

If we use the best means at our disposal, to do God's work, and use them in a right spirit, we have reason to believe that God will bless our efforts in his behalf and direct the means so used to the right results.

Called Back.

There is a famous novel by Hugh Conway entitled "Called Back." From a facetious proneness we are indirectly reminded that this is also the name of the supporter of erect statue, the spinal column is "called back." Disease may weaken it—weariness wear it, health leave it; briefly, prostration may drive its vigor away. But we are pleased to remind you that vigor also may be "called back," by Compound Oxygen treatment.

Here is some encouragement:

PENSACOLA, Fla., July 25, 1888.

"I suffered from a very severe and obstinate case of bronchitis. I had tried a great many doctors' remedies, and while I am not entirely well, I am very greatly improved, and feel fully assured that the same is due to your Compound Oxygen treatment."

WALLA WALLA, Washington Ter., April 9, 1888.

"I have now used your Compound Oxygen Treatment for two months, and feel much better than I did before using it. My lungs hold double the amount of air they did at the time I first tried it." N. K. GARFIEL.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., June 4, 1888. No. 331 Decatur St.

"I will always recommend Compound Oxygen as the greatest vitalizing agent known; for I certainly feel that it has prolonged my life."

MRS. S. H. HENDERSON.

If you desire convincing proof of its efficacy—that is, if you will consider authenticated testimonials as such, then send for our brochure of 200 pages containing full and explicit information on the subject of Compound Oxygen, together with a record of cures in many cases of consumption, asthma, catarrh, bronchitis, dyspepsia, hay fever, headache, debility, rheumatism, neuralgia, all chronic and nervous disorders. It will be forwarded, free of charge, to any one addressing DRS. STARKEY & PALEN, No. 1529 Arch street, Philadelphia, Pa.; or 120 Sutter street, San Francisco, Cal.

Curiosities of Natural Gas.

One writer asks whether it is safe to bore the earth too much. He assumes the earth to be a hollow sphere filled with a gaseous substance called by us natural gas, and he thinks that tapping these reservoirs will cause disastrous explosions, resulting from the lighted gas coming in contact with that which is escaping. Earthquakes, he says, are probably caused by vacuums created by the outflowing gas. He compares the earth to a balloon floated and kept distended by the gas in the interior, which, if exhausted, will cause the crust to collapse, affect the motion of the earth in its orbit, cause it to lose its place among the heavenly bodies, and fall in pieces.

Another writer thinks that boring should be prohibited by stringent laws. He, too, thinks there is a possibility of an explosion, though from another cause. Should such a disaster occur, "the country along the gas-belt from Toledo through Ohio, Indiana, and Kentucky will be ripped up to the depth of twelve or fifteen hundred feet, and flopped over like a pancake, leaving a chasm through which the waters of Lake Erie will come howling down, filling the Ohio and Mississippi Valleys, and blotting them out forever!"

Still another theorist has investigated the gas-wells with telephones and delicate thermometers, and he announces startling discoveries. He distinguished sounds like the boiling of rocks, and estimated that a mile and a half or so beneath Findlay the temperature of the earth is 3,500 degrees. This scientist says an immense cavity exists under Findlay, and that here the gas is stored; that a mile below the bottom of the cavity is a mass of roaring, seething flame, which is gradually eating into the rocky floor of the cavern and thinning it. Eventually the flames will reach the gas, a terrific explosion will ensue, and Findlay and its neighborhood will be blown skyward in an instant. Such are some of the theories gravely propounded in respect to this new fuel.—Prof. Jos. F. James, in Popular Science Monthly.

The Fashion in Watches.

An article in the American Magazine, after asserting that American watches are excluding from general use in this country the Swiss and English products, explains the fact as follows:

The main idea which underlies the American system of watchmaking is, above all, the production of a good watch—one that can be relied upon, year in and year out, to keep the time of day. Everything in the manufacture is subservient to this idea. Complicated as the mechanism of a watch is at best, the American watch is notably simple. The English plan of transmitting power from the mainspring to a series of wheels, by means of a chain composed of several hundred minute pieces, slowly unwinding itself from one wheel and winding itself on another, has been rejected. The same result—without risk of breakage or ungearing—can be obtained by means of a long graduated mainspring, inclosed in a hollow wheel whose cogs, communicating directly with the train, put and keep it in motion as the spring uncoils itself.

Here is the radical distinction in principle between the English and the American watch; and it is a very important distinction, so far as practical results are concerned. Another merit of the American watch is uniform excellence. That machine which makes any portion of a watch faultlessly can make ten thousand similar portions just as faultlessly. By means of micrometric gauges, any deviation to the one ten-thousandth part of an inch can be detected in the machine. Human hands can not rival this exactitude. It is the unfailing, unerring accuracy of exquisitely perfect machinery which gives absolute uniform quality to the American watch. In 1860 the American companies produced only 15,000 watches. In 1863, they produced 100,000. In 1876, thirteen years later, they produced 250,000; and in 1888, nearly 6,000 per day.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Municipal elections were held in a large number of towns and villages throughout Illinois last week. The prohibitionists were successful in the choice of anti-license candidates in eighteen towns and secured high license in two, while the license element carried the day in several municipalities.

The authorities in New York are cutting down the telegraph and telephone poles and wires, as they obstruct the streets of that city and are considered dangerous.

At a meeting in Washington, D. C., on April 17, colored Republicans protested against the course of the administration in not recognizing their demands for office.

The fiercest fire New York City has witnessed in years swept the east bank of the North river for seven squares, on the nineteenth. About $3,550,000 worth of property was destroyed. Several men were killed and a number injured.

Murat Halstead, editor of the Cincinnati Commercial-Gazette, whose nomination as minister to Germany was rejected by the Senate, is very ill.

An election was held in San Antonio, Texas, on April 20, to pass upon a proposition submitted by the city council to vote the issue of $250,000 public improvement bonds. An exceedingly light vote was polled, resulting in the overwhelming defeat of the proposition.

The striking car drivers in Minneapolis have caused serious disturbances in the streets. On April 21, cars were derailed and wrecked and tracks torn up.

Sir Julian Pauncefoot, the newly appointed British Minister to Washington, arrived at New York City on April 21.

Oklahoma country, in Indian Territory, was opened to settlers on the twenty-second instant. A mad rush for land all along the line was made. The city of Guthrie was settled and organized with incredible rapidity with a population of 15,000. Every desirable lot was protected by rifles and revolvers, and the late arrivals had to take what was left.

Papers were filed with the clerk of the House of Representatives on April 22, in the subjoined contested election cases: Second and Fourth Alabama, First Arkansas and Second Florida for contestants, and in the Ninth Virginia for contestees.

The prohibition amendment was defeated in Massachusetts on April 22. One hundred and eighty-five cities and towns outside of Boston give the following vote on the constitutional amendment: Yes, 43,354; no, 55,328.

The amendment was defeated by from 35,000 to 40,000 majority.

FOREIGN.

Cholera is epidemic in the Philippine Islands, and out of 1,500 cases 1,000 have proved fatal.

Emperor William has appointed Count Herbert Bismarck and Dr. Kraul, of Holstein, representatives of Germany at the Samoan conference. The conference will open on April 29.

Lord Hartington, in a speech at Sunderland, said that the principles of local government, as accepted by the people of England and Scotland, would be offered to Ireland as soon as the Irish were ready to recognize that there was no grievance in possessing an equality in political status with the English and the Scotch.

In a dispatch to Herr Stuebel, the new German consul to Samoa, Prince Bismarck censures Consul Knappe's conduct throughout the troubles in Samoa, and declares Germany has nothing to do with the internal affairs of the place; that her mission is restricted to protecting Germans and enabling them to develop commercial interests.

The Belgian government has decided to send a second notice to General Boulanger to the effect that he will not be allowed to conspire against France, a nation friendly to Belgium.

Count Herbert Bismarck has prepared a statement for the Samoan conference as a basis for discussion. It has been submitted to and approved by Sir Edward Mallet, the British ambassador. Germany concedes the principle of absolute non-interference in Samoa and the natives are to be left free to choose as their ruler either of the rival chiefs.

Prince Bismarck, in consulting with the Emperor, on overtures from the Vatican, for the appointment of a nuncio at Berlin, found unflinching opposition, the Emperor even declining to consider the nomination of a certain archbishop to fulfill the functions of nuncio.

The Catholic Congress at Vienna will open on the twenty-ninth. Committees will be appointed to condition social, scientific, educational, press and political questions. It is expected that the congress will proclaim the necessity of the re-establishment of the temporary power of the Pope and declare the right of the church to direct schools to the exclusion of state interference.

In the debate on the Extradition Bill in the Canadian Parliament, on April 20, Sir John MacDonald pointed out that both England and Canada were anxious to enlarge the list of extraditable offenses, and that whatever delay had been in this direction was due to the action of the American authorities.

Gen. Boulanger has decided to leave Belgium, and will establish his headquarters in London.

There was serious rioting in Vienna, April 21, arising out of the strike of tram car drivers. Workmen in sympathy with the drivers blocked the streets and overcame the police.

"Consumption can be Cured."
Dr. J. S. Combs, Owensville, Ohio, says: "I have given Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites to four patients with better results than seemed possible with any remedy. All were hereditary cases of Lung disease, and advanced to that stage when coughs, pain in the chest, frequent breathing, frequent pulse, fever and emaciation. All these cases have increased in weight from 26 to 46 lbs., and are not now needing any medicine."

D. F. ALEXANDER, P. E.

There is comfort for the man with a prematurely gray beard in Buckingham's Dye, because it never fails to color an even brown or black as may be desired.

I will never believe that a man has a real love for the good and the beautiful except he attack the evil and the disgusting the moment he sees it.—Charles Kingsley.

The clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its truest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policy-holders.
The Episcopal Diocese of New York has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and The Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.
A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

East Tennessee, Virginia & Georgia R. R.

CHEAPEST FURNITURE HOUSE IN NEW ORLEANS.—This is the heading of the advertisement of Mr. J. G. Grant's, 50 and 52 Baronne street, New Orleans. Now, we would suggest to our readers to peruse it carefully, and they will be astonished at the low prices which Mr. Grant is selling furniture for. As this gentleman is thoroughly reliable, and guarantees the smallest article that leaves his store, we feel satisfied that those who may try him once will have further dealings with him. There is no store of this character in the South that keeps a larger or finer assortment than his, and as his expenses are less than others in the same line, he has informed us that he can sell lower. Try him.—N. O. Weekly Picayune, January 24.

MAY.

BY HARRIET SMEAD.

A tender, softly sighing breeze,
Like breath from odorous groves of balm;
A whisper 'mong the grand old trees
That sounded like a half-sung psalm.

The streams with golden meshes crossed,
And sweet songs floating from afar,
I wondered if the angel host
Had left the gates of heaven ajar.

Then a dear friend before me stood,
Her hands with lovely blossoms filled;
No fabled goddess of the wood
Could so my heart with gladness thrill.

"A floral offering," she said,
"A greeting from the spring-time showers,
The first the sunny-footed May
Has brought unto my fresh-robed bowers."

Ah, then I knew why grave old trees
Half whispering and trembling soog,
And why the many-voiced breeze
Abroad its perfumed banners flung.

Fair May, the angel of the year,
Had rolled the stone from Beauty's tomb,
And bade her rise and reappear
Arrayed in bridal robes of bloom.

And she had risen at the call,
With all the muses in her train,
With twilights rare and laughing hours,
Bright, sunny skies and sweet refrain.

No marvel that I heard sweet sounds,
Like songs astray from heavenly fold;
No marvel that the bright waves wore
So royal a their crowns of gold.

The Louisiana State Lottery Company Examined and Exposed.

BY REV. B. CARRADINE, D. D.

A fourth charge that I make is, that the Lottery is destructive of the spirit of labor.

I don't ask you to believe this simply on my statement; but listen to the frequently repeated assertions made upon parliamentary floors in France and England. One of the reasons urged there for the discontinuance of the lottery system in those countries is that it was simply ruinous to labor. That it encourages an idle, dreamy, visionary, shiftless sort of life that is antipodal and inimical to the spirit of work is evident. For that matter, all gambling has the same effect. What is gambling but the genius of idleness? You never saw a professional gambler who would be confined to steady, toilsome work, and even the occasional sport finds that the spirit of gaming unfits and disqualifies him for regular habits of toil. Whether it is the anticipation of gain, or the paralyzing memory of the loss, both unfit him for duty. There is a distaste—not to say, disgust—for anything like toil. God put us on earth to work. "In the sweat of thy face thou shalt get thy bread." These words of the Almighty pass us at once as a race into the realm of physical labor. It is best for us that it is so; best for a man's body and mind and soul; best for his health and best for his happiness; best for the interests and welfare of society. What are jobs but multitudes of men without work?

Any institution that by its influence disinclines people to steady labor is a curse to the community and is the common enemy of the whole land. And this is what the Louisiana State Lottery has done and is doing.

Take the simplest illustration of the fact. You make a single investment of one ticket in one of the monthly drawings. Apparently that investment has cost you one dollar or ten dollars; but if you knew how many hours you lost in thinking of it, and how many hours you lost in talking and speculating about it, and how many thoughts crowded in between you and your business, between you and the proper discharge of duties you owed your employer—you would be amazed. Here is a loss of time and faithful labor.

Look again at the evil. Here are the newsboys crying out on the streets the intelligence of the last drawing, with the fortunate numbers in print. At least one hundred thousand people in this city devote from five to ten minutes each in scanning the numbers. The aggregate time lost that morning or afternoon amounts to six hundred and ninety-four days, or nearly two years. Two years time lost! Why, a great city has been built in a year—fortunes and fame made in a year—great harvests that sustain the nations of the earth made and gathered and distributed in a year. And yet here we have lost in actual time, a greater period still, that if properly used would have made our occupations and business fairly leap toward success, the city put on a new appearance, and the country feel the thrill and impetus of an earnest, aggressive life radiating to it from its great center.

Ten minutes daily squandered by countless thousands of individuals, with nothing to show for it but depleted mental and moral energy, gives an aggregate that is fearful to contemplate. This wasted time, if redeemed, would go far to settle those social, financial and labor problems that trouble the best citizens of this State to-day.

I am convinced that I can not exaggerate the retarding and paralyzing influence of the Lottery upon the labor-life of this city. How it disinclines for work! How it leads to dilatoriness and procrastination and feeble performance and final discontinuance! In the wild hope of drawing a prize or fortune, the steady, systematic life of labor, that is the surest political hope we have, is utterly ruined.

I read once of a negro that spent the whole night in stealing three sticks of wood. He was not idle a moment, and was at it from nine o'clock at night until daybreak next morning. The result of that night's arduous toil was about fifteen cents. If he had gone regularly to work during the day, he would have made a dollar and fifty cents, with which he could have purchased a half-cord of wood, retired to rest, and enjoyed his night's rest, and kept beside a good conscience.

He is a fine representation of the Lottery ticket buyer. Verily, if all the money and time and strength that some people put into a Louisiana-Lottery-forlorn-hope ticket, that is to bring nothing but disappointment and wasted honor, were put instead into the honest, healthful, practical labors of life, into study and self-improvement—in a word, into the discharge of duty—the result would be most gratifying and profitable to the individuals themselves and amazing to the country at large.

My fifth charge against the Lottery is, that it is a gambling institution and promotive of the gambling spirit.

There is no argument needed to prove this. The decision of the courts, the language of twenty-six Legislatures in the United States, and the voice of the Parliaments of three kingdoms in Europe, all agree in characterizing it as a system and institution of gambling. As to the estimation in which gambling is held by any community or country that pretends to the possession of moral tone or sentiment, we are left in no state of ambiguity or uncertainty. Several things declare its moral status. One is the existence of laws passed in reference to it. You don't legislate against an honorable employment! The very number of enactments bearing upon gambling—curbing, restraining, limiting—show how it is regarded by the law-makers and people. Not simply suspicious, but dangerous, and driven by law and public sentiment to the darkness of night and remoteness of place, and oftentimes remarkable for difficulty of access.

Then the word "license" throws light upon the matter. License in such cases as this is a recognition by the State or city of an existing evil; but, at the same time, a confession that it can not extirpate it for some reasons, and for the present is content to curb, or, worse still, draw an unholy revenue from its unrighteous gains. Then the moral status is declared by that most fearful punishment—social ostracism. The judgment of a right-thinking people is that a man is disgraced by such a life. Something more we gather from the feeling of despair that takes possession of us when we hear that a man has become a gambler. We have no hope that he will ever reform. It is one of, if not the mightiest passion itself of the human heart! It is the one habit which when formed we never expect to see broken. With talons struck into every nerve, and beak of fire drinking up the fountains of life, it is a dark bird fluttering up and out of an infinite night of evil, and taking its perch upon the spirit—there to stay! Look at gambling in any light you will, and from any standpoint you will, and it is still an unmixed curse and unmitigated evil.

Now, the wonder is, that while we recognize all this; while we know the evil of gaming—the trouble it brings, the fortunes it dissipates, the starvation it produces, and the crimes it occasions—yet by our Legislature and through our votes we have chartered and planted in our midst a colossal gambling institution, that will foster the very spirit, promote the life and practice, corrupt our children, and blight with its withering influence our land and the generation in which we live.

That the gambling spirit is spreading there are many things to show. If you doubt, only look at the books of the Company, and glance at the army of employees, and watch the mail-bags coming into the main office three and four times a day. That the plague is spreading we have many and unmistakable proofs. Fifty thousand dollars comes here from Boston alone every month; the same amount is received from Chicago. People from Mississippi have told me recently that the negroes at certain points are kept financially stripped on account of the Lottery. At two places, whose names were called, I understand that for miles around the colored people drain themselves to purchase tickets. A lady resident of this city informed me that if I knew who purchased Lottery tickets, I would be amazed. She gave me to understand that in her boarding-house, which is crowded from garret to cellar, everyone, either secretly or openly, is engaged in this gambling life and practice. A cigar dealer in this place, in a small office ten feet square, is literally coining money; not from cigars, but Lottery tickets. His receipts, he told a friend of mine, were frequently five hundred dollars a day. This is only one of countless offices that dot the town and country. Is the gambling spirit spreading?

A few weeks ago one of the prominent lady members of a fashionable church in New Orleans was recognized and spoken to as she, deeply veiled, left a small Lottery ticket office. She hastily said to her discoverer: "For God's sake, don't let a certain person know this!" Nor will she be betrayed. About the same time the wife of a minister in this city drew a prize of twelve hundred dollars. It was all managed through a third party. Is the gambling spirit spreading? Does it not look like it when it has reached the church and is traveling toward the pulpit.

Verily, like fire in the prairie, it is reaching out in every direction. A young lady, of one of the best families, in a neighboring State, recently confessed to me that the sight of the Lottery tickets in the office windows about town filled her with feverish longings, and an almost irresistible desire to rush in and purchase one. She did not realize it, but she is a gambler already. Literally honey-combed and eaten out with the gambling mania. Just as much a gambler as the men that hang around card tables on Levee and Royal streets. Possessed with the same fever and spirit, and only kept from the act itself by the fear of detection, or by the lack of money.

I tell you, you men, strong in principle and of granite character; who can easily put aside certain baits and temptations; who have found out the vanity and nothingness of these tickets—that they are paper fruits of disappointment and despair, and mean nothing and are nothing—you do not properly appreciate the danger in which your children are placed by this great organ of evil. You have forgotten the susceptibility of youth; its readiness to believe every flaunting lie; its quick response to the sensuous world, and its liability to be led astray by a gambling plan made easy in various ways, and which comes upheld and endorsed to them by the Legislature and the votes of the commonwealth. It is a gambling brought down to children and the multitude. It is made possible and easy by its numerous offices, countless tickets and low prices. It is peculiarly dangerous because of these features. And we, by vote, have placed this remarkable danger before the unwary feet of our youth, when the purchase of a single ticket arouses the thirst for gain, and begins a habit that is relentless, absorbing and ruinous beyond all words to describe.

Did you ever read of Baden-Baden, the famous gambling center of the Continent? According to the sound. It is well named—Baden-Baden; yea, verily, ten thousand times over. If ever there was a hell on earth, it was once seen in that city. The whole place gambled—old and young, rich and poor. They raved; they screamed; they swore. As they hung around the tables of cards and chance, with glaring eyes and bloodless cheeks and lips, they forgot it was night; they forgot it was day; they forgot to eat; they forgot to sleep; they forgot everything but the absorbing passion of play and consuming desire for gain. And so they played, and staked, and lost, and swore, and died—both in body and soul.

We are on the high road to become as a nation what they were as a city. And we allow the very agency that is to corrupt and destroy us to remain quietly in our midst, when, if we said no at the ballot-box, it could not stay.

Meanwhile the Louisiana State Lottery lives in serenity and fattens on our moral ruin, and smiles at its own disastrous work. Nero fiddled away as he watched the burning of the city he had himself fired. Like him, the stockholders of this great engine of evil find time to be merry, and, with hosts of friends, promenade and dance and laugh and sing to the strains of delightful music, while the morals of the people are made to rot, and the land is filled with gambling and its consequent wretchedness and want, while they are at ease, and abound—and steadily amass colossal fortunes for themselves. The culminating insult to the intelligence of the people is found in that remarkable statement, made day after day in public print, that "this institution was incorporated for educational and charitable purposes."

Educational! True indeed—educational in the sense of teaching our children to become gamblers.

Charitable! O how charitable to send a few thousand dollars every year to a hospital, to provide for a few nights and days for some man whose fortunes it has engulfed, or for some dying laborer whose hard earnings it has steadily absorbed and appropriated for months and years of his life.

This is equivalent to a man's stealing the fortune of a fellow-creature, occasioning his starvation and death, and then offering to pay the funeral expenses!

Every country or commonwealth seems to have its disgrace. The disgrace of England was the betrayal of the trust of Napoleon, the sore shame of Mississippi is its repudiated State debt, and the disgrace of this State is the Louisiana State Lottery Company.

(To be continued.)

An Interesting Day.

BY F. M. GRACE, D. D.

Tuesday, April 23, was a day to be remembered in the churches of New Orleans. In the morning, at eleven o'clock, the Felicity Street Church was well filled with ladies, with here and there a few gentlemen, mostly ministers, to hear an address from Miss Frances Willard, president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union throughout the world. She was accompanied by Miss Anna Gordon, her private secretary. Miss Willard was introduced by Mrs. Caroline E. Merrick, who is the president of the Louisiana State Society of the Temperance Union, and was supported by Mrs. Dr. Lyons, president of the New Orleans society, and by Mrs. Mary Read Goodale, secretary of the State association. These ladies occupied the platform below the pulpit, which was handsomely decorated with flowers, while the choir in the rear discoursed sweet music for the occasion. The design or purpose of the meeting was to give Miss Willard a public reception by the ladies of this city, and hence her address was mainly of a personal and official character. In response to the evident interest in her presence, as exhibited by the large assembly of prominent ladies from the different churches. There was much hearty feeling and thankfulness in her expressions of regard for her friends in this city and in other cities she had visited in the South.

She told of the meeting just held at Crystal Springs, Miss., and of the evident growth of the cause in that State since her first visit to the South, some eight years ago. But when she came to speak of the cause itself, the way in which it was accepted by different classes of minds among her own sex, there were several touching incidents of a very affecting and pathetic character.

At the conclusion of this address it was announced that Miss Willard would hold a private reception at from two to three o'clock, and would speak before a public audience at Carondelet Street Church at night, while Miss Gordon would address the children at Felicity in the afternoon. The opportunity to meet these ladies was offered at the residence of Mrs. Merrick, and quite a number of gentlemen and ladies repaired promptly at the hour to receive an introduction. Misses Willard and Gordon were assisted in receiving their guests by Mrs. Merrick, Mrs. Lyons, Mrs. Goodale, and Mrs. B. D. Wood. After the formalities of introduction were over, the company repaired to the tables, where an elegant luncheon had been spread for their entertainment.

Miss Gordon's address to the children was illustrated by object lessons, anecdotes, and other arts to entrance the child-like mind. She held in her hand two little bottles, one containing a clear fluid, and the other a colored liquid, and asked the children to guess at their names, and describe the qualities of each. She then poured both into open vessels and offered them to be tasted, proving one to be as palatable as water to a thirsty soul, and the other as bitter as wormwood, sharp as a two-edged sword. The lesson was not far to seek, that the one was nature's beverage, and the other a hateful medicine.

But the address of Miss Willard in the evening was the crowning event of the day. A larger number of gentlemen than ladies being seen in the audience, her remarks were mainly addressed to them. She argued from the lines of political economy, social morality and religion, in favor of her cause. She explained the origin of the woman's movement, and followed the various stages through which it had passed. She also showed its relation to the political parties of the day, and, in conclusion, drew some inferences in regard to woman's suffrage as growing out of this question. Nobody who heard the address could fail to accord the most hearty admiration and sympathy with the spirit of the woman's movement in the temperance cause, or could scarcely avoid reaching the same conclusions with the speaker herself. But the greatest demonstration made on this occasion, in the mind of the hearer, was the fact that woman can speak, that she can reason, that she can think, that she can hold vast audiences of men in rapt attention for more than the ordinary length assigned to public discourses. Here was a frail and tired woman, exhausted by labor, travel, and incessant demands of society, addressing hundreds of cultivated men and women for more than an hour, from the pulpit of one of our most popular churches, without apology, without presumption, and demonstrating that the intellect that wrote in George Eliot, or speaks in Frances Willard, is the same enlightened power that pervades a Shakespeare, or inspires a Milburn or a Gladstone. We rejoiced to see a woman thus speaking in a Methodist Church, herself a Methodist, and we invite attention to the lesson it affords.

Our blessed Lord has taught us that in the higher circle of being there are no relations of sex to be considered, but all are as the angels of heaven. When his gospel has been fully preached and understood in the world, there will be neither Jew nor Greek, bond nor free, male nor female in the church of God. Open the doors to the kingdom of heaven, and let women have an equal chance with men.

Bishop Thompson, of Mississippi.

BY R. ABBEY, D. D.

The Rev. Hugh M. Thompson, Episcopal Bishop of the diocese of Mississippi, has, for reasons inexplicable to me, placed me in circumstances very embarrassing; and how to relieve matters, on grounds of kindly Christian principles, is by no means plain to me. I hardly know how to explain myself without giving, or seeming to give, offense to the Bishop or some of his friends. I will do the best I can. I have not the pleasure of a personal acquaintance with the Bishop; never saw him—though, with my concurrence, he has occupied my pulpit in Bay St. Louis several times.

About January 15 and February 1, last, some friend sent me by mail a copy of The Church News, of those dates respectively. This is an Episcopal paper published in Natchez, my old home. In both these papers the Bishop, in a general episcopal letter, calls attention to a letter of mine in the Nashville Christian Advocate, a short time previously, and charges me, in the plainest and roughest language, with willful and corrupt falsehood and other crimes of very high grade! He clearly intimates that I designedly hastened the death of the Rev. Dr. Hinsdale, an Episcopal minister who had then recently died in Biloxi, Miss. I was astonished with amazement. I had not heard of Dr. Hinsdale until I saw the announcement of his death. What marvel had turned up? The wildest conjecture was well-nigh silent.

On referring to my Nashville letter above alluded to, it will be seen to be a running notice of church matters along this coast, and alluding to the baleful influence of the New Orleans Lottery amongst us. I cited the well-known fact that many years ago it built—that is, its money built—an Episcopal Church in Biloxi, and largely supports it now. This is one of the nefarious "charitable" frauds committed, constantly by that celebrated gambling-house.

Now, it seems the Bishop discovered that this money was not officially appropriated by the "Company" in New Orleans, but only paid by its president out of its money in Biloxi. He, by this play upon words, founds an issue with me! Nothing else but this is within the realm of conjecture.

And forthwith I am denounced as one of the basest criminals running at large! Made a "brutal assault"—"a slanderous attack"—"on the pastor personally," repeated and changed into different forms, and in terms too vulgar to be repeated. Now, what am I to do?

I wrote a plain, mild, soft explanation of my Nashville letter to the editor of the News through a friend in Natchez, and the editor promised to publish it; but, after some weeks, informed my friend that he could not do so, because they did not want controversy in their paper. Such departure from ordinary newspaper courtesy is seldom seen. I suppose the Bishop controls it.

It is, therefore, seen that I am very unceremoniously at the end of my row, so far as that paper is concerned. Accused in a very summary manner of high crimes by a Bishop, and not allowed the poor privilege of an explanation. If the denial of my statement had been made in decent terms, it is the sincerest duplicity without pretense of substantial merit. He claims to speak only of the manner in which the Lottery money was paid for the building of the church. I said nothing about the manner of doing it.

I have waited a reasonable time for the Bishop to explain himself, and he evidently intends not to do so. It seems to me, therefore, that this explanation of the facts is due alike to the Bishop's church and my own.

GULF VIEW, Mississippi.

To the Preachers of the North Mississippi Conference.

DEAR BRETHREN: I was not jesting in asking for those names and addresses in my circular-letter a few weeks ago.

One presiding elder's answer was received in less than a week, and a few brethren have answered; but even some of them failed to answer the main question. Please, brethren, lay down the paper, get your pastor's record, and answer me at once.

WITHHOLDEN THANKS.

BY MARGARET J. PRESTON.

"O heart of mine"—she murmured—"heart of mine!
Shall cold ingratitude thy faith benumb?
Thou hast not wrought for thanks; then why repine,
Because no thanks have come?

"If thy true service mounted in its aim,
No higher than the praise that men bestow
On noble sacrifice, there might be shame
That thou hast missed it so

"But not for selfish gain or low reward,
Did'st thou seek or under shade and sun;
But with the conscious sense, that for thy Lord
This weary work was done.

"He asked no thanks, no recognition nigh,
No tender acceptation of his grace,
No plying tear from one responsive eye,
No answering human face.

"To do God's will—that was enough for Christ,
'Mid griefs that make all agonies look dim;
It shall for thee suffice—it hath sufficed,
As it sufficed for him!

"If no withheld approval damps thy zeal,
When God's pure eye thy hidden motive scans,
As with bared soul thou dost to him appeal—
What needst thou care for man's?

"So, then"—she softly murmured—"heart of mine,
Work on, though still ungrateful lips be dumb;
Some day, in accents rapturous, divine,
Some day, the thanks will come!"

The Sabbath.

Have we a Christian Sabbath? Theoretically the answer comes from all over the land, "We have." But I wish to ask if actions ought not to be consistent with faith. If I have faith in God, ought I not do what he tells me? Practically, the Sabbath is ignored by saint and sinner. Our government does not regard the commands of God. Is not the fourth commandment as imperative as the sixth or eighth? Why, then, has the State of Mississippi, or any other State, the right to discriminate? The law of God says, "Thou shalt not steal;" so does the law of all countries that make any pretense at civilization. The law of God says, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy;" so does the law of the United States, and each State separately, provided it does not interfere with the railroad, or some incorporated enterprise that is dependent upon the people for its support, and claim they must run on Sunday, not to lose more than they make. Any person can see there is no consistency in such law. If it is right to violate one of God's commandments, it is right to violate any or all of them. If not, why not? If it is right for me to steal, why is it not right for me to kill? And if right to kill, then is it not right to violate the Sabbath? And if right to violate these, why not the entire law? I ask again, if it is right for the Illinois Central railroad to violate the Sabbath, is it not right for me? I try as hard as any man, connected with that or any other railroad system, to support the government, and why the partiality?

Who made these laws? Were they men who knew nothing of God? No. They were men who lived under the influence of Christianity, and many were members of the church of God; so it can not be said that the laws of our State were made by men who did not care for the Sabbath, but by men who profess to keep and respect it. What excuses are rendered for this attempt to change God's law? They are numerous. One is, that the freight, express and mail must go, or it will accumulate to that extent that it will overburden the road. Now, this is no excuse at all. During the yellow fever the trains stopped: when there is a wreck they stop from six to twenty-four hours: then to say they can not stop to reverence God and his day, is simple cant. I don't blame the railroad, but I blame the professed followers of God for this state of affairs.

About three years ago a preacher boarded the train on the A., G. S. R. R., one Sunday evening, and, with an air of dignity and seriousness, asked the conductor when they were going to stop running the trains on Sunday. His answer was: "When you Presbyterians, Baptists and Methodists quit riding and shipping on Sunday. The majority of professed Christians demand that the trains shall run on Sunday."

One of the preachers of the Mississippi Conference, an old man who has been preaching a long time, expressed a package of common merchandise on Sunday. It is no uncommon thing to see prominent members of our church, and even preachers, getting and sending mail on Sunday. There is from fifty to seventy-five per cent more traveling done on Sunday than any other day in the week. What good does it do to preach against it when a presiding elder will preach, hold his Conference, then take the train for another appointment on Sunday night, giving as his excuse that he must get round in a hurry, or he will be behind in his work, as though there were not six other days in the week that are as bright, on which the trains run with as much ease and convenience as on Sunday? When our people are educated up to the point of self-denial, they will much prefer losing a day from their labors during the week than have the presiding elder violate the Sabbath, and exercise a sinful influence that he can not easily overcome.

I say, without the fear of successful contradiction, that no preacher will ever be able to overbalance the evil influence of Sunday desecration, by all the preaching he can do, by the use of the train on Sunday. When the church of God and its preachers keep the Sabbath day, then the railroad will be compelled to keep it. By a careful inspection into the business of shipping fruit, we find that Chicago has more respect for the Sabbath than Mississippi and Louisiana. It is no uncommon sight to see a steward, a deacon, or an elder, ship fruit on Saturday night that will keep hundreds of persons from church on Sunday. If the preachers do not stop the use of trains on Sunday, the members will not, and in less than twenty-five years we will have worse than no Sabbath at all. What a power is influence! Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father in heaven, is the advice of our blessed Master. M.

"The Other Way."

MR. EDITOR: In the ADVOCATE, of March 28, Bro. "M" tells you how he numbers and files the ADVOCATE, and his reasons for so doing—all of which is very nice and commendable.

I have taken the Nashville Advocate since 1842, the St. Louis Advocate since 1851, and the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for several years, as also the Evangelist. It has been the rule of my life, so soon as my papers are fully read by the family, to send them out on a mission of love among my neighbors, friends and acquaintances, far and near—sometimes five, ten and fifteen miles—without respect of persons. In this way I have put the Advocates into scores of families where no religious paper was taken: some of whom say they are not able to pay for a paper. Where a family takes but one paper I send them one of another kind, that they may see what is going on in the church. I have seen good results. Sometimes I get a subscriber. I have had them to take my hand with a strong grip and thank me for the Advocates. An old lady said to me that she loved to read the papers so much that she read every word in them.

In this I have tried to cast bread upon the waters; or, if you please, disseminate religious knowledge. I, therefore, forego the personal pleasure that Bro. "M" has for the good of others.

In conclusion, I would ask which is the better way. In age and feebleness I abide. JNO. B. HOLLOMAN.

Administration of Discipline.

Every form of government has its discipline, which is the outward expression of its authority, and is essential to its integrity. It has a two-fold nature. It is conservative and repellent. It holds and attracts every element that is in harmony with its principles and drives away that which is antagonistic. This two-fold nature is essential to the development of the body politic, and the failure to perform these two necessary functions indicates a very unhealthy condition of the constitution.

Of all the forms of church government that have ever been inaugurated, none has a larger draft on the learning and piety of the world than Episcopal Methodism. Her history glitters with the record of grand achievements, and commends her to the world for leadership in the future march against the powers of darkness.

Her discipline has been a potent factor in the success and power she has had in planting the cross among the nations. In proportion as she has adhered to the spirit of the discipline formulated by her founder and developed by the fathers of her subsequent history, she has been irresistible, and we may safely say that her adherence to the repellent element of her discipline, her loyalty to the penal function of her law, has vindicated the true course to be pursued in the treatment of sin. There is no law without penalty, and law is helpless without an executor.

Ultra-conservatism is stagnation, death. It will not arrest an offender nor administer punishment for fear of hurting patronage and becoming unpopular. It is exceedingly careful of numbers, making no practical difference between friends and foes. It thus becomes a friend to the world, which is to become, John tells us, no enemy of God. This is the most fatal step that the church can take. When the church becomes the patron of the world, and compromises her sanctity, authority and dignity, one result is "an uncertain sound" from the pulpit. A practice will not be condemned in the pulpit that the executive laughs and winks at. Discipline becomes a burlesque. Let the lines of discipline fall, and the tongue of the ministry is paralyzed, and the pulpit, instead of being the throne of divine power to the world, becomes the fountain of sensational gush. The only favorable comment we have noticed this year by one of the papers published in Memphis, on any particular sermon, was concerning a sermon preached by a certain pastor of that city on the brilliant future for the material interests of Memphis. His subject was the incident in the boy-life of Christ where he disputed with the doctors, having strayed delinquent with his parents. From this he deduced the wonderful idea that young men should look to Memphis as the place for enterprising youth. How much gospel was there in the sermon? As Dr. Young would say: "Not enough to save—to save—a snow bird." Such prattle is on a level with the piety of the congregation. The pew never rises above the pulpit. This shows the need of a firm executive. If loose indulgence is the surest method of numerical aggrandizement, certainly the Protestant Episcopal, among modern organizations, should be universal. But not so. She numbers only 450,000 in the United States. Her discipline is one-sided, conservative. If I am correctly informed, when once a person is confirmed he can not be expelled. He has a mortgage on heaven forever, regardless of life. Looseness of discipline, catering to the worldly-wise, fashionable and rich; pandering to the popular vices of the day, and, in short, letting down the standard of Christian life, has given rise to a false idea of church authority that she has no power to expell. There is but one true conservatism—that of principles. Whenever we compromise the righteousness of our principles, the cohesive and aggressive element in our constitution is gone.

A church, like an individual, in order to power in the world, must be clean within; and just in proportion as she maintains her spotless purity, will she conquer and maintain her rightful supremacy in the world. The aggregation of heterogeneous elements is self-destructive. All must be in harmony, or else the body suffers.

C. H. OWEN.

Another Scrap of Methodist History.

In the ADVOCATE, of January 10, I see "A Scrap of Methodist History," by Rev. John Pipes, in which he gives the appointments of two districts in Arkansas Conference; and as my name occurs in the list of appointments, I may be able to give some information in regard to the two districts mentioned. These appointments were made at the Arkansas Conference, held at Batesville, Ark. I had been transferred from the Tennessee Conference to the Arkansas, in October, 1839. I did not attend the session of the Arkansas Conference; was assigned to the Little River circuit, in the State of Louisiana—I. N. Hammill, P. E. At this time all the State of Louisiana west of the Mississippi river belonged to the Arkansas Conference.

The appointments referred to by Bro. Pipes were made some time in the month of December, 1839, and, of course, ran through 1840. At the General Conference, which met in May, 1840, all the territory in the State of Louisiana belonging to the Arkansas Conference was transferred to the Mississippi Conference. The preachers on the work all adhered to the Mississippi Conference, and attended the session of that Conference, which was held in Vicksburg. As to the questions propounded by Bro. Pipes, the above statement will show that the proposed place for the next meeting of the Arkansas Conference was now outside of the limits of that Conference and belonged to the Mississippi Conference. The meeting of the next Arkansas Conference was changed (if I mistake not) to Little Rock; so you see the Bethesday Conference was never held. I was personally acquainted with all the preachers except two—Bro. Jones and Bro. Price. If these two are living, I with them are the only survivors of the entire list. By referring to the appointments made at the Mississippi Conference for the years 1840 and '41, you may find the names of a few of the preachers named in Bro. Pipes' list.

I have made the above statement, not supposing it would be of interest to the general reader, but probably it would give Bro. Pipes an idea of what became of the Bethesday Conference, and what became of the preachers on his list. I have been waiting some time, thinking perhaps some one better qualified would give the wanted information; but as I see nothing in the papers in regard to it, I have in this clumsy manner tried to transfer from memory's page a few of the facts connected with our church in this part of the country.

I have written the foregoing sketch to preserve from oblivion a little history, in which the names of some of precious memory is connected. All well, and doing best we can.

The Proposed New College.

MR. EDITOR: While others are suggesting places for the location of the proposed new college, I would like to say that Morton has all the advantages necessary for the location. The health can not be surpassed. Good morals and prohibition a fixture. The site we propose for the location of the college is a high, dry, sandy ridge, on which stands a nice, new, substantial pavilion, sixty feet square, erected for camp-meeting purposes; an abundance of excellent spring water, which is claimed by many to possess medicinal properties.

Morton is situated on the V. and M. R. R., and is nearer the geographical center of the State than any place yet mentioned, and is as accessible as any other place where there is only one railroad. We would like to have our claims investigated before the college is located elsewhere.

From the Work.

FARMERVILLE, LA.

MR. EDITOR: While we have had no special revival services this year, nor made any great or marked advance, we rejoice to be able to say we are still holding the fort, the banner of God's mercy still waves o'er us, and we are busy sowing the seed which we faithfully believe will yield its harvest in due time.

Yesterday was Easter Sunday. After holding divine service at one of my country churches, I drove home, seven miles, while the springing grass, the trees in their new dress of varied green, the bursting blossoms, the birds, and all nature vied in hymning the resurrection power of our risen Lord. My soul seemed to expand and catch the glad cadence; and when at eight P. M. I entered God's house here, freshly and beautifully painted within and without, and beheld the lovely flowers which decked its walls, its sacred altar and pulpit, and listened to the sweetly modulated and harmonious notes of "He is risen," I caught the holy fire, and, after invoking divine aid, I stood and poured forth the old, old story of Jesus and the cross, with Matthew xxviii, 6, as my text. After the solemn words of the benediction had dismissed the waiting throng, as I rode slowly homewards, the night air heavy with the perfume of the China blossoms, I was as one possessed with a delirious joy, for I knew "he was not here, but risen," and, because he was risen, so should I also rise and live with him eternally. O the heavenly joy that filled my soul!

Mr. Editor, the same people whose loving hearts and deft fingers wove wreathes, and artistically arranged vases of flowers to ornament God's sacred shrine, and who almost filled his sanctuary last night, but two weeks ago responded so liberally to the call for Conference assessments, that more was contributed than asked for, and this preacher's heart relieved. Praise the Lord!

We hope to be as successful at our other churches; so there will be no shortage to report at our next Conference. Pray for us.

Yours in faith,

G. A. MANDEVILLE.

CAMERON, LA.

MR. EDITOR: A brief report from this section may interest and be of encouragement in the cause of God to good Methodists elsewhere.

After two months' sojourn, I find Cameron parish a model in all things progressive, moral and religious. Farmers of simple, industrious life, frugal, temperate, honest and hospitable, unto whom has come of late years the Spirit of blessing, and led them to unite into the church of Christ with one accord, and of steadfast endeavor in well-doing.

There are several congregations attending, at central points, the ministry of able and amiable young Bro. Moore and his energetic coadjutor, Bro. Sweeny. The latter has been laboring—literally laboring, for he is a farmer as well as local preacher—for a long season, and in the grand work of a fruitful harvest of many souls, who love him dearly, and are of firm and abiding faith in the promises of the gospel. At Leesburgh, Grand Chenier, Johnsons, Oak Grove, and recently at this point—Bonsuls—there are regular services, attended by an increasing number of converts, and Sabbath-schools thereto of healthy, rosy, happy-looking children. Primitive simplicity, rural worth, purity of mind, being justified and sanctified unto fervor in the love of God that rejoices daily.

Throughout the parish there is no crime, no intemperance. There is no liquor sold anywhere. The Police Jury, all honor to them, will not suffer it. There is no session of court scarce needful; the jail doors swing wide open; the portals of the dwelling houses are on the latch. Anything is safe, even if left upon the roadside, and the sound of swearing or angry language disturbs not the serene atmosphere of a peaceful region.

The seminar schools are fully attended; educational facilities sought for and improving, and the people bid fair to be soon numbered among the most prosperous and enlightened of our State. They erected a school-house in the vicinity of Leesburgh since winter, designed for the establishment of a graded academy—central, and of desirability to all sections of the parish. The writer is in gratified charge thereof. We have services in this neat and commodious building, and school every Sunday. Will soon add an organ and choir, and as soon as possible a good library from your Publishing House.

Bro. Moore is pleased and hopeful in his station; seems to be gaining the hearts and esteem of his several congregations, and will be able, we trust, to present an excellent record to Conference hereafter of God's work in Cameron.

It is a peaceful Sabbath eve as I write; skies of azure, alit with the glory of the sun; around is verdure of the spring and growing crops of bounteous promise; beyond, in curving belt of embracing shore, the waters of the Gulf; fresh the breeze from sea, to health inspire and invigorate our mortal frame; but better far, as blessings from the Master, and peace and love that cometh to us freely from the Lord. Yours in Christ,

A. B. H.

LEESBURGH, Louisiana.

BROOKHAVEN, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: We have just closed a delightful meeting at this place. Bro. James A. Bowen, of Greenville, Miss., was with us, and did most of the preaching, though efficient help was given by other brethren. The church was greatly blessed, and the community at large profoundly impressed. There were thirty-five accessions to our church, and eight or nine came forward and declared their intention of uniting with other churches. There were many conversions, and many Christians were led into more gracious experiences of God's love.

The preaching of Bro. Bowen was clear, forcible and practical, and attended from the very first by the spirit and power of the Holy Ghost. He has greatly endeared himself to our people, and will long be remembered as a faithful and earnest preacher and a pleasant and genial gentleman.

The fourth year of my ministry in this delightful charge promises to be the best. The church is in better working order than ever before, and forty additions to our membership have been made since Conference. All of the Conference assessments, and 20 per cent. in excess, have been secured in cash and good subscriptions.

We were so unfortunate as to have our parsonage destroyed by fire a few weeks ago, but I hope to be able before the year closes to announce that it has been rebuilt.

A. F. WATKINS.

RED BANKS, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: This preacher rejoices because our common Zion is prospering in these parts. Red Banks circuit is small territorially and numerically, but large spiritually. The connectional funds were asked for at Victoria, on April 14, and were secured in cash and "good subscriptions," with four dollars and seventy-five cents excess. The same were asked for at Red Banks, on April 21, and also secured, with three dollars and sixty cents excess. We have but one other appointment, and feel safe in saying the remainder will be secured whenever we make the request for it. Religion that makes its devotees support the institutions of the church will ere long carry the "story of the cross" to the uttermost corners of the earth.

J. T. HOWELL, P. C.

JONESTOWN, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: January 1, 1889, found me entering upon my fifth year of service in the "swamp," as we North Mississippians call the Yazoo Delta. This country is growing rapidly. Immigrants, white and black, throng our lines of travel. And to keep pace with temporal growth the churches here are doing their utmost. Our preachers no longer consider it a hardship to be sent here, and the Greenville district bids fair to be the banner district in Southern Methodism. Our itinerant system has given us an incalculable advantage in this fair land, and the signs are that our church will continue to lead others in the favor of this people. Our worthy presiding elder is full of zeal and energy in leading the hosts of God; and his energy and tact and skillful leadership all proclaim the providential wisdom which led to his appointment to his present field.

Many of our churches here in "the bottom" have been blest with the labors of that strong man, the Rev. J. J. Jones. Bro. Jones has visited numbers of our churches, and all have been blest with his efforts. A strong, zealous, earnest, bold man, he denounces sin with absolute fearlessness. A tender, loving, warm-natured, big-hearted man, he binds men to him with bands of steel. With the gift of simplicity, he interests the aged man, the tender child, the white man, the negro. Thinly informed about the Bible, both as to its historical facts, its grand principles, and its spirit, his work seems to be enduring. May God bless him and his labors!

Good reports come to us not only from all parts of our district, but from the entire bounds of our Conference.

Come to see us in our bachelor's ranch at Jonestown, Mr. Editor.

N. G. AUGUSTUS.

HAZLEHURST, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: The work of the church is cut out, and enough has been done to give promise of success throughout the current year.

The light of our second Quarterly Conference, which was held on April 13, revealed some gratifying facts. The church is thoroughly organized. We have two missionary societies in successful operation. The assessments, which are all in excess of any previous year, have been paid in full to date, and ample provisions made for meeting them as they fall due in the future. Members are being added from time to time. A general forward tendency is manifest. Church Conferences are held, and the sacrament of the Lord's Supper administered as the Discipline requires. A hopeful expectation of better things in the future pervades the mind and heart of the church.

Our people are delighted with Bro. William B. Lewis, their presiding elder, both as a preacher and a presiding officer. "The right man in the right place," is the universal verdict. You will hear of a fine work being done throughout the Brookhaven district under his wise, aggressive, consecrated leadership.

J. T. NICHOLSON.

SCRANTON, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: We have had a series of profitable meetings at Orange Grove, Jackson county. On March 31 I baptized two applicants for church membership. Our Quarterly Conference began on April 6. Dr. West, our presiding elder, remained with us until Wednesday. Nightly services were held until Sunday, April 14. Congregations steadily increasing; sixteen persons were admitted to church membership. Some of them had been baptized into the Roman Catholic organization, and were baptized again, not so much into the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, as into Christ. Most, if not all, of these converts have found peace with God, and have entered upon a new life. The church, congregation and community were interested and profited. We thank God and take courage. Truly your brother,

H. JONES.

WOODVILLE DISTRICT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: I have held six Quarterly Conferences on my second round. When Ques. 13 is asked—"What is doing for the cause of education?"—I take occasion to urge the endowment of Centenary College, and have succeeded in taking endowment notes amounting to eight hundred dollars. I hope other presiding elders are meeting with success in this line. Centenary's prospect is brightening. Three persons have been licensed to preach on this round—two of them students at Centenary. I think the ADVOCATE must be succeeding well in this district from the report of the preachers. I suppose you have plenty communications for the hopper.

Our District Conference is to be held at Anite City, La., May 16-20.

The Devils and the Herd of Swine.

As Prof. Huxley almost challenges me to state what I think of that story, I have only to say that I fully believe it, and moreover that Prof. Huxley, in this very article, has removed the only consideration which would have been a serious obstacle to my belief. If he were prepared to say, on his high scientific authority, that the narrative involves a contradiction of established scientific truth, I could not but defer to such a decision, and I might be driven to consider those possibilities of interpolation in the narrative, which Prof. Huxley is good enough to suggest to all who feel the improbability of the story too much for them. But Prof. Huxley expressly says: "I admit I have no a priori objection to offer. * * * For anything I can absolutely prove to the contrary, there may be spiritual things capable of the same transmigration, with like effects. * * * So I declare, as plainly as I can, that I am unable to show cause why these transferable devils should not exist." Very well, then, as the highest science of the day is unable to show cause against the possibility of the narrative, and as I regard the gospels as containing the evidence of trustworthy persons who were contemporary with the events narrated, and as their general veracity carries to my mind the greatest possible weight, I accept their statement in this, as in other instances. Prof. Huxley ventures "to doubt whether at this present moment any Protestant theologian, who has a reputation to lose, will say that he believes the Gadarene story." He will judge whether I fall under his description; but I repent that I believe it, and that he has removed the only objection to my believing it.—From "Agnosticism," by Rev. Dr. Henry Wace, in the Popular Science Monthly.

LESSON VI.—May 12.

THE ANOINTING AT BETHANY.

Mark xiv, 1-9.

GOLDEN TEXT.—She hath done what she could.—Mark xiv, 8.

TIME.—A. D. 29; Saturday before the cross.

PLACE.—Bethany.

PARALLEL PASSAGES.—Matt. xxvi, 6-16; John xii, 1-11.

1. The passover—The festival of the passover was celebrated to preserve among the Jews the memory of their liberation from Egyptian servitude, and of the safety of their first-born in that night when the first-born of the Egyptians perished. The name passover was given to the feast because the Lord passed over the houses of the Israelites without slaying their first-born, while the Egyptians were cut off. It was celebrated seven days; namely, from the fifteenth to the twenty-first of the month Abib or Nisan (April). (Exodus xii, 15-20; xxiii, 15.) During all this period the people ate unleavened bread, and hence the festival was sometimes called the feast of unleavened bread. Chief priests and ... scribes—The acting high-priest, Joseph, known among the people as "Caiaphas," "the Oppressor," was the soul of the movement against Jesus; for his memorable words, "Why not this one man die—rather than the nation perish?" had first given definite expression and formal sanction to the idea of putting him to death. The meeting could not, however, come to any fixed plan, for fear of a popular rising. No more could be done than watch, and take advantage of the course of events. By craft—By guile, deceit, or in some secret manner, so that the people would not know it.

2. Not on the feast day—Not merely on the feast day—that is, the day on which the passover was sacrificed and eaten, but at any time during the festal season, which lasted seven days. On these occasions Jerusalem was thronged with pilgrims. An uproar of the people—The rulers feared a popular rising on the part of those numerous friends who had come from a distance with him, and of whom they did not feel themselves masters, as they did of the population of Jerusalem.

3. Being in Bethany—The narrative is given out of its proper order on account of its connection (as indicated in St. John's record) with the act of the traitor. Simon the leper—Of the man so described we know nothing beyond the fact thus mentioned. He lived at Bethany, and was neighbor, perhaps relative, of the family of Lazarus and Mary. John informs us that at this feast Lazarus was present. Sat at meat—We learn from St. John that the sisters had made him a feast, at which Martha served, while Lazarus reclined at the table as one of the guests. Came a woman—John informs us that she was Mary, the sister of Lazaras. The other evangelists are less explicit, as they say but little about the family of Lazarus. It seems as if Mary was not at the feast, but entered unexpectedly. An alabaster box—At Alabastron, in Egypt, there was a manufactory of small vases for holding perfumes, which were made from a stone found in the neighboring mountains. The Greeks gave to these vases the name of the city from which they came, calling them alabastrons. Ointment of spikenard ... very precious—That is, of ointment of much value; that was rare, and difficult to be obtained. Mark and John (xii, 3) say that it was ointment of spikenard. In the original it is nard. It was procured from an herb growing in the Indies, chiefly obtained from the root—though sometimes also from the bark. It was liquid, so as easily to flow when the box or phial was open, and was distinguished particularly for an agreeable smell. Brake the box—As they sat at meat, Mary came behind with an alabaster vase of the costliest unguent, and crushing the seal upon the mouth, poured the whole contents over his head. Poured it on his head—They were accustomed chiefly to anoint the head or hair. John says that she poured it on the feet of Jesus, and wiped them with her hair. There is, however, no contradiction. She probably poured it both on his head and his feet. Matthew and Mark having recorded the former, John, who wrote his gospel in part to record events omitted by them, relates that the ointment was also poured at the feet of the Savior. To pour ointment on the head was common. To pour it on the feet was an act of distinguished humility and attachment to the Savior, and, therefore, deserved to be particularly recorded.

4. Some that had indignation—The murmuring began with Judas Iscariot, and his spirit of murmuring infected some of the others, simple Galileans little accustomed to such luxury. Why was this waste—Bengel remarks that the word (literally, perdition) is the same as that by which Judas himself is called. (John xvii, 12.) Though she is no casuist herself, no debater of cases of conscience, there are abundance of such among the Lord's male disciples present, Judas among them, and they have more reasons, a great many, to offer than she, poor child of love, has ever thought of.

5. It might have been sold—Mark and John say for three hundred pence; that is, for about forty dollars. This, to them, was a large sum. The wretch who is just going to sell the only Son of God for thirty pence (pieces of silver) values at three hundred a little ointment, perfume and vapor. Given to the poor—There are thousands who think that the money given for the gospel had better be bestowed in mere temporal supplies, forgetting that it is much better to bestow upon men those principles which will make them wise, good and industrious than to give them supplies which will leave them as wicked and thriftless as ever. Could the faith that Mary showed in the Redeemer inspire all the world, the poor would be easily taken care of. Murmured against her—Mark says they murmured against her. There was also an implied murmuring against the Savior for suffering it to be done. The murmuring was, however, without cause. It was the property of Mary. She had a right to dispose of it as she pleased, answerable not to them, but to God. Like other men, Christians have a right to dispose of their property as they please, answerable only to God.

6. Let her alone—The language of sharp rebuke. Christ was indignant at the hypocrisy which made a pretended consideration of the poor an excuse for attacking and complaining an act of love toward himself. Why trouble ye her—This indicates that Mary was herself abashed and downcast by the criticism of the twelve. Perhaps, as Maurice says, "she could not herself have answered Judas Iscariot's complaining question." Wrought a good work on me—The Greek adjective implies something more than "good"—a noble and honorable work. Christ measured the moral quality of the act by the motive, the disciples by its seeming utility.

7. The poor with you always—It was right that they should regard the poor. It was a plain precept of religion, and our Savior would not prohibit it, but do all that was possible to excite his followers to the duty. But every duty should be done in its place, and the duty then incumbent was that which Mary had performed. They would afterward have abundant occasion to show their regard for the poor. Me ye have not always—He alludes here to his dying, and his going away to heaven. He would be their Friend and their Savior, but he would not be bodily present with them always, so that they could show kindness in this way to him. Must have made the traitor feel that he was in the presence of One who read the secrets of his heart.

8. She hath done what she could—She does not love him on debate, or serve him by contrived reasons, but she is so drunk up in his person, so totally captivated by the wondrous something felt in him, that she has, and can have, no thought other than to love him, and do every thing out of her love. To bathe his blessed head with what most precious ointment she can get, and bending low to put her fragrant homage on his feet, and wind them about in the honors of her hair, is all that she thinks of, and, be it wise or unwise, it is done. Whereupon it turns out that she has met her Lord's future as no other one of his disciples had been able: anointed his brow for the thorns, his feet for the nails, that both thorns and nails may draw blood in the perfume of at least one human creature's love. And this she has done, you perceive, because her life is wholly in Christ's element; tempered to him more fitly and totally than it could be by her understanding. Come aforehand to anoint my body to the burying—Anciently bodies were anointed and embalmed for the purpose of the sepulcher. Jesus said that this was really a preparation for that burial, a fitting him in a proper manner for the tomb. It is worthy of note that this was all the anointing which our Lord's body received from the hand of Mary or her female friends, inasmuch as he had risen before they reached the sepulcher with their spices. "Mary," as if she knew I was soon to die, has chosen the strongest way she could of showing how much she loved me. She has done for me, as her Teacher, Messiah, and Friend, while I still live, what she would soon have had to do to my dead body—she has embalmed me for the grave. What remains will do for the day of my burial."

9. Wheresoever this gospel shall be preached—The words here show that our Lord expected his gospel to be diffused throughout the world. The fact that the mention of this deed of Mary was to be a memorial shows that our Lord did not expect, as some say, that the world would soon terminate, but that the gospel should be preached through future ages and to distant generations. For a memorial of her—In the act of love done to him she has erected to herself an eternal monument, as lasting as the gospel, the eternal Word of God. From generation to generation this remarkable prophecy of the Lord has been fulfilled; and even we, in explaining this saying of the Redeemer, of necessity contribute to its accomplishment.

Missionary.

Letter from Japan.

MR. EDITOR: I am now in Tokushima, laboring among this people, thousands of whom know nothing of the true God nor of the love of Jesus, but are blindly bowing down to wood and stone, the works of their hands. I have been here nearly a month, and the Lord has greatly blessed my work. There are now many earnest inquirers after truth and light. Many never before heard of salvation through Christ Jesus. Every evening my rooms are almost crowded with men and women earnestly studying the Bible and engaging in earnest prayer for God's blessing. Already some have been greatly blessed and weep for joy, and are working earnestly to bring others to Christ for salvation. Among the number are two old ladies—one sixty-six years of age, and the other over seventy. Day before yesterday one man, whose wife has been greatly blessed, came to see me, and when he returned home, his wife told me last night that he threw away every idol he had in his house, and said, "From this time forth I will serve the living God." One entire family has determined to serve God. In this family one daughter has been converted, and is very happy, and the influence of her life the past two weeks is felt in all the neighborhood where she lives. She has been instrumental in bringing many to Christ for salvation. I expect to return to Kobo in about ten days. This is the largest city on the large island of Shikoku. Surely the Lord is working among these people, and many will yet praise his holy name.

I have just had a letter from one of our native Christians of the lower end of this same island, more than a hundred and fifty miles from here, at Najima, which is also in my district. He writes me in reference to the death of one of our native Christians. He writes: "I am glad to write you about our work in Najima, and especially about Bro. Nishimaro, who died on the second of this month. All those who saw him before his death say he was filled with unspeakable peace and joy, even in the time of his greatest sickness. He spoke to his father and mother and to his friends, and said, 'I have no fear of death, and I have no ear to leave this earth, because I believe in Jesus Christ my Savior.' These words show that he had great and strong faith in his Savior. Many unbelievers who visited him were astonished, and felt that unless they believed on Christ Jesus they could not have true joy and be saved. On this account many unbelievers have turned and are seeking the Lord."

This is, indeed, good news, and we thank God for such a glorious testimony for him. Pray for us that God will give me strength and the help of his Holy Spirit, that I may be able to lead many of these people to Christ for salvation. This young man died on my birthday, the sixtieth birthday, thirty-five years of which has been spent in trying to lead the heathen to the Lord Jesus for salvation.

Ever your brother in Christ,

J. W. LAMBUTH.

Temperance Notes.

The closing of the Civil War turned out of employment more men, a dozen to one, than will the destruction of the saloon. The saloon is an enterprise devoted to the destruction of life and property and, like the Civil War, it will be an occasion for rejoicing when its devastations shall cease, no matter how many men should lose a place in its work of ruin.

The evils of the tobacco habit only begin to be felt long after they have become incurable and the mischief is already accomplished. Difficult as it may be to break the chains of the inebriate or of the opium-eater, those which pinion the confirmed smoker are capable of infinitely greatly resistance.

Good news from Chili, a country famed for its use of the intoxicating chica! Conception has a Woman's Christian Temperance Union established in February which, although the first temperance organization ever effected in that city, has aroused great interest. A reading-room has already been proposed, and it is expected that a Loyal Temperance Legion will soon be started.

The New York Pioneer says that 40,000 tickets at $2 each were sold for the annual reception of the Wine, Liquor and Beer Dealers' Association of New York City.

Of all our industrial classes one man in twenty is unfitted by the liquor traffic for steady and continuous work; unfitted, indeed, for any work at all.

Prof. Satterlee, of Athens, Tenn., reports to the Union Signal that during the last year he has raised nearly $50,000 as endowment for the chair of scientific temperance in the college for which he labors.

Mr. R. P. Clarkson, editor of the Iowa State Register, says that Des Moines has, at least, twenty-five per cent. more stores than she had when cursed by saloons, and that her personal property has increased in value by millions of dollars.

The W. C. T. U. at Tahlequah, capital of the Cherokee Nation, is holding monthly entertainments and public meetings, visiting jails, presenting the pledge, and in many other ways keeping the temperance question constantly before the people.

The Illinois Senate has passed a bill to protect the young from the wickedness of those who, for greed of gain, would pollute life at its very fountains. The bill provides that it shall be unlawful for any person to sell, lend, give away, show, or have in his possession with intent to sell, give away, or show, or to advertise, or otherwise offer for loan, gift, or distribution to any minor child any book, pamphlet, magazine, newspaper, story paper, or other printed paper devoted to the publication or principally made up of criminal news, police reports or accounts of criminal deeds, or pictures and stories of deeds of bloodshed, lust or crime.

A good appetite is essential to good health, and loss of appetite indicates something wrong. Hood's Sarsaparilla creates and sharpens the appetite, assists the digestive organs and regulates the kidneys and liver. Take Hood's Sarsaparilla this season. Sold by druggists.

The saloon, the gambling-hell, the brothel-hell all go together, and may my right arm fall from its socket, and my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth, if ever I vote for high license of any kind.—Joseph Cook.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is a peculiar medicine. It is carefully prepared from Sarsaparilla, Dandelion, Mandrake, Dock, Pipsissewa, Juniper Berries, and other well-known and valuable vegetable remedies, by a peculiar combination, proportion and process, giving to Hood's Sarsaparilla curative power not possessed by other medicines. It effects remarkable cures where other preparations fail.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is the best blood purifier before the public. It eradicates every impurity, and cures Scrofula, Salt Rheum, Boils, Pimples, all Humors, Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Sick Headache, Indigestion, General Debility, Catarrh, Rheumatism, Kidney and Liver Complaints, overcomes that tired feeling, creates an appetite, and builds up the system.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Has met peculiar and unparalleled success at home. Such has become its popularity in Lowell, Mass., where it is made, that while neighborhoods are taking it at the same time, Lowell druggists sell more of Hood's Sarsaparilla than of all other sarsaparillas or blood purifiers. Sold by druggists. $1; six for $5. Prepared only by C. I. HOOD & CO., Apothecaries, Lowell, Mass.

Briefs.

Mrs. E. C. Harlbatt, the talented corresponding secretary of the Mississippi Women's Christian Temperance Union, presented a comprehensive and encouraging report of its work during the past year at its convention held at Crystal Springs. We regret that want of space compels us to forego the pleasure of publishing her graphic "pen pictures."

The Christian Advocate (New York) says:

The Methodist Episcopal Church has twelve theological schools: the Boston School of Theology, Boston, Mass.; Drew Theological Seminary, Madison, N. J.; Garrett Biblical Institute, Evanston, Ill.; Centenary Biblical Institute, Baltimore, Md.; Maclay College of Theology, San Fernando, Cal.; Gammon School of Theology, Atlanta, Ga.; Swedish Theological Seminary, Evanston, Ill., and five others located in foreign countries. These institutions are endowed to the amount of $1,256,000, and last year 833 young men studied theology within their halls. The denomination has also 56 colleges and universities, besides a large number of other schools and seminaries; the property thus devoted to the cause of education being valued at $10,083,725, with endowment amounting to $11,079,682, and students numbering last year 32,277.

Rev. J. A. Parker, our pastor at Baton Rouge, La., writes to the Ruston Caligraph as follows:

The Louisiana State Lottery, and the Louisiana State saloons—the one is no less the authorized institution of the State than the other, for the State is the foster-mother of both as the law now stands—are going to "pool" their assets and influence against the people, for the purpose of perpetuating the lottery fraud and perpetrating another fraud by buying up the Sunday law, and securing its repeal.

The fact of this combination will, I have no doubt, be stoutly denied, and those who have exposed it will be as stoutly denounced. But when in New Orleans a few days ago, I satisfied myself that there is such a combination.

From this all good people everywhere will see the necessity of working together for the overthrow of this monstrous iniquity.

We find the following going the rounds of the religious press:

Bishop Keener, writing to the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE, raises the danger signal. Hear what he says: "Now, what I wish to remark is: Almost everybody imagines that he can teach a school, run a country store or publish a paper. I thought so once, but after more than thirty years of observation in this line, and some experience, it now distresses me to see one attempting to start a new paper. If to live by the skin of one's teeth; if to have nightly sweats; if to see all things in the light of an editorial paragraph; if to make all correspondents, sooner or later, cool friends or active opponents; if to grow empty year by year and day by day until you feel—in fact, know—that you are to everybody, except to your own immediate family, 'as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal;' if this is a thing to be sought after, then turn editor or publisher of an Advocate, either or both, as you may have opportunity."

We do not know how long ago this appeared in our paper, but we know that the veil has been lifted enough for us to see that we are the Bishop's successor in editorial tribulations; and such tribulations do not always work patience!

The Spirit and the Word.

The Apostle Paul says, "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God." The Apostle Peter says, "Holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." These apostles both refer to the "Scripture" which they had at that time—namely, the Old Testament; but the church now applies these assertions to both the Old and New Testaments. She teaches emphatically that what is now called the Bible is the work of the Holy Spirit, operating through the several writers of that book to give the world a revelation of his own mind and will. We believe the church everywhere teaches this. There are some inferences to which we call attention.

It is universally conceded and believed that we are under the dispensation of the Spirit. He is the administrator of the affairs of the kingdom of Christ. We are under the authority of this kingdom. Our highest well-being as citizens of this kingdom depends upon the harmony between our lives and the laws of this kingdom. These laws are the verbal expressions of the mind and will of the Spirit, who is their administrator. If we find in these laws anything "hard to be understood," the Spirit alone can explain his own mind and will. If we would read any book understaudiugly, we must know the language the writer employs, and we must get as nearly as we can the frame of miud which possessed him when he wrote. The Holy Spirit, who indited the Word by means of "holy men of God," alone can explain its meaning. To rightly understand the Word, there is need of the teaching of the same Spirit who inspired the Word. As the Eternal Word and the Eternal Spirit are inseparable, so the written Word and the Spirit given are inseparable. If we seek the meaning of the Word without seeking it through the teaching of the Spirit, we will fail to learn it aright. We may bring all our learning and wisdom, and apply them with all the force of vigorous intellects to the study of the Word, and end in a mere human understanding of it, which will not add to our spiritual strength or growth. For this very reason there is a great deal of reading and preaching of the Word that amounts to nothing as far as spiritual life is concerned. The reader and the preacher, by not seeking the instruction of him who inspired the Word, have separated the Spirit from the Word, and consequently shorn the Word of its power. By such a process the Divine Word becomes as weak as any other word, its very life being taken away.

Our Savior speaks thus: "It is the Spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing: the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit and they are life." In the same connection, Peter said to the Lord: "Thou hast the words of eternal life." Paul said to the Corinthians: "The letter killeth, but the Spirit giveth life." If these Scriptures show anything, it is the inseparableness of the Spirit and the Word. So it is of no use to seek the teaching of the Spirit apart from the Word, and it is no better to seek the meaning of the Word without the teaching of the Spirit. The one leads to a mere human understanding of the Word, and the other leads to fanaticism. In the parable of the sower our Lord compares the Word to a seed. A good seed has life, a hidden life, but it needs a suitable soil and sun and moisture to develop it. If these are wanting, the life of the seed lies dormant. The Word also has a hidden life, but that Word may lie dormant in the understanding and its life will never appear. It needs some kind of quickening influence. Here we see, in part at least, the meaning of our Lord when, in calling attention to the spirit and life of his words, he prefaced it with the remark: "It is the Spirit that quickeneth, the flesh profiteth nothing." So we may hold the teachings of the Word in our understandings and hold them intelligently, and yet know little or nothing of the life of the Word of which our Lord speaks so earnestly. So the Spirit without the Word is powerless to work, because he is deprived of his chosen instrument; and the Word apart from the Spirit is without power, because the quickening energy of the Divine life is wanting. If, then, we would reach that condition of Christian life and work where we can be and do the most to meet our responsibilities, we must "be filled with the Spirit," and "let the Word of Christ dwell in us richly." If we seek as much of the Word as of the Spirit, and as much of the Spirit as of the Word, both are honored, and the blessing of eternal life and efficient service will be ours.

"A Good Case, Bishop."

We have just finished a very appreciative article, on "Church and Ministers," in the Standard, in which the writer very well sustains his theme: "The church is richer in her ministers than she thinks." Among other good things, the writer draws these two familiar pictures. Speaking of a certain class of preachers, he says:

Give them full credit for their magnetism, push, versatility, courage, ability to work over and serve up the thoughts of the thoughtful. Freely admit that the high places they occupy fairly belong to them. Nevertheless, concede to them only that which does fairly belong to them. If their sermons are printed, "size them up" justly. Do not say that they are meaty, discriminating, filled with seed-thoughts, thick set with principles, conformable to wisdom and good taste; when just these qualities they conspicuously lack. You read their sermons, and wish they had not been printed. Yet you can see that they must have been forcible when delivered as only their authors could deliver them; and you are convinced that their only embodiment should have been in sound.

Then follows this picture, which we have all seen many times:

But next Sunday, in some country church, you will listen to a sermon by a minister, old or young, preaching for six hundred dollars a year. You went to the church under compulsion of duty, expecting to be bored. Lo! you are instructed, charmed, amazed. How deep and rich and spiritual the thought is! out of what unfathomable pools of prolonged and profound reflection it is drawn! how exquisitely balanced is the discourse, how lucid and graceful is the diction! Of such ministers as this the church has an unsuspected host. Some of them are young men, so unobtrusive that they may never appear in the high places of Zion. Others are old men, men once in the rush and roar of life, once widely known and praised; but now of their own choice withdrawn into comparative seclusion that they may do more thinking and better work.

The last five words in the above paragraph tell out the secret of many a patriarch's successful termination of his ministerial career.

Here is another picture not so familiar, but which we trust will be multiplied by hundreds in the next few years of church history:

Seven miles away from me, among the hills, in a little village where the air is never startled by the shriek of the locomotive, lives and labors a young minister. He is a thorough scholar, graduated from one of our noblest colleges and from one of our noblest seminaries. He is as modest as a girl. He is sound and orthodox, but he reads widely and in all directions. He takes away with him to his den my books and magazines—"Briggs' Messianic Prophecy," the two remarkable sermons of the late Prof. Greene, of Oxford (the Mr. Grey of "Robert Elsmere"), Trumbull's "Blood Covenant," the Andover Reviews. He reads slowly, thoughtfully, discriminatingly. I preach before that young man with fear and trembling. I can see him knit his brows when I speak rashly. I get more in one hour of talk with that young man than I could get in a year of talk with some ministers on whose lips the crowd hangs in ecstasy.

That young man is he of whom the presiding elder will say, "A good case, Bishop." Do you know any such? We know several!

Prohibition Convention.

A CALL TO THE PROHIBITIONISTS OF MISSISSIPPI.

At a meeting held on April 17 the State Prohibition Executive Committee instructed me, as its chairman, to call a State convention at Jackson, Miss., on July 2, next.

The policy proper to be adopted by the convention was discussed, and there was entire agreement in the opinion that the time has come when we should make a forward movement. Local option has accomplished its mission. It was never intended to be the goal of our efforts. It has secured a general agitation of the temperance question, and through this agitation the public mind has been educated to a clearer perception of the enormities of the liquor traffic and a better understanding of the principles involved in prohibitory legislation. Through its instrumentality a very large area has been redeemed from the curse of the open dram-shop, and wherever this has been done, the beneficent results of prohibition have been demonstrated on a scale far surpassing the expectations of its most sagacious friends. The reverses we have sustained in two or three counties, instead of weakening, have actually strengthened our cause. Every town which having had prohibition has gone back to license, high or low, furnishes daily object-lessons of infinite value to our cause. We are far stronger to-day in numbers, in influence and in resources than ever before. Step by step we have advanced until to-day the prohibitionists constitute a very decided majority of the white population of the State. A forward movement is, therefore, called for by "the logic of events." There is not only an expectation of it, but a clamor for it. What that forward movement shall be will be determined by the people in convention assembled. This convention will, no doubt, be the largest in our history. Let the prohibitionists of the State, regardless of religious creed or partisan affiliation, "put their heads together" and send their very best men to the convention. We hope every county will be represented. "In a multitude of counselors there is wisdom," and wisdom is needed in order to give proper shape to the forward movement which is inevitable.

Old-Time Preaching.

Dr. John E. Edwards, of Virginia, one of the oldest pastors in our church, thus discourses in the Raleigh Christian Advocate of the preachers and preaching fifty years ago.

Speaking of preaching, I have been thinking of late of the changes that have taken place in the Methodist pulpit—preachers and preaching—in the last fifty or sixty years. The advances in Methodism, in point of numbers and wealth, and in the progress of education, together with the wonderful transformations wrought by discovery, and inventive genius; all these, and a hundred other things that time would fail to mention, have had the effect, gradually, and almost insensibly to work changes in the preachers and the preaching as we now have it in the Methodist pulpit. A Methodist preacher of to-day does not look, nor dress, nor talk, nor preach like the Methodist preacher back of fifty years ago. I do not say that the preacher of the present is not as good, and as sincere, and as consecrated as the preacher of a half-century ago; but I do say that, in very many respects, he is unlike the Methodist preacher of the times referred to. Preaching is changed, it may be for the better; but it is wanting in the unction, and earnestness, and the cogency of appeal to sinners, and in the pointed, fearless, faithful warnings to church members against backsliding, and against worldliness and worldly conformity. The Methodist pulpit of fifty years ago swayed a moral influence over church members that it does not at this time. The preaching at the time under notice was less formal and didactic than that which prevails in our day. There was more of the hortatory element—more of impassioned, spontaneous eloquence—more that appealed to the emotive department of human nature—more, too, as I think, that was effective in leading to immediate results. The sermon, as a rule, was followed by the invitation of penitents to the altar. Even at the Sunday morning service, on the stations, the "mourners" were invited, and not unfrequently there were conversions following the sermon. Every preacher was an "evangelist" in the best sense of the term.

Jury Service.

Dr. Gray, of the Interior, has been on the "panel," and thus discourses thereof:

Caught on the jury—the second time in two years—two weeks of settling disputes which could easily have been adjusted if men would consult their common sense more and their vindictive passions less. One man sold another a lot of canned goods not up to sample, and so a panel of thirty busy men had to be kept dancing attendance in order that a dozen "impartials" might be found to decide upon the merits of the peaches and tomatoes. Another case was a disagreement about the quality of a lot of beans. Any one of half a dozen of the jurors would have been willing to buy the beans and dump them into the lake, if that would release him from the jury service of two weeks' duration. Another was a case of a child injured by a runaway horse and buggy. There was lying upon oath, on both sides, so much of it that it was very difficult to discover the truth. Two doctors contradicted each other on a matter of fact in which there was no possibility of mistake. One of the two committed perjury, reiterated it and stuck to it. Two witnesses swore they saw the horse running, carrying a hitching-weight at the end of his hitch-strap, along with him. Two swore that the strap had been put through a ring in the pavement, that it was broken and the weight left at the place where the horse was hitched. They each and all swore positively and with reiteration—two contradicting two. The jury on the first ballot divided evenly, six to six—one-half of the jury believing one-half of the witnesses, and the others believing the other half. Then the work in hand lay in estimating the probabilities of the location of the two lies, the one lie between the doctors and the other between the hostlers. It was impossible to award a verdict with any secure feeling that justice was being done. Part of the jury had no experience in weighing evidence. One man said he looked over the other jurors and made up his mind to vote with the party which he thought would be the most stubborn. That is legal and jury justice!

There are about one thousand Christian Chinamen connected with the Congregational Churches of California and Oregon. They contribute about $2,500 for home mission work and have organized a foreign missionary society, and with $1,400 as a starter, have sent two missionaries, one a Chinaman, back to China to do work there.

The Sunday morning inspection in the army and the navy, and the Sunday evening dress parade, are to be abolished, it is said, by a special order from the President himself, as commander-in-chief of both branches of the military service.

Notes.

That was a good criticism of a certain kind of preaching when the Critic said: "Exhortation is good for a time, but it needs thought behind it."

Almost anybody can frame any number of excuses for not giving to the cause of our Lord; but what the church needs and what the world needs is for somebody to discover men and women who are fertile in framing excuses for giving to that cause!

These words from a modern missionary are worthy of repetition and thought: "I am just beginning to realize that God's promises are not mere words, written for the instruction of our minds, or for repetition with our lips, but certainties to go by; and the assurance of one of them is better than the presence of an army."

Bob Burdette, the Baptist deacon, says this about excuses for not going to church:

There isn't one man in a hundred who could go on the witness stand and give, under oath, the same reasons for not going to church that he gives to his family on Sunday morning.

Brother, is that you?

Can you decide whether there is real ignorance in the following, or whether it is a thrust at people who promise and never perform?

A Cambridge, England, theologue, when he told the story of the Good Samaritan, after reciting the good man's promise to the host, "And when I come again I will repay thee," wound up with: "This he said, knowing he should see his face no more."

This, from the Independent, hits Bro. Talmage pretty hard:

Dr. Talmage says the church, if it would do its duty, could convert the world in ten years. It has the men and the money. Perhaps so; but it must turn over a new leaf of generosity very soon if it is going to undertake so great and speedy a task. The Brooklyn Tabernacle last year, with 4,126 members reported, gave $151 to home missions, and $138 to foreign missions.

Some of our exchanges have like embarrassments with us. Hear the Congregationalist:

Our church news editor labors at times under the embarrassment of an over-supply of intelligence, which requires considerable pruning in order to fit the limits of our columns.

Frequent short reports are better than long ones at greater intervals. The short ones are sure to be published and as sure to be read.

It is one of the most difficult things in the world to establish on a paying basis any newspaper which appeals to the moral side of humanity. As a rule, religious newspapers sink one or two small fortunes before they come to be self-supporting. Some of the good brethren who have the editorial bee buzzing in their bonnets will be stung one of these days.—Standard.

Is it an easy matter to establish anything on a "paying basis" that "appeals to the moral side of humanity?" Is not the very difficulty in such cases a good thing, anyhow?

The progress of the "teetotal idea" has recent happy illustration in the fact that the largest and most important line of steamers running to New Orleans, the Harrison Line of twenty-two steamships, has just abandoned the "grog-ration," and forbidden any liquor supply from this time forth. The result of this can scarcely be realized, not only for its moral effect throughout the world among shipping communities, but its direct influence in the homes of the 750 men employed by the line itself.

We read that the Louisiana State Lottery was incorporated in 1868 "for educational and charitable purposes." There are, no doubt, educational influences very wide-reaching in the Louisiana State Lottery, but we deplore the sort of education that is given the young men of that fair State by legalized gambling—the gambling of the State in behalf of the public weal.—Southwestern Methodist.

The worst part of the "educational influences" referred to above is, that they reach far beyond the limits of Louisiana. Those influences are felt in every State and Territory in the Union, and even beyond. In this connection the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE asks the question: "Who will rise up with me against the evil-doers?"

Say what we will about the Salvation Army and its methods of work, the people managing its affairs are putting to shame the churches in some important branches of Christian work. Read this from the Missionary Review:

Marshall Booth, in reviewing his forces at Chicago, said that within twelve years 1,000,000 men and women have been rescued from the slums and transformed into self-supporting, sober, Christian citizens by its work. He is prepared to establish at once in London ten more Rescue Homes, for 300 girls (which will enable the Army, by the help of God, to rescue at least another thousand a year), and also to establish ten food and shelter depots, six for women and children only, and four for men, with a capacity for 1,000 beds per night for women, and 500 for men and 200,000 meals per week, or at the rate of 547,500 beds and 10,400,000 meals per annum. He appeals for $75,000 to meet the expense of fitting up and furnishing the said twenty buildings.

Books and Periodicals.

BOOKS.

RESPONSIVE READINGS, Cranston and Stowe, Cincinnati.

These are responsive Scripture readings on sixty different subjects, arranged in lessons, and selections. In some quarters it is coming into practice for one lesson of the morning service to be read responsively by the preacher and people, and where this is the case this will be found a useful book.

PERIODICALS.

—St. Nicholas, for May, is a charming number. Our little folks will find this one of the most interesting numbers they have yet had. The poetry, the pictures, the stories, the letters will all please and instruct. Daddy Jake is finished and Palmer Cox adds another chapter to that charming creation of his brain, the Brownies. We commend St. Nicholas as a good monthly for young people everywhere. Century Company, New York. Price, $3 a year

—Cassell's Family Magazine, for May, has some choice reading matter, both poetry and prose, and it is very cheap at fifteen cents a number, or $1 50 per annum. Cassell and Company, New York.

—Popular Science, for May, contains some able papers on scientific subjects. Dr. White continues his New Chapters in the Warfare of Science; Prof. Henderson also continues his Glass-Making papers; Eggs in Chemistry, and Commerce, is by P. L. Simmonds; Dr. Wace's able reply to Prof. Huxley on Agnosticism, is reprinted from Nineteenth Century; also the Bishop of Peterborough's answer to the same. D. Appleton & Company, New York.

—The Chautauquan, for May, is an admirable number of this deservedly popular monthly. We know of no better reading than is found in its pages. Rev. T. H. Flood, Meadville, Pa.

—The Gospel in All Lands, for this month, has appreciative articles on Burma, Ethnic Religions, Japan's New Constitution, Work in Bulgaria, and other subjects. This is a valuable missionary periodical, and cheap at $1 50. Missionary Society Methodist Episcopal Church, 805 Broadway, New York.

—Fashion and Fancy, for May, begins volume two of this growing and popular monthly. St. Louis, Mo. Price, $3.

—The Homiletic Magazine, for April, has its usual full table of sermons, commentaries and homiletics. E. B. Treat, New York.

—The Kindergarten, for April, completes its first year. The publishers promise in the next year to publish a series of articles by Emily Lord, of London, upon Sloyd, (sloyd) a simple system of manual training adopted in the schools of Northern Europe. The Kindergarten, although but a year old, has won a high place in the hearts of all educators. Alice B. Stockham and Co., Chicago.

The Quiver, for May, is particularly rich in fiction, while there will be found no lack of more sub-tantial reading, such as The Wesleyan Methodist Conference, A Writing Lesson, To the Lions, and Memorable Letters and their Writers. There is a profusion of poetry and a goodly number of Short Arrows. Cassell & Co., New York. Fifteen cents a number; $1 50 a year in advance.

—The frontispiece of the Magazine of Art, for May, is a photogravure reproduction of G. P. Jacomb-Hood's The Triumph of Spring, which was one of the principal attractions at the summer exhibition at the Grosvenor Gallery in 1888; N. V. Diaz is the subject of the paper on the Barbizon School; Ford Madox Brown follows with a paper on self-painted pictures, which gives a portrait of the writer painted by himself. Frederick Wedmore has an interesting paper on Our Elder Art at the Grosvenor Gallery, giving some fine reproductions from Sir Joshua Reynolds, Romney, and Gainsborough. There are other interesting illustrations in the magazine. From these modern painters, we are taken to Ancient Art in Ceylon, and a batch of very modern art notes.—Cassell & Company, New York. 35 cents a number, $3 50 a year, in advance.

—The Missionary Review of the World, for May. Its leading article is by Dr. Pierson, entitled "the Mission and Commission of the Church. The Marvels of Mormon Missions, by Prof. Leonard, will be read with keen zest. Pastor Harms and his Work tells a story of sacrifice and enterprise that can not fail to thrill the heart. The Story of Siam, by Dr. Pierson, is another of the Miracles of Missions that excite wonder. Dr. Brockett gives the first part of a comprehensive history of Madagascar from a missionary standpoint. Dr. Starbuck's translations from foreign missionary periodicals are valuable. We note a little change in the arrangement of the several departments, which we think an improvement. The II. department, following Literature of Missions, embraces General Missionary Intelligence. The III. Missionary Correspondence. The IV. Dr. Gracey's International Department. The V. The Monthly Concert. The VI. Editorial Notes, which are full and important. VII. Organized Missionary Work and Statistics, containing the last reports of several missionary societies, and several valuable Tables of Statistics. VIII. closes the number with the Monthly Bulletin, giving the latest news from all parts of the world-field. The number is one of transcendent interest. Published by Funk & Wagnalls, 18 and 20 Astor Place, New York. $2 per year; 25 cents for single numbers. In clubs of ten, $1 50.

Literary Notes.

Dr. Sheld's "Dogmatic Theology" has reached a second edition, which is sufficient proof that there is still a popular demand for serious works of this size and importance, provided the author's style and the substance of his thought are attractive.

"Mr. Gladstone" says, the North British Daily Mail, "usually has three books in reading at the same time, and changes from one to the other, when his mind has reached the limit of absorption. When he reads a book he does so pencil in hand, marking off on the margin those passages which he wishes to remember, querying those about which he is in doubt, and putting a cross opposite to those which he disputes. At the end of the volume he constructs a kind of index of his own which enables him to refer to those things he wishes to remember in the book."

A little book of great interest to all lovers of Burns will soon be published in Kilmarnock, the town which gave the poet's first edition to the world. It will consist of a verbatim et literatim copy of the famous holograph MSS. acquired by the trustees of the Kilmarnock Museum early last year, and will show all the alterations and emendations made by Burns on those documents during the time they were in his possession, together with his peculiarities of spelling. The volume will be unique, and of great value to all thorough students of the Ayrshire poet.

Messrs. Cassell & Company will publish at once a new edition of William Robertson's "Life and Times of the Rt. Hon. John Bright," which has been brought down to date by a well-known American writer. The adding of the last lines to these chapters has been held back to await the death, which has been for so long anticipated. Mr. Robertson had especial advantages for writing this life of the great reformer and statesman, and it reads with all the absorbing interest that attaches to the well-written biography of a great man. The frontispiece of the book is a portrait of Mr. Bright taken from a recent photograph.

James Russell Lowell, when asked at a "tea" given in his honor recently in Washington, what his methods of literary work were, is said to have replied: "I am one of those men who believe in system, and who seek and utilize every moment at their command to advantage. I put aside so many hours, generally in the forenoon, for reading and writing, and try to be uninterrupted. If I am, I make it up at the first leisure I can secure." "Then you are not a believer in writing by inspiration?" said his questioner. "Well, I don't like to commit myself positively upon that point," said Mr. Lowell, "but I do know that steady, hard, and continuous work has been my reliance during a somewhat varied life."

Three Reasonable Requests.

1. Let every subscriber carefully read this issue of the ADVOCATE, and then show the paper to some neighbor who does not take it, and ask him to subscribe.

2. Let every minister arrange for a complete canvass of his circuit, so that every family of every Methodist congregation may have the paper offered to them. Where the minister can not do this personally, let him appoint some suitable person to do it.

3. Let the benefit and duty of subscribing for our church paper be mentioned in every congregation, and all reasonable efforts put forth to obtain new subscribers, and secure the renewal of old ones.

Our Young People.

"STRETCH IT A LITTLE."

Trudging along the slippery street
Two childish figures, with aching feet,
And hands benumbed by the biting cold,
Were rudely jostled by young and old,
Hurrying homeward at close of day
Over the city's broad highway.

Nobody noticed or seemed to care
For the little ragged, shivering pair;
Nobody saw how close they crept
Into the warmth of each gas-jet,
Which flung abroad its mellowy light
From gay shop windows in the night.

"Come under my coat," said little Nell,
As tears ran down Joe's cheeks and fell
On her own thin fingers stiff with cold.
"'Taint very big, but I guess 'twill hold
Both you and me, if I only try
To stretch it a little. So now don't cry."

The garment was small and tattered and thin,
But Joe was lovingly folded in Close to the heart of Nell, who knew
That stretching the coat for the needs of two
Would double the warmth, and halve the pain
Of the cutting wind and the icy rain.

"Stretch it a little," O girls and boys,
In homes overflowing with comforts and joys;
See how far you can make them reach—
Your helpful deeds and your loving speech,
Your gifts of service and gifts of gold;
Let them stretch to households manifold.

—Harper's Young People.

The Power of a Voice.

A peaceful army of young readers have fallen into line since the close of the Civil War, yet the youngest of them are familiar with many of the details of that war, and, no doubt, know of the noble Christian Commission which supplemented the Sanitary Commission, but had for its larger care the moral and religious needs of the soldiers. Perhaps they know that its worthy president was Mr. George H. Stuart, of Philadelphia. Perhaps they do not know that Mr. Stuart still lives, and that though burdened with the weight of illness and advanced age, his eyes kindled over the memories of the past, and he delights to recall the varied incidents of that exciting period. I have often heard him tell story after story of the war, and one has especially impressed me, as showing the influence of a voice on the memory, and also what apparently slight means Providence may use to preserve a life from peril. I would like to tell it to the boys and girls of to-day.

Mr. Stuart was visiting a camp a few miles below Washington, and in the evening, in company with two or three other gentlemen—one of whom was the late Mr. William E. Dodge, of New York, held a prayer meeting among the soldiers. Nine o'clock was the regular hour for closing, but the interest was so deep, that the colonel of the regiment said, "Go on," and the meeting was prolonged for half an hour or more. At least ten o'clock had come when the gentlemen prepared to return to Washington to-night; the guard is posted already, as nine was the hour for guard mounting, "and an order has been issued that no civilian shall have the countersign." Imperative business required the presence of Mr. Dodge, and he said he must be in Washington before morning. The colonel said he would see what could be done, perhaps the magic "word" would be given to Mr. Stuart on account of his position. He went to the headquarters, and returning soon, whispered the "word" in Mr. Stuart's ear. Then he gave these minute directions: "Drive out until you are near the sentinel's post, about two miles from camp, then leave the carriage and walk up to him. He will present his gun to your face, and will call out, 'Who goes there?' You will answer, 'A friend with the countersign.' The sentinel will say, 'What is it?' You will then give the 'word' I whispered in your ear, and he will allow you to pass."

Well, they drove out in the darkness, and Mr. Stuart left the carriage at the appointed place, and advanced till the musket of the guard gleamed in dangerous nearness to his face. Then the questions and answers followed just as the colonel had described, only when the sentinel said, "What is it?" Mr. Stuart answered, "Beverly," and instead of this proving the wonderful "sesame," the sentinel cried, calling him by name, "Mr. Stuart, you have given the wrong word, that is the countersign of the day before." It was changed every day. The mistake rectified, they started again, and again went through the programme. This time the word was "Massachusetts," and they were permitted to go. But not before Mr. Stuart had turned and asked the soldier, "How did you know who I was in the darkness?" and the man had answered, "About fifteen years ago I heard you speak to a Sunday-school up in York State, and though I have never seen you since, I remembered your voice. If it had not been for that I should have shot you." "Then," said Mr. Stuart, "I hope, my friend, you have the countersign." "I have." "What is it?" "The blood of Jesus Christ," was the reverent reply.

Mr. Stuart says this story has been told far and near, and in other languages, but nearly always with untruthful variations. Naturally, he likes to have an accurate version given of such a thrilling incident in his life, and I can assure my readers I had this one only a few days ago from his own lips.—Wide Awake.

MR. EDITOR: As I have never written to your valuable paper, I thought I would write. My papa takes the ADVOCATE. I take a delight in reading the children's column. I have been going to school to Mrs. Alma Fulton. She has about twenty-five pupils. I will be twelve years old the sixth day of March. I have a sweet little sister. She was a year old Christmas day. I belong to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Bro. Williams is our preacher. I hope my letter will not reach the waste-basket, as this is the first time. I will close, wishing the dear old ADVOCATE great success. I remain,

Your friend,

CLARA L. HAMMET.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl eight years old. I have never been to school; we live too far from any school. My grandma teaches me at home. I study spelling, reading, writing and arithmetic. I stay with my grandparents. My papa and mamma live three-quarters of a mile from us. I have three sisters and two brothers. Bro. May is our preacher. We love him so much. My papa takes the ADVOCATE. We all love to read it. I will ask the cousins a question: What three names in the Bible spell the same both ways? With best wishes for the dear old ADVOCATE, I am,

Your little friend.

FANNIE A. THOMAS.

LOVE LAKE, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little boy nine years old. Papa takes the ADVOCATE, and I love to read the little children's letters. I have no pets to tell about, but have nice, pretty books that I love to read. I have two brothers and one sweet baby sister. Her name is Ida. I am a member of the church, and I go to Sunday-school every Sunday and to school every day. I love my teachers; they are kind and good to me. Cousin Henry Roberts' answer will be found in II. Kings, xiii, 21. Hoping to see this in print, I am,

Your little friend,

EUGENE M. ROBERTS.

GLOSTER, Mississippi.

"Consumption can be Cured."

Dr. J. S. COMBS, Owensville, Ohio, says: "I have given Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites to four patients with better results than seemed possible with any remedy. All were hereditary cases of Lung disease, and advanced to that stage when coughs, pain in the chest, frequent breathing, frequent pulse, fever and emaciation. All these cases have increased in weight from 16 to 28 lbs., and are not now needing any medicine."

MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl eight years old. I go to Sunday-school every Sunday. Capt. E. W. Stafford is superintendent. My mamma is my teacher. I go to school in the week to Miss Kate May. I love her very much. Mr. Editor, we will have District Conference here in the summer. I extend you a cordial invitation. My papa is the preacher here. I will answer my cousin's (Willie Morse) question: "Which" is mentioned seventy-five times in Luke iii. I am,

Your little friend,

Household.

This is the season when housekeepers find it difficult to furnish a tempting bill of fare. The trouble is not altogether with the markets. The appetites of the family begin to flag. The whole system, especially if it has been keyed to a high pitch during the winter months by hearty food, or by excessive devotion to business or pleasure, is in a state of relaxation. Irritable tempers manifest themselves. Trifles fret and annoy. Old people and puny children are never so susceptible to atmospheric changes as at this transition time. An agreeable variety to the bill of fare can be secured with the help of lettuce and radishes, and anybody who has the tiniest bit of land can raise them easily in a hot-bed. Two sashes, each three feet by six, will give all the room needed for an ordinary family, while any garden manual will furnish directions for making the bed and planting the seeds. Boys usually delight in amateur gardening of this sort, and their mothers know that spring salads give a relish to other viands. It is a good plan, also, to reserve the choicest of one's canned goods until this time of flagging appetites.

How to proportion one's time rightly between the calls from outside the home, and its claims from within, is one of the most difficult duties which Christian women, in particular, have to meet. They are conscious that, in order to attain the beautiful balance of character which reached its perfection in our Lord, there must be a cultivation of the spiritual faculties. But with missionary meetings, committee meetings, church fairs and sociables, literary clubs, receptions and calls, to say nothing of household affairs and ministry to the sick and needy, how can it be accomplished? The King's Daughters may prove a help in answering the question. The root idea of this organization is in the words. "The King's daughter is all glorious within." It emphasizes the idea that to be is more than to do. We know of one group of ten, composed wholly of women whose hands are brimful of active duties, who do not attempt any other work than helping each other to higher attainments in spirituality. They do not consider it selfish, for they believe that an equipment of Christian graces is the most essential part of their working capital.—Congregationalist.

TO-DAY.—Tired fathers, weary mothers, when is your happy day coming? Long since you expected it to dawn. It is not here yet, nor will it ever be so long as you do not determine that it shall be to-day. This failure to take comfort as you pass along life's pathway, but ever looking forward for all enjoyment of good, is throwing away the real sweets of life. You may as well attempt to store up summer sunshine to warm in winter, or bottle moonshine for cloudy nights. The real and only true way is to find in the present all the good God gives us. Our whole lives may be filled with joy if we are only willing to learn that in all good work there is profit, in all sorrow are some rays of sunshine, and in all care some compensation. Make the most of to-day, and your future will grow brighter and brighter as you step into it. Let the old saying that "Man never is, but always to be, blessed" be proven false by your finding in the present all the fullness of blessing it really possesses.

Climate for Consumptives.

The several climates of Florida, Colorado and California have each been much prescribed for sufferers from lung disease, yet thousands of the natives in those States die of this fatal malady. A far more reliable remedy is to be had in every drug store in the land, and one that can be used at home; a remedy which is sold, by druggists, under the manufacturers' positive guarantee that, if taken in time and given a fair trial, it will effect a cure, or money paid for it will be promptly returned. We refer to that world-famed remedy for consumption (or lung scrofula) known as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It is the only remedy for this terrible disease possessed of such superior curative properties as to warrant its manufacturers in selling it under a guarantee.

Don't hawk and blow and spit, but use Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. Of druggists.

There are two things needed in these days; first, for rich men to find out how poor men live; and, second, for poor men to know how rich men work.—Edward Atkinson.

JUAN A. PIZZINI, Editor and Publisher of the Catholic Visitor, Richmond, Va., says: Having tried Shallenberger's Antidote for Malaria, we do not hesitate to say, from personal experience, that in our case it acted like a charm, and did all the doctor claims for it, and we would assuredly have recourse to it again if exposed to Malaria. Sold by Druggists.

Ayer's Hair Vigor

IS the "ideal" Hair-dressing. It restores the color to gray hair; promotes a fresh and vigorous growth; prevents the formation of dandruff; makes the hair soft and silken, and imparts a delicate but lasting perfume.

"Several months ago my hair commenced falling out, and in a few weeks my head was almost bald. I tried many remedies, but they did no good. I finally bought a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor, and, after using only a part of the contents, my head was covered with a heavy growth of hair. I recommend your preparation as the best in the world."—T. Munday, Sharon Grove, Ky.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for a number of years, and it has always given me satisfaction. It is an excellent dressing, prevents the hair from turning gray, insures its vigorous growth, and keeps the scalp white and clean."—Mary A. Jackson, Salem, Mass.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor to promote the growth of the hair, and think it unequaled. For restoring the hair to its original color, and for a dressing, it cannot be surpassed."—Mrs. Geo. La Fever, Eaton Rapids, Mich.

"Ayer's Hair Vigor is a most excellent preparation for the hair. I speak of it from my own experience. It promotes the growth of new hair and makes it glossy and soft. The Vigor is also a cure for dandruff."—J. W. Bowen, Editor "Enquirer," McArthur, Ohio.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for the past two years, and found it all it is represented to be. It restores the natural color to gray hair, causes the hair to grow freely, and keeps it soft and pliant."—Mrs. M. V. Day, Cohoes, N.Y.

"My father, at about the age of 60, lost all the hair from the top of his head. After one month's trial of Ayer's Hair Vigor the hair began coming, and, in three months, he had a fine growth of hair of the natural color."—P. J. Curtis, Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

HACKLER—WILLIAM AUGUSTUS CKLER was born August 22, 1816; d October 3, 1888. He was the y son of Samuel and Patsy Hacklor; s born and reared near the famous Cane Ridge Church, in Jefferson nty, Miss. Under the godly par- tal training at home, and the In- ences of the Cane Ridge society, he led in his youth to a personal owledge of salvation. January 21, 1, he and Miss Sarah Scott were rried. They removed and settled the Southwestern portion of Jeffer- n, near Bethel Church. Here they ared a family of two daughters. From the day of his conversion he ed a firm believer in the doctrines d polity, and a consistent, useful mber of the Methodist Episcopal urch, South. His long life demon- ated what his lips often expressed th heart-earnestness. He was the subject of protracted ease and great physical suffering. is he bore with submission, realiz- "the peaceable fruits of righteous- ss." For many months he declared mself conscious the end was near. at he was watching and waiting for e Master, "having a desire to depart d to be with Christ, which is far tter." To questions by ministers and mem- rs of the family, just before the parture, he gave answers that will cherished. "I am resigned to the ll of the Lord;" "I am ready and lling to go;" "The Lord is present th me." To his wife he said: "I ve been praying all my life, and I ll I am going to heaven." When ent in the river, and almost speech- s, the last utterance was, "Happy! ppy! happy!" The wife and five married daughters rvive, and wait for reunion in aven, from whence also we look for e Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, who all change our vile body, that it y be fashioned like unto his glori- e body, according to the working ereby he is able even to subdue all ings unto himself. J. A. B. J.

GIVENS—Bro. SAMUEL GIVENS ore properly Father Givens) was rn in what is now the State of nnessee, May 12, 1794, and died in wndes county, Miss., March 19, 9, in his ninety-fifth year. Bro. vens was a soldier in the war of 12, and for this service his country warded him for several years with a nsion. He became a soldier of the ss when a young man, and for years s a consistent member of the Cum- rland Presbyterian Church. At the se of our Civil War he joined the thodist Episcopal Church, South, Flint Hill, Columbus circuit, North ssissippi Conference, and remained e of our brightest jewels until the ster called him home. His seat never vacant in the church, un- s providence kept him away. He used to say to the writer that "he could not hear much, but was determined to come to encourage the pastor and the people: and truly his presence and his prayers were a benediction. Humble, child-like, and trusting in Christ, the whole motive of his last years seemed to be to do the Master's will. But life's long warfare is ended, Bro. Givens no longer needs the pension so kindly given him by a government that appreciated his services as a soldier in her service, "for he has entered that rest that remains for the people of God" "and his works do follow him," and, doubtless, while his former pastor would drop a flower on his grave and write a line in memory of his Christian virtues, long ere this he understands the fullness and the force of, "Enter thou into the joys of thy Lord." We shall miss the dear old "man of God." May we emulate his Christian virtues, profit by his many words of exhortation, and after a while, when we have served the Master's will, meet him "in the land of light and song!"

B. F. PHILLIPS.

GERMAN—Died in Vernon parish, La., February 7, 1889, LOUISA C. GERMAN. Sister German was a daughter of Jano and Mary Wright. She was born in Ouachita parish, La., on July 5, 1815, making her seventy-three years, seven months and two days old when she died. For two months before her death she suffered a great deal; but, alas! her sufferings are over, and now her soul is at rest. She joined the Methodist Church in early life, (I think under the administration of J. G. Jones), and lived a consistent member of the same till death. She was married in Mississippi, in the year 1838, to William German, and was the mother of nine children, seven of which, with her husband, have preceded her to the better land, and only two of her children remain to mourn the loss of their mother. They have only bid their mother farewell for a little while. If they are faithful, they will soon meet her again.

JOHN FRANKLIN.

BLOOMFIELD—Mrs. IRENE DENNY BLOOMFIELD, daughter of Walter and Mary E. Denny, was born at Moss Point, Miss., July 2, 1861; was converted and joined the Methodist Church in 1881; was married to Mr. E. Bloomfield, 1887, and died March 31, 1889. Sister Bloomfield leaves two little daughters: one sixteen months, the other three weeks old. The fond husband, whose delight was to please her and whose devotion brushed back any shadow that might fall on her heart, is now left with shadows, dark and thick, over his own soul. Her short, bright life was a fine illustration of the beauties that gather about and adorn the character that unfolds itself in the pure light of a Christian home. I have known her ten years. To know her was to love her. She passed away quiet as a dream, we believe, to the realms of everlasting light.

A FRIEND.

BOYD—Miss VICTORIA E. BOYD was born in Russel county, Ala., July 2, 1844, and died April 10, 1889. She was truly a sufferer from childhood, but more especially the last fifteen years of her life. It would be hard to express how great her sufferings were. She was happily converted in September, 1867, under the ministry of Rev. N. A. Cravens. Her life was a written epistle of God, so patient in suffering, so self-sacrificing, so happy in her Christian experience. She died as she had lived, triumphant in Christ Jesus. How precious is the divine word: "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth; yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors: for their works follow with them." H. O. WHITE.

CAMDON—SARAH D. HIVELY was born in the State of Kentucky, December 26, 1811; joined the Methodist Church at the age of fifteen; was married to J. W. Camdon, August 7, 1828; was the mother of seven children, and died very suddenly at her granddaughter's, Mrs. Joe Grayson, March 13, 1889. Sister Camdon was a consistent church member from the time she joined the church until her death. Ever faithful to her Christian duties, her influence was felt for good in the community in which she had spent her long life. Sister Camdon was a good neighbor, so kind and gentle, she was loved by all that knew her. She was a kind mother, an affectionate wife. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

HER PASTOR.

"How is it?" said a Christian man to his companion as they were both returning from hearing the saintly Bramwell; "how is it that Bro. Bramwell always tells us so much that is new?" The companion answered: "Bro. Bramwell lives so near the gates of heaven that he learns a great many things which the rest of us do not get near enough to hear."—J. H. Hitchens.

Valuable Testimony.

Those who are skilled in the nice adjustment of evidence will see why we value the following. They will also discover why we refrain from imposing further introduction or adding more than our usual suggestion as to brochure and address.

Hon. P. H. Jacobs, the well-known chemist, editor of the Poultry Keeper, Farmers' Magazine, and Agricultural Department of The Philadelphia Record, says:

"I have examined carefully the Compound Oxygen manufactured by DRS. STARKEY & PALEN; also their mode of treatment by inhalation, and have noted the great benefit to those who have used it among my personal friends. I cheerfully say that it offers better promises of curing such diseases as consumption, bronchitis, asthma, catarrh, dyspepsia, nervous prostration, rheumatism, neuralgia and all other complaints of a chronic nature, than any other treatment that has come to my notice. That it will give to the exhausted system renewed and permanent vitality is beyond a doubt."

The brochure to which we refer contains the history of Compound Oxygen and a record of cures in many interesting cases. This with our quarterly review, Health and Life, will be forwarded free of charge to anyone addressing, DRS. STARKEY & PALEN, 1529 Arch street, Philadelphia, Pa.; or 120 Sutter street, San Francisco, Cal.

FORCE AND ENERGY.—As far as we know at present, the simplest forms of matter — the elements — are distinct entities and incapable of being transformed into one another. They unite among themselves to form all the innumerable substances of which the universe is made up, but in themselves are unchangeable and indestructible. A piece of iron, for instance, can never be changed into a piece of copper, or a grain of hydrogen gas into oxygen; neither can we destroy or annihilate a single atom of these elements. There is just exactly as much hydrogen, oxygen, iron, copper, etc., in the universe as there has been in all the past ages, and exactly the same amount will continue to exist to all eternity, although their combinations with themselves and other elements may be altered an infinite number of times. Until some future investigator, in following certain clues at present but dimly perceived by us, discovers that the elements are but modifications of one primal form of matter, we must continue to believe that they are unchangeable. When, however, we turn to the different forms of force or energy by which, with matter, the universe reveals itself to our senses, we find a very different state of affairs. Heat, light, electricity, chemical action, magnetism, force or work, are all readily changed from one to the other with the greatest ease. A pound of coal or pure carbon will, when oxidized or burnt, always produce exactly so many units of heat. From this heat just so much power or work can be obtained and no more; this power will produce an invariable number of units of electricity or magnetism; and the electricity, when transformed into chemical action, will decompose a definite weight of a chemical compound. Every pound of coal, every ounce of food represents a certain amount of energy, and by no possibility can a greater amount be obtained from it. It is the legitimate field of the inventor to endeavor to utilize all this energy in the form in which it is desired and prevent the enormous waste by its transformation into undesired forms, which at present occurs even with our best and most economical machinery. Any attempt to do more is as sure to end in failure as would an attempt to prove that two and two added together make five.—Popular Science News.

FELLING TREES BY ELECTRICITY.—Hitherto machines for felling trees have been driven by steam power, but this is sometimes inconvenient, especially in thick woods, and electric power has recently been adopted in the Galician forests. Usually in such machines the trunk is sawed, but in this case it is drilled. When the wood is of a soft nature the drill has a sweeping motion and cuts into the trunk by means of cutting edges on its sides. The drill is actuated by an electric motor mounted on a carriage which is brought up close to the tree and shackled to it. The motor is capable of turning round its vertical axis; and the drill is geared to it in such a manner that it can turn through an arc of a circle and make a sweeping cut into the trunk. The first cut made, the drill is advanced a few inches, and another section of the wood removed in the same way until the trunk is half-severed. It is then clamped to keep the cut from closing, and the operation continued until it would be unsafe to go on. The remainder is finished by a hand-saw or an axe. The current is conveyed to the motor by insulated leads brought through the forest from a generator placed in some convenient site.—London Times.

THE HUMAN HEART.—A curious calculation has been made by Dr. Richardson, giving the work of the heart in mileage. Presuming that the blood was thrown out of the heart at each pulsation in the proportion of 69 strokes per minute, and at the assumed force of 9 feet, the mileage of the blood through the body might be taken at 207 yards per minute, 7 miles per hour, 168 miles per day, 61,320 miles per year, or 5,150,880 miles in a life-time of 84 years. The number of beats of the heart in the same long life would reach the grand total of 2,869,776,000.—Medical World.

"God bless Mahalia!" gratefully exclaims Mr. A. W. Clanson, of Sidney, Ohio. "It has done me more good than all the pills I have ever taken. It has regulated my Liver, built up my system, and made my Bowels move like clock-work. I cheerfully recommend it. I can not say too much in praise of it." Sold by all druggists—$1 a bottle.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Hon. E. John Ellis, ex-Representative from the Second Congressional District of Louisiana, died in Washington, D. C., April 25.

The boomers are flocking out of Oklahoma. Some of them intend to settle on the Cherokee strip, but will be prevented by the military, who have been instructed to drive them off. Reports of fatal encounters between home-seekers are numerous.

Both branches of the Minnesota Legislature have passed a bill making drunkenness a crime, and it now awaits the governor's signature.

The Trust Bill passed by the last Texas Legislature is very stringent, and the corporations and pools in Texas are going to pieces. The penalty is a fine as high as $5,000 and imprisonment in the penitentiary.

The Farmers' Alliance, of Texas, after discussing various substitutes for jute bagging, resolved to endeavor to find a substitute, if possible, in time to wrap this year's crop.

Thousands of disappointed home-seekers returning from Oklahoma are obtaining leases from the Indians in the Chickasaw, Choctaw and Creek Nations. Many of the Indians welcome the white settlers.

Officials of the State and Navy Departments are considering what course can be taken in the matter of suitably rewarding the Samoan King Matuafa for his timely efforts to rescue the American sailors and property wrecked at Samoa.

In order to celebrate the Washington Centennial in New York City, this week, the Stock Exchange, the Consolidated Stock and Petroleum Exchange and the Coffee Exchange were closed on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. The Produce Exchange and the Cotton Exchange were closed Tuesday and Wednesday.

President Barnard, of Columbia College, died on April 27.

The so-called Southern policy of President Harrison, it is said, is fully developed. The administration's policy will be to convert the whites to Republicanism in localities where the party is unpopular by giving federal offices to the white Republicans, if such can be found. The negroes are not to be ignored, but are to receive compensation for loss of offices in the States by appointment in the departments and the local government of the District of Columbia.

There is considerable excitement in Salina county, Mo., over the discovery of gold near Arrow Rock. A California expert has pronounced it a rich find.

The Centennial celebration was opened in New York City on April 29. Washington's route to the metropolis was traversed by President Harrison. He embarked on the steamer Dispatch at Elizabethport, which conveyed the presidential party and committees to New York, and was greeted by a grand naval demonstration in the bay.

The Centennial of the inauguration of Washington was observed in this city by services in many churches, by public exercises at Lafayette Square, and by a parade of the local Catholic societies.

FOREIGN.

At the session of the Catholic Congress in Madrid, Spain, on the twenty-fifth, Prof. Castro denounced Italy's treatment of the papacy. His speech has caused the Spanish government considerable uneasiness.

The Municipal Committee having charge of the exhibition fetes will distribute 400,000 francs among the poor of Paris.

Advices from Berlin say it is intended to fortify the coast and villages in Germany.

A Unionist conference was held at Birmingham on April 25. Resolutions were adopted affirming that the land question was the root of Irish discontent, and urging the government to introduce in the House of Commons without delay a measure to enable tenants to become owners of the land.

Gen. Boulanger, who is now in London, denies the report that he will immediately issue a manifesto explaining his intentions. In an interview Gen. Boulanger reiterated his disavowal that he had any intention of precipitating a war between France and Germany. Nevertheless, he did not consider that the future of France had been settled forever by the war of 1870.

The Pope, on April 26 summoned Father Augustine and reproved him for his recent sermon in which he invoked divine blessings upon King Humbert and the Italian army. It is reported that the Pope has ordered Father Augustine to leave Rome.

A French journal says that the Senate commission conducting the Boulanger trial has in possession receipts signed by Boulanger for money given to him in consideration of certain services to be rendered by him in the event of his becoming President. A State official testified that he had seen similar documents.

In order to encourage the sugar industry, the Mexican government has decided to give bounties to sugar producers.

Henry George arrived in Glasgow on April 28. He was presented with an illuminated address and was enthusiastically received.

The Chinese provincial authorities have thwarted the effort to secure the opening of the upper Yangtsee-klang to steamers.

An international anti-slavery congress will be held at Lucerne, Switzerland, in July next. The papal delegate will preside, and Dr. Windthorst and Count Demnne, the well-known German and French Catholic leaders, respectively, and other prominent papists will attend.

The Catholic Congress, in session at Madrid, Spain, on April 29, adopted a resolution demanding a restoration of the temporal power of the Pope.

The clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policy-holders.
The Episcopal Diocese of New York has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and The Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.
A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

East Tennessee, Virginia & Georgia R. R.
Well known as the Great Kennesaw Route, is now making twelve hours quicker time to Washington via New York and eastern points, with Pullman Buffet Sleepers from New Orleans to Washington without change. The mountain resorts of East Tennessee are reached in twenty-four hours, and Virginia resorts in thirty hours. For tickets, sleeping accommodation, circulars, schedule, etc., call at Kennesaw ticket office, 22 Carondelet street.

CHEAPEST FURNITURE HOUSE IN NEW ORLEANS.—This is the heading of the advertisement of Mr. J. G. Grant's, 50 and 52 Baronne street, New Orleans. Now, we would suggest to our readers to peruse it carefully, and they will be astonished at the low prices which Mr. Grant is selling furniture for. As this gentleman is thoroughly reliable, and guarantees the smallest article that leaves his store, we feel satisfied that those who may try him once will have further dealings with him. There is no store of this character in the South that keeps a larger or finer assortment than his, and as his expenses are less than others in the same line, he has informed us that he can sell lower. Try him.—N. O. Weekly Picayune, January 24.

TO THE LADIES.
Our skin not be well dressed, no matter of how fine texture the clothing or how perfect the fit, if the hands are shabby and dingy to king. This illdeficiency can be overcome by using Brown's French Dressing, superior to all others in imparting gloss and preserving the leather. The dressing has made for itself so widespread and enviable a reputation that a host of imitators has sprung up. The public must be ware of these, as only Brown's original dressing will be found preservative of the leather as well as ornamental in its application. It has received the highest award wherever exhibited. For sale everywhere.

REST.

BY ALEXANDER E. THOMPSON, D. D.

What rest is there for him who knows no labor?
Hands idly folded all the livelong day,
Never a thought to give in friend or neighbor,
No mill to share, no load to lift away.

How can rest come to him who has no sorrow?
Life drifting smoothly and serenely by,
Each bright day followed by a bright to-morrow,
And not a cloud within his sunlit sky.

What rest for sinews that are never weary?
For life that falters not beneath the strain,
For eyes that weep not in the darkness dreary,
Heart that goes not alone in smothered pain?

But rest, at length, how sweet to them who under
The heavy burden, tremulous and faint,
Can neither pause nor turn, and yet who wonder
If ever peace will soften sorrow's plaint:

And rest how passing sweet, when to love's waiting,
Weary and sore, forevermore is given
Love's fair fond treasure its long pain abating,
Once and eternally, in the glad heaven.

When toil-worn feet, the last lone reaches making,
Up in the Father's door of life have come,
And out of lips the fairest, dearest, breaking,
Welcome forever greets the weary home.

Then, nevermore can sin or sorrow seize us;
Hath he not promised: "I will give you rest"?
At rest, at home, in paradise, with Jesus.
Could weary heart be more supremely blest!

The Louisiana State Lottery Company Examined and Exposed.

BY REV. H. CARRADINE, D. D.

The sixth charge we make against the Lottery is, that it is the cause and occasion of countless acts of theft.

I need not dwell on this point. You need no argument or proof. To live in New Orleans is to know the truth of this proposition.

To send a servant with money to the market is virtually to send a portion of that money to the Lottery. Sometimes you and I have wondered at our slim dinners. The cook did not. She had lavested some of her employer's finances for the benefit of the stockholders of the Lottery. Your meal that day was slender, not so with the noble stockholders—they had plenty. Your beefsteak had a postage-stamp thinness, the stockholders had tender-loin; and you and I paid for the tender-loin. If you doubt where the money is going, just visit the markets in the morning and see the kitchen representatives as they, with baskets on their arms, stream by scores into the ticket offices. How these ticket offices abound in the neighborhood of the markets! The whole thing appears significant, if not downright suspicious.

Is that all the stealing done? Not by any means. Married women by hundreds invest the money set apart for home expenses in the same way. The father often wonders that the children are not better dressed, nor the house and table better furnished. The explanation can only be found in the cash receipts of the Louisiana State Lottery.

Nor is this all. Clerks are stealing from the cash-drawers of their employers. One young man in this city had stolen three thousand dollars before he was discharged. A merchant informs me that his book-keeper purloined over six thousand dollars between the months of April and August. I verily believe that if we had the money that is being stolen and has been stolen to find its way into the Lottery, we could pave the streets of New Orleans from end to end, take care of the Charity Hospital, and build other monuments of good that would last for ages!

As you go around with strangers, this month, showing them the various public buildings of this city, I want you to be strictly truthful. That building yonder, you will say, is the Washington Artillery Hall. Here numbers of our young men congregate, and the martial spirit is kept up by association and public drill and display. Yonder building is a Commercial College; there one or two hundred young men are being fitted for a useful life by thorough instruction in business laws, methods and principles. The large structure over there is a church; here men are taught the way of salvation and the life, that spent in obedience to the commandments of God, brings happiness here and blessedness hereafter.

That building yonder, on the corner of St. Charles and Union streets, is the Louisiana State Lottery. You desire to know what it is and does. Well, I will tell you. The whole spirit and influence of the business, if you can call it a business, that is carried on there, whether its stockholders and friends believe it or not, is to make thieves by thousands and tens of thousands in our city and State.

How would you fancy having stock in such a concern? How would you like to obtain your livelihood or be connected with it in any way?

Another charge I make is, that the Lottery is the cause of the social and commercial ruin of multiplied thousands of our people.

There is no counting the men who once stood high in the confidence and regard of the people in this city and other places, who stand exalted no longer, through the instrumentality of this corporation.

Men once trusted and honored—but who have passed into and under the contempt, spoken or unspoken, of the very community where once they were prominent. Men once well-to-do financially, but to-day virtually tramps and beggars on our streets. I can not particularize here, for reasons that this audience will readily recognize and appreciate. Any proof offered by instance would grieve hearts here and elsewhere that are held in high esteem and affection by many of this assembly. And, yet, I doubt not that if the proposition that I have just uttered, that the Louisiana State Lottery has been the cause of social and commercial ruin to thousands—if that statement could be heard in certain desolated homes in our midst, a perfect groan of assent would go up, and poverty-stricken wife and portionless and shame-branded child would say, "What you have declared is as true as the gospel!"

This is to certify that the Louisiana State Lottery was incorporated for educational and charitable purposes! ! !

O Lord of pity and mercy and justice, what has become of the perception and the judgment and the reason of the people?—and where, O Lord, is the thunderbolt that struck down Ananias?

Another charge I make is, that it is the cause of suicide.

If you question this, come to my study and I will privately give you the facts.

Perhaps you know of such cases. Only a few days ago a gentleman informed me of a young lady residing in a certain city, who invested all of her little possessions in the great abomination, and, reduced to poverty and despair, deliberately took her life.

The papers merely published her death. That was all the public knew of the case; but the family and a few outside friends, as they looked at her obituary, saw the lines twist and writhe and settle in an awful shape that spelled the word, "suicide!"

How would you like to be identified with or have any interest in such an institution? What thoughts will revolve in the dying mind, as the remembrance fastens itself in that last trying hour, that he gained his bread and obtained his fortune through such an enterprise of destruction.

And yet they have placed their notice in the papers, where we read day after day that "the Louisiana State Lottery Company was incorporated for educational and charitable purposes!"

Another charge I make upon this institution is, that it is the cause of great suffering to the poor and untold misery to innocent parties.

The rich scarcely ever suffer from the Lottery. Ten or one hundred dollars invested monthly or annually by them amounts to nothing; is scarcely missed. But this amount, and less amounts, to the poor means great deprivation and hardship.

In every country where the Lottery has been established, this is the sad fact immediately thrust upon public attention, that the poor are the ones that suffer. Deluded by visions of wealth, craving the possession of money, deceived easily through their illiteracy and ignorance of men and the world by flaring promises of great fortunes by the investment of a dollar, they hearken, believe and act and—suffer accordingly. They invest their little, and their little is their all, and the result is want and misery.

Then I want you to think of the suffering entailed upon the innocent. Think of the wife without proper food and without sufficient clothing; think of the children without books, without shoes and without fire. Think of the home without music or pictures or literature or comforts—yea, without the necessaries of life.

O my friends, if you knew the number of fireless grates and shoeless feet and tearful eyes and hungry people produced in this city by this colossal iniquity—the Louisiana State Lottery—you would be aghast! Did you ever look at this building as it stands on the corner of Union and St. Charles streets? Next time look carefully, and you will discover that its foundations rest on human misery; its walls, like hands of agony, reach up and clutch at a receding sky; its windows are washed with human tears; its walls drip with the ghastly moisture of human pain and human blood; its floors are paved with falsehood; its doors, like a dragon's mouth, are open to devour the passerby, and its clerks are kept busy writing down, day and night, how many fools there are in the United States!

Look! Coming out of the front door is a black mahogany box containing the records and paraphernalia of the great iniquity. It is escorted. It looks like a coffin—and it is one. It is the coffin of human hopes, of buried manhood and womanhood, and of the lost integrity of individual and community. The funeral is crossing the street to the Academy of Music. That is right. A church would not do for such obsequies as this. A theatre is the proper place. Call in the crowd, and let the house be packed from parquette to gallery. There ought to be many mourners at such a time. It is a sad funeral. It is one in which many are concerned; and so let everybody see. And get two generals to act as pallbearers. They once stood up for a lost cause; let them stand now for the lost honor of a great commonwealth. For this is the obsequies going on in the building before you. It is the funeral of the departed honor and integrity of the city of New Orleans and the State of Louisiana.

The Wesleyan Methodist Conference.

BY THE REV. JOHN TELFORD, B. A.

There is an old print of some interest, though of little or no historic value, which represents the first Methodist Conference in session. The scene is a small room of Wesley's first preaching-house, the Foundry, in Little Moorfields. Wesley himself is on his feet, his brother Charles seems to be installed as secretary, whilst four other clergymen occupy the front seats. Behind them stand the coming men, four representatives of that noble band of itinerants who became Wesley's sons in the gospel, and spread the influence of the evangelical revival throughout England and America. Behind Wesley is the president's chair, which seems to show as "many more" who are to fill that seat of honor after the founder's death.

It was on Monday, June 25, 1744, that those ten men met together. Two years earlier Wesley's visit to Newcastle had extended the boundaries of his vast circuit to the extreme north of England. Methodism had become one of the chief religious forces of the time. Step by step God had led the Oxford graduates to their life-work by a way they knew not. So rapidly was Methodism growing that Wesley felt he must take counsel with men of kindred spirit, lest the vast opportunity should not be fully improved. He, therefore, sent invitations to a few of his friends and helpers, asking "their advice respecting the best method of carrying on the work of God."

The progress already made was evident in the sacramental service held the day before the Conference. The London society, numbering between two and three thousand, received the communion from the hands of five clergymen. The whole town had, indeed, been stirred by the revival. Next morning Charles Wesley opened the session with one of his mighty sermons and baptized "Samuel Holloway, who in that moment felt the great burden taken off." The week was spent in prayerful conversations on the doctrine, discipline, and mission of Methodism. Before it closed all perceived that this assembly for consultation and prayer must become a permanent feature. The workers had been brought face to face, to their unspeakable comfort and to the priceless advantage of their work. Henceforth the gathering became the Annual Conference. By this assembly the doctrines of Methodism were discussed, and its growing organization was adapted to the heavy demands made upon it. Above all, the bonds of friendship and sympathy were knit more closely between scattered workers who could have known little of each other had they not thus met occasionally at Conference.

But though the Conference took root thus early, it was not till February 28, 1784, that Wesley executed his Deed of Declaration, which finally fixed its legal basis after the death of himself and his brother. That deed contained the names of one hundred "preachers" who were to form the Conference. They were empowered to meet once a year, to fill up vacancies in their number, elect a president and secretary, appoint ministers to the various circuits, admit suitable men to the ranks of the itinerancy, and exercise general control over the United Societies.

Their annual assembly was to sit not less than five nor more than twenty-one days. It was not legal unless forty of its members were present. If any one was absent for two years in succession without a dispensation, he ceased to be a member unless he was present on the first day of the next Conference.

When Wesley executed this deed there were one hundred and seventy Methodist preachers. His selection of names gave considerable offense to some who found themselves passed over. In the following year, however, he wrote a letter, in which he besought those whose names were on the deed never to avail themselves of that instrument to assume any authority over their brethren, but to let all things go on as when he was with them, so far as circumstances would permit. This letter was entrusted to Joseph Bradford—Wesley's traveling companion—to be read to the preachers after the founder's death. Wesley's injunction has been faithfully obeyed. The British Conference now represents more than 2,500 ministers and supernumeraries at home and abroad; but "the hundred" is still the "Legal Conference," which must confirm all decisions of the General Conference in matters provided for by the Deed of Declaration. This is generally done as a matter of course, though, in case of hasty or unconstitutional legislation, the veto of the hundred would secure time for further deliberation. A place in the "hundred" has now become one of the coveted distinctions of Methodism—conferred for administrative ability, pulpit power, scholarship, or special work of any kind. It is hard to say what gifts or services qualify a man for election; but a glance at the roll will show how various are the excellences which have been thus recognized. It must be borne in mind that the president and secretary can only be chosen out of this inner circle, so that it forms the way to the highest honors of Methodism.

The time and place of each Conference are fixed in the previous year's assembly. There are thirteen "Conference towns" which bear this burdensome, but much-prized honor: London, Bristol, Leeds, Manchester, Sheffield, Liverpool, Birmingham, Newcastle, Hull, Bradford, Camborne, Barnsley, Nottingham. The Minutes of Conference, which form the official year-book, always contain a statement of the number of ministers and laymen to be chosen by each of the thirty-five districts at their May session. Since 1878, laymen have taken their place with the ministers in the "Representative Session;" which is held in the third week. The "Pastoral Session," composed of ministers only, sits during the two first weeks.

At the Camborne Conference of 1888, provision was made for 400 ministers. Members of the legal hundred, candidates for ordination, and others, were estimated at 121; 279 were chosen by the districts. For the Conference of 1887, held in Manchester, 450 ministers were invited.

"Who shall go to Conference this year?" is a question which, with commendable discretion, is left almost to the end of the agenda in the May district committees. The names of the ministers are called over, and each man states whether he wishes to attend. Then comes the process of sifting, which is often somewhat severe before the list is reduced to the allotted number.

Meanwhile, the Conference town is preparing for its guests. Homes have to be found for four or five hundred visitors, a plan of preaching services drawn up for two or three Sundays, and elaborate postal, telegraphic, and railway arrangements made. It is hard for one who is unaccustomed to form any idea of the tax which such matters make on the strength and ingenuity of all concerned.

Going to Conference is a happy event. Friends generally travel together, and beguile the way with speculations as to the course of business and the chief points of interest in the coming session. The Camborne Conference added a new delight to the journey. By the skillful management of two London ministers, a special train was chartered from Paddington, in which circuit and departmental ministers set out for Cornwall with their wives and daughters. "The west country was all astir as the Flying Dutchman steamed in with its precious freight." The variety of provisions suggested a picnic, the buzz of conversation savored of a debating club. It was evident that a new departure had been made which was destined to become a popular institution.

It is necessary to be astir early on the first morning of Conference. The doors of the chapel in which it is to meet are surrounded by groups of friends who have, perhaps, not met for many a year. Looking inside the place, a platform may be seen stretching across the end of the building. Gradually this is filled with Conference officials. In the centre is the outgoing president, whose year of honor is almost over. On his left is the secretary with his three assistants, behind whom are the "official letter-writers;" on his right sits the ex-president, beyond whom are those who have "passed the chair," arranged in order of seniority. Seats are also reserved for representatives from affiliated Conferences. The seats nearest the platform are reserved for the legal hundred, officers of departments—such as the home and foreign missionary societies—and chairmen of districts. The rank and file of the pastorate fill up the unoccupied seats down-stairs, and overflow into the gallery. Many ministers who find homes for themselves swell the numbers. About five hundred men in all gathered at Camborne on July 24, 1888; but the great distance generally makes a Cornish Conference smaller than any other.

At the appointed hour the president gives out that hymn which awakens a host of reminiscences in the breast of every Conference veteran:

"And are we yet alive,
And see each other's face?
Glory and praise to Jesus give,
Who saves us by his grace!"

The precentor strikes the first note—an organ is undreamed of—and the whole building vibrates with the volume of praise. After devotional exercises are over, the secretary calls out the roll of the legal hundred. The vacancies caused by death are then filled up, nominations being made in brief speeches which state, with varying degrees of effectiveness, the special claims of various brethren to election. Every man thus chosen must have been at least fourteen years in the ministry. The elections are made alternately on the ground of seniority, and in recognition of any kind of special work. When the vacancies caused by death or absence without a dispensation have been filled up, those due to superannuation are left over till the president and secretary have been chosen.

This is the event of the day. The result of the vote for president has generally been foreshadowed by the previous year's election. The name which then stood second now generally takes the first place. When the voting is declared his deposed predecessor quits the chair of office, and in a brief congratulatory speech hands over the official seat and John Wesley's Bible, which he used in his field-preaching. The new president then requests his brethren to be seated, and delivers his inaugural address. It has almost become a custom for this speech to suggest some motto for the year. At Camborne, the Rev. Joseph Bush, who was called to the chair after a long course of honored service in Methodist circuits, gave as the watchword, "Conversions in every congregation." The Rev. David J. Waller, secretary of the Wesleyan Education Department, was again elected secretary of the Conference by a virtually unanimous vote.

The Conference prayer meeting, held at one o'clock on the first day of the session, is much appreciated by friends in the neighborhood. The "Open Session" is even more largely attended. At Camborne it was held at a quarter to three on the second afternoon. Addresses were read from seven affiliated Conferences, and speeches delivered by their representatives. Such a gathering serves to show how cosmopolitan Methodism has become. The Rev. Charles H. Kelly, who had just returned from an official visit to the Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States, delighted the Conference and its friends in Cornwall by his humorous and suggestive descriptions of Methodist life across the Atlantic. Anyone who will glance at that speech as given in the Methodist papers of the time, will see how valuable an instrument of education the "Open Session" may thus be made. Whilst we are speaking of the gatherings to which the public are invited, we may refer to the ordination service, at which the young ministers who have successfully passed through their three years' training at college and their four years' probation are set apart by imposition of hands. The ex-president delivers the charge. The official sermons, the public examination of candidates for ordination, the Conference love-feast, the recognition of returned missionaries, the temperance and holiness meetings, are all eagerly appreciated.

We must return to the Conference itself. Some of its most solemn hours are spent every year in answering the question, "Who have died this year?" Charles Wesley's funeral hymn is sung—

"Come, let us join our friends above
That have obtained the prize."

Then follow tributes to honored friends from those who have known and worked with them in former days. Each man seems conscious that his own turn will come by-and-by. The "Conversation on the Work of God" gives any minister who has been blessed with marked success an opportunity to cheer and rouse his brethren. Suggestions as to the best means for reaching the masses, building up the church, or shepherding the young, are also welcomed.

Ministerial character and orthodoxy are watched over with special jealousy. The Conference is the final court for the trial of all cases of discipline. Charges are generally referred to a committee of appeal, which brings in its report to the Conference. Candidates for the ministry, after passing through a searching and prolonged series of tests, are finally accepted or rejected by the Conference. Students who have completed their term at the connexional colleges are appointed to circuits, and reports of their reading and examinations are annually made until the four years of probation are over.

The great event of the pastoral session for a large proportion of the men is the discussion and confirmation of "stations," as the appointments for the year are called. The system of itinerancy allows no minister in the ordinary work to remain more than three years in a circuit. Each May District Committee chooses a representative to whom ministers and circuits make known the invitations given and accepted, or the arrangements which they wish to be made. When the Stationing Committee meets, the representative does his best for his own circuits and men. A "first draft" is issued before the Conference meets, but many changes have to be made before the "third draft" is read and confirmed. When six hundred men and six hundred circuits have to be considered and consulted, it is naturally a hard task to suit every individual case. It is surprising how well both men and places are satisfied with the result.

All matters affecting ministerial work come before the Conference in its pastoral session. Notices of motion, or reports brought in by committees appointed the previous year, sometimes give rise to great debates. Such was the debate at Camborne on the class-meeting, on the order of sessions, and on foreign missionary affairs. New men come to the front in these debates, but the fathers of the Conference are always looked up to for guidance. If opinion is seriously divided, or further consideration is deemed expedient, questions are referred to committees, or even submitted to the judgment of the district meetings. When all the work is finished, friends and hosts are admitted, and the Conference journal is signed by the president and secretary.

Up to 1878, as we have said, there was only one session of Conference. In that year, laymen first took their place in the assembly for the transaction of the financial business of Methodism. The "Representative Session," as it is called, meets in the third week—on the August Bank Holiday. It is composed of 240 ministers, with an equal number of laymen. At Camborne twelve laymen sat as treasurers of connexional funds, eighteen were chosen by the previous Conference, 210 were elected by the laymen in the various districts; 141 ministers were also selected by the ministers; the rest of the 240 were what one may call ex-officio members. A "Laymen's Special" ran from Paddington to Camborne. It is said that the Great Western never issued so many first-class tickets by a single train. Saturday was pleasantly spent among the beauties of the county. On Sunday the president preached his official sermon, and on Monday evening the annual Fernley Lecture was given. Business began on Monday morning with an inaugural address from the president, in which special reference was made to the lamented deaths of Alderman Sir William McArthur and Mr. Alderman Barlow, who were both honored members of the previous Conference. Each financial department has to present its report to the Representative Session, and important discussions often arise, such as the debates on Foreign Missions and on the Order of Sessions at Camborne. The "Conversation on the Work of God" bears witness to the self-sacrificing zeal and happy success of the laymen of Methodism in a spiritual work. When all business is transacted the journal is signed, and the representatives hasten back to their circuits. The Minutes of Conference published each year at the end of August bear witness how vast and varied is the business transacted by the Annual Conference of the people called Methodists, in its pastoral and representative sessions. — The Quiver.

The term "cross," as applied to the death of Christ, has, in the thoughts and affections of millions, become the symbol of the doctrine of salvation by that death. This term, as used and explained by the apostles, means hope for the guilty. There have been many crucifixions in the history of mankind: but this one crucifixion is distinguished from all others by the person who was the victim, and by the object for which he endured the cross. He died that sinners might be saved from "the second death." He came into the world to save sinners and to die for them.—The Independent.

THE SINGER OF AN HOUR.

BY CHARLES W. BUTLER.

The singer of an hour may seem
A voice that sings for transient time;
It is not so. The poet's dream
May change our lives forevermore,
We may re eat it o'er and o'er,
Ages may bless the powerful chyme
On some far-off and new-born shore.

Who knoweth song? Deep in the soul
Its anthems ring. Ah, none may tell
The mission of an anthem's swell
Until some trio hour makes it known!
Why listen we to music's tone
Entrancingly? Even the direful moan
Doth touch us with a wondrous thrill;
Encharmed are we by its own will,
And slay to hear the organ's roll.

Vibration is vibration given,
The human voice is heard in heaven,
And on the earth the seraph choir
Doth seem anear; then song doth make
The whole earth gladsome. For its sake
The heart grows calm, the strains of music roll,
Then life eternal fills the soul.

Administration of Discipline.

Methodism has always guarded with jealousy the purity of her doctrines. But none the less has she guarded the purity and scriptural validity of her discipline. Her legislative assemblies have been ever more engaged on the government of the church than with the matter of doctrine. Constantly our General Conference endeavors to increase the efficiency of our system of polity. This is rendered unnecessary in regard to doctrine by the fixed endorsement of the original articles under constitutional limitations. All that concerns us now is to see that our doctrines are faithfully preached by our ministry, and conformed to in the life of our members.

There is at this time a revival in our church on the matter of doctrines. Our representative men are zealous in maintaining the doctrinal standards of Mr. Wesley and the fathers. This is well. Purity of doctrine is first, but cognate with our doctrines are the integral and essential principles of discipline; and we can see the deep need in many places of a revival in discipline more plainly than that of doctrine. We have never improved on Mr. Wesley's creed, nor have we tried to do so. But we have been many times wiser than he in the sphere of government. He enjoined the use of the class meeting, and had a fixed probation for membership. We now have the class meeting in only very few of our congregations, and can see into the motives of the heart far enough to drop probation out of the book of discipline. The class meeting remains in the book, but practically is well-nigh dead. We have widened the door, but have very nigh eradicated the nursery of the church. We have a host of babies with no cradles, and no pap, and no switches.

Mr. Wesley made a round of pastoral visits to examine into the condition of the societies, and everything was in good order except in one place—London—where sixty-four had been expelled and seventy-six had left the church. These persons who were expelled were guilty of the same offenses as are common among men and go unrebuked in the church of to-day. I do not mean to say that they go unrebuked everywhere. Gross immorality had but one penalty—expulsion. So it stands in our Discipline now. But a new construction has become popular now in regard to this law. If the parties will quietly withdraw, they are permitted to do so. This is an impossibility in the nature of the case. Just as well say that the civil government can give a criminal the privilege to either stand his trial or leave the country. The integrity of the church is about as well concerned. Many a preacher has been deterred from executing the law by the want of co-operation in the church. The writer has several times tried to bring offenders to trial, but unable because a working committee could not be secured. If such measures as we have noticed above in the case of Mr. Wesley were to be adopted universally now, the protest would rise: "You'll kill the church; you'll become unpopular." But that was the foundation on which Methodism was built, and why it became such a power for good in the world. It had uncompromising opposition to all forms of vice and evil. It was a terror to evil-doers. If stringency of discipline would kill a church, Methodism would not have had an existence. But her grand achievements vindicate her course. So long as Rome maintained her disciplines (and it was the most rigid) among her youth and in her army her legions were unconquerable. Napoleon had the most perfect military discipline then known, and hence the most powerful armies.

There is a phase of administration in some places which has done great injury to our church. Those who have been in connection with it all along are not so sensible of the perils as persons who have been accustomed to a more stable regime. It is a kind of sectionalism. I have often been told by our preachers that there were certain sections of our Conference that did not submit to discipline as did other parts. And hence in that section, or those sections, many evils and infractions of law had to be condoned, for the reason that moral discipline well administered would disintegrate our membership. The natural result of this worldly wisdom is, that the church is without authority, and a low standard of church loyalty and Christian morals has become the fixed order. The proper administration of discipline in such communities has become impossible for the reason committees can not be obtained who will co-operate with the pastor. Why this difference? Is our church divided into two sections or classes, separate and independent? Have we two constructions of church law pliable enough to be compromised to whims of moral criminals? In some cases this has been too sadly true. Esau has sold his birthright for pottage, and can not regain it, though he seek it diligently with tears. Purity has been sold for carnal things, and lawlessness rules. This protean construction of discipline has caused much trouble and friction, and many a tear and heartache. One pastor will bury the discipline, and let it sleep the sleep of death undisturbed in the midst of moral obliquity; another will try, in keeping with his vows, to raise the bones and clothe them with uncorruptible life; but the soil is beaten hard, and the tomb is sealed by the Medes and Persians. It can not be changed. The admonition is promptly administered: "Go slowly, young Solomon; Bro. Cautious has spent two years here, and he never objected to these things about which you are kicking up a dust. You need not come as a reformer. He is one of the best men in the Conference, and a man with more sense and experience than you are. Now, you keep cool if you want your meat and bread." So the successors are in a dilemma; they must either bury their discipline, or bury their bodies.

What is the matter? A wrong beginning in the matter of discipline. Once becoming accustomed to laxness of discipline, they treat as an innovation any effort to assert the dignity of church authority. The way the twig is bent, the tree will incline. The pastor of one of our prominent city churches said to a friend some time since that his members were nearly all living in open violation of the Discipline, but that his hands were tied. Helpless as a child, he could do nothing, for the reason that he began with them wrong. Worldly members in A—— justify their lawless conduct by referring to prominent persons in our cities who are not made to answer for their conduct. The Discipline is uniform in its application to sin, and its power will be greatly enhanced by a uniform administration.

We have a great church, and we can not afford to lower the standards of morality, seeing that we have been so greatly blessed of God. Purity is power, and loyalty to Christ is the badge of victory. C. H. OWEN.

Presiding Elders, Districts and Laymen.

In the ADVOCATE, of March 28, appears an article from Bro. A. D. Miller, on "Quarterly Conferences," in which he suggests some things worthy of our consideration. As a church, we claim, and justly too, to have the best and most successful system of supplying the gospel to the people. Under this system our growth has been a source alike of wonder and admiration to our sister denominations. A Bishop to appoint the men, giving every preacher a work and every work a pastor; then grouping the works into districts, and appointing strong, sagacious men as presiding elders, has proven not only the most fruitful, but also the most harmonious plan of evangelizing the world. It is reasonable to conclude that with such a plan we desire to get the most good possible out of every department. Bro. Miller says that one reason why the "Quarterly Conferences are not what they ought to be is, that the districts are too large." And this, no doubt, explains, in a considerable measure, his two other reasons given for the failure of the Quarterly Conference to accomplish what it might and should. I do not claim to any great wisdom in the forming of districts; neither have I, nor do I covet, any experience in the work of the presiding eldership. I have seen and heard enough to convince me that his office is no sinecure, and, under the present system of excessively large districts, well calculated to restrict his usefulness and transform him into a veritable fossil. With a district embracing, in many instances, from sixteen to twenty appointments, scattered over eight or ten counties, to be visited once in every three months, we readily see gives no time for rest to the body, no time for formulating or executing new plans, no time for entering new fields and no time for attention to books. No matter how much he may desire to look into new fields; no matter what may be his spirit of aggressiveness, no matter how he may long to study hooks, necessity is upon him, and he must be on the go if he succeeds even partially in keeping up the work committed to his care.

No wonder a presiding elder was heard to say, at a recent session of his Conference, that he had traveled more and talked less during the previous year than in any year of his life. Those twenty appointments in his district give him little time for anything else. Yet what a power for good to pastors and people that presiding elder would he if he were not so hurried! As it is, he is doing a most remarkably successful work. Under the principle of division and subdivision, the appointments in our Conferences are increasing every year. For instance, the Mississippi Conference has increased since 1876 from 95 to 123 appointments (enough for two districts of 14 appointments each), while at the same time the districts have been reduced from eight to seven in number—1876 being the last year in which appointments to eight districts appear in our Minutes. What is more suggestive, I find that the membership in 1876 is reported at less than 22,000, while the Minutes for 1888 is reported at more than 33,000. Likewise there has been an increase in number of churches of 88, and in Sunday-schools of 212. Thus we see while there has been a marked increase on every line that the presiding elders have been the only ones among us whose burdens have not been lightened. Their fields have enlarged in responsibilities, while they only have been reduced in numbers.

I know that the plea of inability to support so many presiding elders is strongly urged by some; and my observations at a recent meeting of the district stewards of a certain district convinced me how deeply this idea had taken hold upon the people or, at least, their representatives. No Roman ever contended more valiantly for his rights than did that presiding elder for a fair, decent living, and that, too, on a district of nineteen appointments.

To return to my statistics: I find that the 22,000 members in 1876 paid for the support of eight presiding elders, $6,241—nearly 30 cents per capita; in 1888 33,413 members paid $7,313 50—less than 22 cents per member. Are we not, by the very policy we are pursuing, educating our people to put a discount upon these hard-worked, worthy men?

Frequently we hear the charge made that the presiding elder is in too much of a hurry to get acquainted with the people. How can it be otherwise under the existing circumstances? The arguments for lay representation in the cabinet would all be met by the forming of smaller districts, which would give more time for better acquaintance with the works and ascertaining the views of the people. I am convinced that our lay brethren do not desire such recognition, and, on the other hand, I am persuaded that they will be more than willing to support, in every Conference, a sufficient number of elders to do the work without haste and worry. A return to the horse and buggy by the presiding elders (which is impossible under the present arrangement of districts), a better acquaintance of elders and people, and a mutual sympathy each with the other would, no doubt, do much toward solving the questions of support and lay representation in the cabinet.

The seventh Annual Convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Louisiana, was held in Alexandria, Rapides parish, La., April 25, 1889.

The convention was called to order at half-past nine by Mrs. Caroline E. Merrick. The court-house of Rapides parish, which had been vacated by the district court, now in session, presented a scene of beauty, with floral decorations, the walls festooned with appropriate mottoes, and a fine new piano sent for the use of the convention by Mr. P. Werlein, of New Orleans.

Devotional exercises were held by the Rev. B. F. White, in the absence of Rev. John T. Sawyer, of New Orleans, who had been assigned to that duty.

An address of welcome was read by Miss Lizzie Pickens, one of the beautiful and talented daughters of Rapides parish. The address was poetic in thought, and beautiful in expression, and was well received.

Miss Susie Lyons, of New Orleans, responded to this address in an appropriate and beautiful manner. We are sorry that space forbids a report of this excellent and well-received response.

Various visiting and honorary delegates then responded to calls for remarks. Among the number thus replying were the Revs. Marcy Lyons, Van Valkenburgh, and H. C. Duncan. His Honor, Judge Blackman, who had so courteously granted the use of the court-house to the convention, was then thanked for his kindness. The judge, with maiden modesty, but with the true eloquence that always characterizes him, responded in graceful, though few remarks.

Devotional exercises were then conducted in a devout and reverential manner by Miss Frances E. Willard, the president of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Mrs. Emma A. White, the State corresponding secretary, then read a careful and elaborate report of the affairs of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union in Louisiana during the past year.

The convention was favored with a beautiful and instructive address to young women by the talented Miss Anna Gordon, secretary to Miss Frances E. Willard. Mrs. Chapin, of South Carolina, then followed. She left the impression upon all of being the woman Ulysses of the convention, and truly words of wisdom fell as snow-flakes from her sanctified lips. The two above addresses were to children, and the children listened attentively, and were instructed.

Mrs. Caroline E. Merrick made her annual address. It was weighty and convincing. Miss Frances E. Willard followed with an address unexcelled in beauty, rhetoric and oratory. As the president of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Miss Willard is the most prominent woman in the world. The large audience which was present listened greedily to the words of this lady, who is doing more to shape public opinion on the most important subject now before our nation than any other living person. Her speech, whether convincing or not, was food for thought for the most thoughtful, and was the subject of universal comment.

The principal discussion upon the report on resolutions was held on the question of introducing temperance work among the negroes. The opinion of the convention was unanimous that this work should be encouraged and pushed among the brethren in black. Among others speaking on the subject was Col. Robert Hunter, an honorary delegate. Rev. Ford, a negro preacher present, very ably represented the colored race before the ladies, and secured from them the promise of an address to the colored people before the convention adjourned.

Hon. Goodale, of Baton Rouge, made an eloquent address, reviewing the civilization of ancient Egypt, Greece and Rome, in relation to the home, and applying his remarks to the home-life of the present times. Mr. Goodale's address concluded with a beautiful reference to "Home, Sweet Home," which beautiful song was rendered by the choir and audience. Miss Willard again addressed the large audience in a thrilling and touching way.

The following State officers have been elected: Mrs. Caroline E. Merrick, president; Mrs. Emma A. White, corresponding secretary; Mrs. J. J. Lyons, recording secretary; Mrs. F. R. Hardon, treasurer.

Mrs. Sallie Chapin, of South Carolina, was received with the applause which her popularity merits. Her address was made to the South—the people. She believed that woman suffrage would come in its own good time; that was not her affair. Her object was prohibition. She blamed the Christian Church for apathy in temperance work.

Mrs. M. R. Goodale, the State temperance organizer, reported, showing that she had held temperance meetings, and organized or reorganized Unions in almost everyone of the larger towns of the State. She showed that public sentiment throughout the State was more healthy as regards temperance work. She also spoke in favor of regular parish, district and State organizations.

Mrs. M. C. Cole reported on juvenile work. She showed that many large Bands of Hope had been organized throughout the State, aggregating in all about two hundred children. She urged more earnest work in this department, and requested more prompt and full reports on juvenile work from the various Unions. She recommended the "Young Crusaders'" paper be placed in each organization.

Miss Susie L. Lyons, superintendent of the Flower Mission, reported, showing that there was but one Flower Mission—in New Orleans; but the work done there had been efficient and appreciated by the recipients of its benefits, namely: the occupants of the alms-houses, hospitals, jails, etc. The flowers they present are "something white, something bright, and something sweet." Mrs. Chapin then arose and showed that flower missions originated among the women of the South, at the home of Miss Jenny Cassidy, in Louisville, Ky.

Mrs. Garner, superintendent of press work, was absent; but Mrs. Emma A. White read a report of her work for her.

Miss Towne reported on behalf of work done for the Union Signal.

Miss Helen Harp then reported, on behalf of her mother, on Sabbath observance. Miss Harp read a well-written report.

Mrs. Alice Zahie reported on prison and jail work, showing little work had been done in this line except in Lake Providence, Baton Rouge, and New Orleans. They hope to secure police matrons in jails and penitentiaries.

Mrs. Goodale, superintendent of scientific temperance instruction, then reported.

Invitations were received from many towns of the State to entertain the next convention; but the decision was left to the Executive Committee, and Ruston was chosen.

The Mississippi Methodist Male College.

MR. EDITOR: Of course, the Mississippi Methodist Male College is a fixed fact. At least, it is so nearly a fixed fact that quite a number of brethren have written, suggesting the very place for it to be located. I have watched the letters, setting forth the advantages of the various localities that are bidding for the institution. Winona wants it. Jackson wants it. The coast country is desirous to have it. And many other places are mentioned. They are all, so far as I know, good places in which to build up said school. But I do not think the place is yet named. So I will try my hand at a suggestion. Let the commission to be appointed, to locate the college, buy a large tract of land—one thousand, or more, acres—on some line of railroad, in a healthy section of the State, and build up a village or town to suit the emergency. Then control the territory. Fix it so no whisky or any other evil influences can be brought in to corrupt the boys who will be sent to school there. Own the land and lease it for a term of years to only the right kind of people. You catch my idea. Let some wiser man than myself enlarge upon it. I am indebted to a strong layman, who has had much to do with the education of boys, in a town, for the idea.

The Sunday Rest Movement.

The American Sabbath Union, constituted by the various branches of the Protestant Church, is sending through the land its field secretary, Wilbur F. Crafts, to proclaim a crusade against the various forms of desecration that have invaded and partly captured the Sabbath of rest. He presents both the religious and the civil aspects of the Sabbath, showing how it is at once the law of God and in harmony with the constitution of the country and of man, with liberty of conscience, and especially with the interests and desires of the wage-earners of the land.

He will speak in New Orleans, by invitation of the New Orleans Evangelical Union, on or about May 17, 18 and 19. Particulars will be announced later. It is hoped that all Sabbath-loving people of all denominations, as well as the many labor organizations of our city, will, by their active sympathy, assist in demonstrating that the interests and desires of the great mass of our population are in harmony with this movement for keeping inviolate the divinely instituted SABBATH OF REST.

From the Work.

BRANDON, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: We have just closed a series of meetings embracing eight days. The beginning was quite gloomy, owing to the unsettled state of the weather, which continued from the first day until about the third; but, despite it all, the congregations were good both day and night until Wednesday night, when the magnetism of Miss Willard became so great in Jackson as to draw off a number of our congregation, thereby weakening the interest of the meeting materially. At the same time the undersigned contracted a violent cold, which reached its acme the next day after the conclusion of the meeting. Bros. Frank Robinson and J. N. Tucker gave us two sermons each, which we appreciated most highly. Bro. Kerr (Presbyterian) preached three sermons for us when we were in the poorest kelter for preaching. We were, however, able to preach the last sermon the night we closed the meeting. While the results were not what we earnestly desired them to be; yet, taking into consideration all the disadvantages and embarrassments under which we were compelled to labor, we are constrained to say that they were very encouraging. Many Christians were blessed, and formed new resolutions to live nearer to God in the future than they had during the past. A woman's prayer meeting was inaugurated, which is something new for this place; so I have been informed. We had seven accessions to the church, making a total of twelve this year. If it had not been for our ill-health, we would have continued a fortnight anyhow; and if we had done so, it is likely that the results would have exceeded our expectations.

We are more and more pleased with this work. Our steward meetings are held regularly and successfully; so are our church Conferences. Our weekly prayer meeting is well attended. The Sunday-school is improving all the time. Our congregations on Sundays are increasing all the time; and, the best of all, we are improving spiritually, and, therefore, hope to secure a number of subscribers to the ADVOCATE during the year.

DONALDSONVILLE, LA.

MR. EDITOR: Rev. William Wimberly (our pastor) last night brought the protracted meeting, that has been in progress for the past two weeks at the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in this town, to a close.

We have had a wonderful revival. Catholics, Hebrews, and all the different denominations of Protestants have attended in great numbers the preaching of the gospel by Revs. H. S. Johns, of Washington, and A. D. McVoy, Jr., of Natchitoches. These brethren have rendered noble service for the cause of our blessed Savior, and their preaching is indelibly stamped on the hearts of this community, and will never be forgotten as long as Donaldsonville has a place on the map. God's Word has been scattered abroad, and will bring forth good fruit.

This is a blessing that Donaldsonville has long needed; and, thank God, it has at last arrived; and it would have done you good to have seen about two hundred happy people last night come up around the altar and give Bro. McVoy their hand, in token of a wish to meet him in heaven, and that they would struggle, with God's help, to reach the golden shore.

Rev. J. G. Freeman came down from Clinton, La., and on Sunday preached to a German congregation of about forty persons, most of whom understood the German.

We hope all Christians will give God thanks in their prayers that the love of Christ may grow brighter, day by day, in this corner of our blessed country.

W. W. BUFORD.

P. S.—It was shown clearly in our protracted meeting the good resulting from our Sunday-school that was organized here last July. Almost everyone who joined the church was in some way connected with the Sunday-school. "God bless our little Sunday-school!" is our prayer. W. W. B.

MOSS POINT, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: After four months' residence here, I desire to say this people "wear well." The moral tone of this community is, perhaps, better than anywhere else on the coast. Protestantism is in the ascendency, and is well represented by Methodists, Presbyterians and Baptists. The Catholics have a church here, but not a resident priest. There is not a Jew in the place.

We have lost three valuable members of our church here this year by death. Two of them were from the Board of Stewards. The "Lord buries his workmen, but carries on his work."

The stewards here know their duty, and perform it. For the first time during my ministry I have been entirely free from anxious care about the collections. The stewards attend to all financial matters. They are business men, and know what business is. In a little while they will supply the parsonage with a horse and buggy. They are almost in sight now.

In addition to the regular salary, which is paid monthly, the church here occasionally gives the pastor a severe "pounding." I suppose they do it to take the starch out of him. We have just passed through the fearful ordeal. They plied in on us dry goods and groceries—from a spool of thread to a barrel of flour. We still survive, and are most thankful.

A protracted meeting will commence here the first Sunday in May. Will report results. L. CARLEY.

GIVE TO-DAY A CHANCE.—In winter there are no roses blooming in the deserted, wind-swept, snow-covered garden. Nor in summer do crystal snows fly fair. Each season has its own work, its own beauty, and by hands of another season this work can not be done; this beauty can not be breathed. And so of man's life. Each season has its own duties and its own joys; and if they are not laid hold of, no other season can make up the loss; they are gone down the dim, untraversed river of Forever. Each day, indeed, has its duty, its own smile, its own tear, its own heart-throb. If only it be lived in for itself, life would be fuller and richer in everything; and the clusters of blessedness hanging from the boughs of each day would proclaim life's every season to have wrought well, and to deserve well for what lies before. Alas! that we let the burdening to-morrows crush the energy and strength out of to-day, so that its work is undone or marringly done. Give your to-day a chance, my brother. Give it only its own work to do, and evening will find you laughing over the beauty and faithfulness that smiles up to you from the well-done duties; and the eternal to-morrow will meet you with kisses of tenderness, not with wounding blows.—Thought-Etchings.

In all Christian countries men are trained to a tender care of wives, mothers and sisters; and a chivalrous impulse to protect and provide for helpless womanhood is often stronger in men than in most women.—Catherine E. Beecher.

LESSON VII.—May 19.

THE LORD'S SUPPER.

Mark xiv, 12-20.

GOLDEN TEXT.—This do in remembrance of me.—Luke xxii, 9.

TIME.—A. D. 29. The evening before the crucifixion.

PLACE.—Jerusalem.

PARALLEL PASSAGES.—Matt. xxvi, 17-24; Luke xxii, 7-16.

12. The first day of unleavened bread—The feast of unleavened bread being during the seven days after the passover, and commencing the next day after the passover supper. When they killed the passover—It was on the passover night that our Lord instituted the sacrament as a bloodless continuation of the same commemoration, divested of its special Jewish significance. And our Lord himself was slain at this very feast, which was appointed by Moses to predict beforehand his death. On this occasion the Jews slew, not only the typical victim, but the real Victim typified by their feasts and sacrifices. Where wilt thou—They may have expected, considering the complete seclusion of Wednesday, that he would eat it at Bethany; for the village was reckoned, as regards religious purposes, part of Jerusalem by the rabbis, and the Lamb might be eaten there, though it must be killed at the temple.

13. He sendeth forth ... two of his disciples—Whose names (Peter and John) have been preserved by Luke. Go ye into the city—He, the true Paschal Lamb, was to be sacrificed once and forever in the Holy City, where it is probable that in that passover, and on the very same day, some 260,000 of those lambs of which he was the antitype were destined to be slain. A man bearing a pitcher of water—A very unusual sight in the East, where the water is drawn by women. This could have been known only by the infinite knowledge of Christ. Such a thing could not have been conjectured, nor was there any concert between him and the man, that at that time he should be in a particular place to meet them, for the disciples themselves proposed the inquiry.

14. Say ye to the good-man—From Mark and Luke it is apparent that no agreement had been made by the Lord for the room, else he would not have given such directions to the two apostles, but have sent them directly to the house. The Master saith—The word master is correlative to the word disciples; and thus it is clearly implied that the householder is a follower of Jesus. Indeed, when we recollect that the rulers were afraid of the multitudes, as being adherents of Jesus, we may reasonably infer that the number of those who would call him "Master" was not few. The guest-chamber—It was the generic term for a hired lodging—the khan or caravansary of the East.

15. Upper room—A Greek word, meaning any room above the ground floor, or up-stairs, where the best apartments of an Oriental house are usually found. Make ready—There are evidently two preparations for the passover mentioned in this sentence: that of the room, already made by the proprietor; and that of the lamb, with its accompaniments, bread and wine and bitter herbs, which was now to be made by the two disciples, and which they did make, as recorded in verse sixteen, where we learn no new fact but the simple execution of the Savior's orders.

16. Made ready the passover—That is, they procured a paschal lamb, multitudes of which were kept for sale in the temple; they procured it to be killed and flayed by the priests, and the blood to be poured at the altar; they roasted the lamb, and prepared the bitter herbs, the sauce, and the unleavened bread. As the new day opened, at sunset, the carcass was trussed for roasting, with two skewers of pomegranate wood, so that they formed a cross in the lamb. It was then put in an earthern oven of a special kind, resting, without bottom, on the ground, and was roasted in the earth. The feast could begin immediately after the setting of the sun and the appearing of the stars, on the opening of the fifteenth of Nisan, which was proclaimed by new trumpet-blasts from the temple.

17. In the evening—The lamb was killed between the evenings, Exodus xii, 6 (Hebrew); that is, between three o'clock P. M. and nine in the evening. The Jews reckoned two evenings, one from three o'clock P. M. to sunset, the other from sunset to the close of the first watch in the night, or nine o'clock. The paschal supper was commonly eaten after the setting of the sun, and often in the night. (Exodus xii, 8.) With the twelve—Judas must have stolen back to Bethany before daylight, and mother day of hypocrisy had been spent under the penetrating glance of him who could read the hearts of men.

18. They sat and did eat—It had been the custom in ancient times to eat the passover standing, but the rabbis had changed it for the Gentile practice of reclining. It was like slaves, they said, to eat standing, and as Israel was not a race of slaves, but of freemen, they should eat the feast reclining; a flattery so pleasing to Jewish pride that even the poorest adopted the new mode. Each guest reclined at full length, leaning on his left elbow, that his right hand might be free. At the right hand of Jesus reclined the beloved disciple, whose head, therefore, could, at any moment, be placed upon the breast of his friend and Lord. One of you which eateth with me shall betray me—In regard to the conversation by which our Lord specified Judas as the betrayer, I think the true order of things will be best ascertained by reading in sections Matthew xxvi, 21-23, then John xiii, 23-26, then Matthew xxvi, 24, 25, and last John xiii, 27-30. We thereby trace the gradual climax by which our Lord first makes a general charge, then narrows it to a group, then so reveals it to one as that it would be well known to all, and then identifies the traitor to himself.

19. Began to be sorrowful—John says they looked on one another, like men in anxiety, conscious, each one, except Judas, of no such intention, and each one beginning to examine himself, to find whether he was the person intended. Is it I—Their language expresses in the original a much stronger negation than in our version: Surely not I, Lord! The guilty would, if possible, always conceal their crimes. The innocent are ready to suspect that they may have done wrong. Their feelings are tender, and they inquire with solicitude whether there may not be something in their bosoms, unknown to themselves, that may be a departure from right feeling. None of them said, "Is it he?" So utterly unconscious were they of the treachery that lurked in their midst.

20. One of the twelve, that dippeth with me in the dish—The passion meal was not the ordinary eating from the dish. The head of the family distributed the portions. The case is thus to be conceived: Jesus was about to hand Judas his portion. Now, it is a psychological fact that an evil conscience causes the hand to move with an uneasy motion, even at the moment when one succeeds in showing a hypocritical face full of innocence and calmness. ... So, accordingly, does the traitorous hand of Judas, betraying him, hastily extend itself, it would appear, to meet the Lord's hand, as it is still in the dish, in order, with feigned ease, to receive the sop.

21. The Son of man ... goeth—He marches with unfaltering step in the way to the scene of death, as marked out by the divine prophecies. Yet that does not exculpate the authors of his death. But woe to that man—Offenses and crimes must come, not because God has ordained them, but because in the nature of sin they can not but come, as fruit must come on the tree; but not to that man who deliberately plans and hastens these wicked works. Good were it for that man, etc.—A proverbial expression for the most terrible destiny, forbidding the thought of any deliverance, however remote. A man's existence is turned into a curse to him when he inverts the grand moral purpose contemplated in its divine origin.

22. As they did eat—The very fact that our Lord instituted his supper on the same evening as the paschal supper shows that it is a continuance in a modified form. And blessed—As was the custom, Luke and Paul say, "gave thanks," which is the same thing. The blessing "changed the bread, not in substance, not in quantity, not in quality, but in use, in purpose, in sanctity." This is my body—His body was then before them living. And there is no greater absurdity than to imagine his living body there changed at once to death, and then the bread to be changed into that dead body, and all the while the living body of Jesus was before them. Yet this is the absurd and impossible doctrine of the Roman Catholics, holding that the bread and wine were literally changed into the body and blood of our Lord. Common sense ought to show that our Lord is now explaining the import of certain symbols, and in so doing he uses the ordinary phrase of saying that the symbol is the real thing symbolized.

23. He took the cup—That is, the cup of wine which they used at the feast of the passover, called the cup of Hallel, or praise, because they commenced then repeating the psalms with which they closed the passover. They all drank of it—(An expression not used of the bread); a sort of prospective or prophetic comment on the withholding of the cup from the laity in the Church of Rome.

24. My blood of the new testament—Better, this is my blood of the covenant; the best manuscripts omitting the word "new" both here and in Matthew (xxvi, 28). The word testament properly signifies covenant, or agreement by God with men, in the which he prescribes a system of duties and conditions, and promises his blessings. Under Moses, he had the old covenant or testament; under Christ, the new. And so the two volumes of the Bible are called the Old Testament and the New. It need hardly be remarked that the title of the New Testament is derived from this passage. It is interesting to get our Lord's own commentary upon the significance of his death and sacrifice. It was not a splendid example of dying for a principle, but it was the actual offering of a sacrifice in accordance with a covenant. It told of redemption. Shed for many—No stress is to be laid on this word many, as not being all, here; it is placed in opposition to the one life which is given—the one for many—and not with any distinction from all. In the usage of these two words, as applied to our redemption by Christ, all is the objective, many the subjective, designation of those for whom Christ died. He died for all, as outward matter of fact; but as matter of individual participation, the great multitude whom no man can number, many will be the saved by him in the end.

25. I will drink no more—Our Lord means that he will not drink the symbolical wine, but will wait until he can drink the real wine which this typifies in the heavenly kingdom. In the kingdom of God—Not to be weakened into "in the Christian dispensation." It points to the victory of the church, not to its conflicts; and the continued celebration of the Lord's Supper is an expression of assured victory on the part of his militant church.

26. They sat and did eat—It had been the custom in ancient times to eat the passover standing, but the rabbis had changed it for the Gentile practice of reclining. It was like slaves, they said, to eat standing, and as Israel was not a race of slaves, but of freemen, they should eat the feast reclining; a flattery so pleasing to Jewish pride that even the poorest adopted the new mode. Each guest reclined at full length, leaning on his left elbow, that his right hand might be free. At the right hand of Jesus reclined the beloved disciple, whose head, therefore, could, at any moment, be placed upon the breast of his friend and Lord. One of you which eateth with me shall betray me—In regard to the conversation by which our Lord specified Judas as the betrayer, I think the true order of things will be best ascertained by reading in sections Matthew xxvi, 21-23, then John xiii, 23-26, then Matthew xxvi, 24, 25, and last John xiii, 27-30. Letter from Japan.

MR. EDITOR: I wrote you some two weeks since from the city of Tokushima, on the island of Shikoku, where I spent a most pleasant month laboring among the people. When I went there in February, I knew but one person who was interested in Christianity, a Miss Saito, whose acquaintance I made last year. As soon as she learned I was there, she came to the house, bringing her sister with her. In a day or two I visited her home, read and prayed with the mother and two daughters. The next evening four ladies came to a meeting at my house. Each evening I held Bible classes, closing the exercises with a prayer meeting. In three or four days the number increased to twelve or fifteen. These meetings I continued for four weeks each evening, with sometimes as many as forty persons present. Miss Saito was greatly blessed during the meetings, and, with her heart filled with the love of God, she went to work in earnest in her own family. Very soon her mother and sister were converted. She then plead with her father and brother and grandmother, who is over eighty years of age. Her earnest prayers, night and day, in her home prevailed, and finally her father, brother and grandmother yielded, and they said, "We will be Christians." Her grandmother began to come to the meetings, and continued to do so up to the night of my leaving them. Her brother also came. Miss Saito extended her efforts in every direction, but principally among her neighbors. She was instrumental in bringing many to the church. Some of the young ladies of the Government School and also a number of young men came to the meeting. Two of the young ladies were daughters of one of the highest officials in the place, a judge of the court. He and his wife are much interested in Christianity, and I think will soon become Christians. His wife was absent at the time of my visit.

On March 24 I baptized four ladies. Many of those present seemed deeply moved by the Spirit of God. The interest in these meetings continued through the whole month, and when I told them I could not remain any longer they felt very sad, and said, "What shall we do for some one to teach us?" Some of them said, "If you go to Kobe, then we will go with you, for we want to learn more about Christianity." I told them Mr. Brown and his wife were expected there in a few days, and they would carry on these meetings and teach them. Mr. Brown is of the Southern Presbyterian Church, and has already arrived in Tokushima.

When the last night came about forty persons were present, and, as everything had to be sent aboard the steamer, we had to take our seats on the mats. We had a good meeting, and the servant girl who came with Mr. Watanabe's daughters said she felt happy and wanted to be baptized. I think she was truly converted. She said when she went home, about ten miles distant, she was going to persuade every one to be Christians. When I started for the steamer eight of these ladies and the servant girl and some eight or ten young men went with me; and there being no first-class passengers, we took possession of the main cabin and held another prayer meeting. It was late before they left the steamer. I felt sad at leaving them; but my prayers go with them. I feel sure the Lord will bless them more and more. The Lord is with them and working in the hearts of many in that city. The work of grace going on there in that city is truly wonderful! Also good news comes to me from Najima, another part of my work. Many prominent families are reading the Bible and seeking earnestly the light which the gospel of Christ brings to men. I hope to spend two or three weeks in May with those good people, trying to lead them to Christ. Pray for us. Can not our church send us more men? We need three more men to-day to fill some important places in this important field. Many places are open to us, and hundreds are holding out their hands asking us to help them.

Ever your brother in Christ,

J. W. LAMBUTH.

Peculiar

To itself in many important particulars, Hood's Sarsaparilla is different from and superior to any other medicine.

Peculiar in combination, proportion and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the full curative value of the best known remedies of the vegetable kingdom.

Peculiar in its medicinal merit, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures hitherto unknown.

Peculiar in strength and economy—Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "100 doses one dollar." Medicines in larger and smaller bottles require larger doses, and do not produce as good results as Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Peculiar in its "good name at home"—there is more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell, where it is made, than of all other blood purifiers.

Peculiar in its phenomenal record of sales abroad, no other preparation has ever attained such popularity in so short a time. Do not be induced to take any other preparation. Be sure to get Selfishness in Religion.

The Apostle Paul, speaking to Christians, and including himself among them, says: "None of us liveth to himself." That simple sentence eliminates every element of selfishness from the Christian character. How ridiculous it looks to write, "A selfish Christian"! How absurdly it sounds to say, "A selfish Christian"! As far as we have been able to learn it, the Christian character is a copy of our Lord's human character. It often is a very imperfect copy, but where the heart has been truly touched by divine grace there is a transformation—a regeneration—in which the outlines will accord with the original pattern: and then the contiuual touches of the Holy Spirit will bring out the full expression to a correct likeness of that original. The completed Christian growth has its best description in John's simple words: "We shall be like him!"

God is love—essential, infinite, eternal love. Religion is this love, flowing continually into the individual soul, and lighting its dark chambers with its bright beams. "If thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light." Where this diviue love enters, the selfish love of self is destroyed, for this love is the manifested expression of the divine benevolence. Selfishness and benevolence can no more exist iu the same soul at the same time than can light and darkuess dwell together. By so much, then, as the element of selfishness is a constituent of a man's character, by that much is his religious character defective. He is not a complete Christian who does not allow the divine love to pervade aud penetrate and inter-penetrate his whole nature. If he locks the door to any part of his nature, and thus keeps the divine lovo out of that part, he is defectivo as a Christian.

This, perhaps, accounts for the fact that we see many one-sided Christians in the church—men and women who are religious only in certain directions. There are some who seem to be religious in the matter of giviug. They give at every call, aud they give according to their ability, and yet they will not scruple to do other things that are essentially wicked. There are some who scrupulously attend to home and church duties, and yet when they go abroad, by some sort of inexplicable process, they become transformed into "retailers of petty neighborhood scandal." Does the love of God pervade the whole heing of such people? Is that love the foundation upon which rests such opposite modes of action? "Doth a fountain send forth at the same place sweet water and bitter?" "Can the fig tree bear olive berries?" Such persons are religious in particular directions only, and their religion is defective in all other directions. Their Christian light is like to a candle which they carry in tho hand by the side. It throws its feeble beam out in but one direction, while they themselves stand in their own light, and throw the dark shadows in all other directions.

When we analyze these defects, we find them to be, in some cases, the negative aspect of selfishness, and in other cases its positive aspect. In either case there is a failure to reach in the life the apostle's truth: "None of us liveth to himself." There is not manifested an unreserved devotedness to the Lord in all the concerns of life. That devotion is an essential to Christian character and Christian living. "Whether we live, we live unto the Lord." So important is it that even devoted living is not enough. "Whether we die, we die unto the Lord." So it excludes selfishuess from the life and also from the death of the Christian. And the grand triumph of the principle of love comes out in Paul's words of victory: "Whether we live or die, we are the Lord's." Reader, can you say that?

Greenville District Conference.

The twenty-second session of the Greenville District Conference was held at Cleveland, Miss., on the L., N. O. and T., from April 26 to 28. The Conference convened at nine o'clock A. M. in the beautiful new church just completed—Rev. R. M. Standifer, P. E., in the chair, with all but two of the preachers present, and a large representation of the lay delegates. Rev. T. Y. Ramsey, Jr., was unanimously elected secretary. Rev. J. W. Bachman, Sunday-school agent and colporteur of the North Mississippi Conference, together with Rev. Mr. Curtis, missionary of the Sunday-School Union, and the publisher of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE were introduced to the Confereuce and iuvited to seats within the bar. At three o'clock, of the first day of the Conference, Bishop Galloway arrived, and was escorted to the chair by the presiding elder, Bro. Standifer. During the sessiou all the interests of the district were carefully and thoroughly inquired into by the Conference under the judicious direction of the presiding Bishop.

The reports showed a marked improvement all over the district in the spiritual condition of the churches. Tue finances are well up, notwithstanding there is, on the whole, uo system of collection. The wonder is, how so much can be accomplished as was reported without system. Surely "it is the Lord's work." Tho rule is, we believe, to carry on the finances of the church on business principles. Well, here is an exeeption, for the work has progressed, and is still going on, without the aid of the first business principle. New churches were reported from all over tho district; others in course of construction; more about to be commenced, and still more contemplated. If the laymen of the district would get as much system in the financial management of their charges as the preachers are giving in consecrated effort, *Method*ism in a few years would very soon own the district and hold it for God. We put the brethren on notice, whose District Conferences have not been held, that if Bishop Galloway presides, they will be asked for a financial plan.

With a few exceptions, the Sunday-school interests are carefully fostered and guarded. There has been a large increase of membership throughout the district.

Altogether, we have never seen a finer body of men, intellectually, spiritually and financially, making up a District Conference; and we believe all felt, as was generally expressed, that this was one of the most enjoyable and profitable Conferences ever held in the district.

Saturday night Bishop Galloway, in his inimitable way, presented the interests of the Mississippi Male College in an address on Christian education, and at the close was cheerfully responded to by those present with gifts aggregating $3,030. The college is an assured fact, and the contribution of the Greenville district leads all others thus far. Bishop Galloway says "the preachers are the moneyed men of this country;" and it certainly looked like it the way they contributed.

Sunday morning, at eleven o'clock, the Bishop preached to a congregation that filled the altar steps, aisles and overflowed the church. It goes without saying that all enjoyed a feast of fat things. Sunday afternoon, at three o'clock, was the Conference love-feast.

The committee's report on books and periodicals showed our Sunday-school literature and church paper in general circulation. The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE has nearly doubled its circulation in the district this year, which, with the committee's report, gave it a hearty endorsement. By resolution, the presiding elder was authorized and requested to secure a competent man to labor as missionary among the colored people.

A resolution was unanimously adopted by a rising vote, thanking the good people of Cleveland, which included all the Protestant denominations, for their generous hospitality.

Judge W. R. Trigg and D. C. Wasson, Esq., of Greenville; E. H. Moore, Esq., of Rosedale, and T. B. Johnson, Esq., of Cleveland, were elected delegates to the next Annual Conference, with J. V. Lobdell, Esq., and Rev. H. C. Edmonson as alternates. Bolivar was selected as the place for holding the next District Conference.

NOTES.

Through Rev. T. Y. Ramsey, Jr., the Rosedale charge made a most remarkable report. The Sunday-school has sixty scholars and twenty teachers. In the Sunday-school is a band of seven little girls called the "Willing Workers"—whose names are Lottie C. Moore, Mary Dulaney, Hattie Dulany, Fannie Clark, Anna Clark, Margarot Clark, Lottie Clark, Fannie Pearson, Irene Jones, Blanch Jones, Maud Sillers, Ella Jones and Annie Jones—of which little Miss Lottie C. Moore is president. Through their self sacrificing efforts they have raised $200 for their beautiful church, now nearly finished. The Ladies' Aid Society has raised nearly sufficient money to furnish the church with seats and carpet. Rosedale has one hundred and nine members; forty-three accessions since Conference.

The publisher was hospitably entertained at the home of Bro. and Sister Epperson.

Dr. Newell, of the Grenada Female College, attended the Conference in the interest of his school; gave a most encouraging report, and preached a most eloquent sermon Saturday at eleven o'clock.

Rev. J. W. McCrary, one of our missionaries to the Indians, and one of our Indian preachers, Rev. W. J. Folsom, from the Indian Territory, were introduced, and addressed the Conference in the interest of a college for boys. Both of these brethren impressed the people favorably. A collection was taken up for the college.

Bro. Bowen reported more males attending Sunday-school in his charge than females; 151 scholars and 15 teachers. At New Salem every member of the church attends the Sunday-school.

J. G. G.

Greenville.

While attending the District Conference at Cleveland, Bro. J. A. Bowen invited the publisher of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE to visit Greenville. We had been in Greenville some fifteen years ago, and had a desire to see the place; so we accepted the invitation. There is little of the Greenville of fifteen years ago left, nearly all of the old town having been washed into the river by the caving banks of the Mississippi. The city was a most agreeable surprise. It has between eight and nine thousand inhabitants. Illuminated with electric lights; four lines of street-cars, four banks, an oil mill, cotton compresses, ice factory, and some of the livest and most substantial business houses in the South. There are some of the handsomest residences and grounds to be found in the South, and, as far as our acquaintance went, the most charming people. We were hospitably entertained at the residence of Dr. Montgomery, one of Mississippi's noblest sons, from one of her oldest and most aristocratic families. Mrs. Montgomery entertains in true Southern style, and is one of the brightest ornaments of the church, as well as a leader in Christian society; abundant in labors, "fervent in spirit, serving the Lord in all she does."

There has been a constant revival going on in the church since the great ingathering following the Sam Jones' meeting. Rev. J. A. Bowen, the pastor, is doing a wonderful work. The door of the church is always open, and accessions are constantly being made. A $25,000 church is contemplated, and will be built.

Our Indian preacher, Rev. W. J. Folsom, addressed a children's and young people's meeting on Sunday afternoon, which was a delightful occasion to all present. Sunday and Monday night he preached powerfully, and God blessed his efforts to many hearts.

Preparations are now being made for the Woman's Missionary Convention, which meets in Greenville on June 6.

J. G. G.

The Washington Centennial.

The last of the series of Centennial celebrations was observed with appropriate ceremonies in the city of New Orleans, on April 30. From the great Philadelphia Exposition in 1876, commemorating the Declaration of Independence, to the inauguration ceremonies of 1889, in New York City, the memory of the important events of one hundred years ago has been faithfully revived. The number of societies, churches and institutions celebrating the last-named occasion in New Orleans was considerable. First, the Evangelical Union held a service in the Carondelet Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at which Baptists, Presbyterians, Methodists and Lutherans cordially united in praising God for the history of one hundred years. The Episcopal Churches were led in a similar service at Trinity by Bishop Gallcher. At night the Catholic citizens were engaged in an elaborate celebration at St. Louis Cathedral, conducted by Archbishop Janssens. In the afternoon the Masonic fraternity gave a magnificent programme at St. Charles Theatre. Addresses were delivered in five different languages, and it was pleasant to hear the name of Washington rolled in the deep guttural of the German, lisped in the liquid syllables of the Spaniard, trilled in the rapid enunciation of the Italian, and lightly tripped in the graceful recital of the Frenchman. Every nation, and almost every class of men, found something in common with Washington. That Sphynx-like face, like which no other has been seen on earth, seemed to represent the common humanity to which it, more than that of any other man, belonged. The Episcopalian, the Mason and the plain citizen each claimed him for their own. The slaveholder and the abolitionist, the Republican and the Federalist, the soldier and the civilian, the farmer and the aristocrat were all represented in Washington. He was a just man, a brave man, a merciful man, and a Christian. Though not a scholar, he founded institutions of learning. A soldier without pay, and a President without a salary, he was an example of patriotism and self-devotion.

The public exercises of the day concluded with an open-air celebration in Lafayette Square, at which distinguished citizens addressed the people, and bands of music discoursed martial and national airs to entertain the crowd. Altogether, the last Centennial was a success and an inspiration.

Facts.

Men who claim to be scientific thinkers and investigators are continually harping about "facts," "demonstrated truth," etc., and seem to be trying to get people to believe that such things are to be found only in the realm of scientific investigation. They would lead us to infer that the only facts worth striving to find out are to be found only in, what they call, nature. A writer in one of our exchanges administers to all such this just rebuke:

In this scientific age we hear much about demonstrated truth, and the value of facts. This is all right, but it is not right to imagine that facts are confined exclusively to material things; for the facts of mental and moral science are as real as any in chemistry or astronomy. The science of theology is full of facts, and it is unscientific, and unworthy of any man who classes himself with scholars and thinkers, to ignore the facts revealed in the Word of God. It is a fact that the souls of men are hungry for something they are never able to find in worldly honors, or in material riches. It is a fact that Jesus is the satisfying Bread of Life to millions, and even wicked men of the world admit that to be a true Christian is to be God-like. We are tired of the negations of infidels. It is one thing to pull down and destroy; it is a very different thing to organize and build up. Unbelief is nearly as old as faith; and, therefore, unbelievers have had sufficient time to give the world spiritual bread, if they have ability to produce it; and where is their bread? The human mind demands positive moral truth, and if there is not such truth in Jesus, let those who reject him provide us with a better system of religion than he has given; let them show by a better moral example than that of Jesus, and by giving us better doctrines and precepts, that he is not a necessity to us in this world of sin, or let them forever hold their peace.

These scientific thinkers and investigators are quite fond of another term, which they think they invented. We refer to the term "agnostic." They rest in the "nothing" of which this word is the exponent. Concerning this negation, Dr. R. S. Storrs has this rebuke:

See, then, why science does not discover God. Because it is working with inappropriate instruments; with physical analysis and metaphysical speculation instead of with the moral nature in exercise.

It is like hunting for love with a microscope; like sweeping up music with a broom.

The Alpenstock is well to climb to the glacier with, but to measure the Matterhorn, the scientist needs the barometer, and to sweep the horizon he needs the telescope; and, so, no matter how high he may climb in his search for God, he needs at the summit the senses of faith and love.

Suppose I am told that Naples is not, but my memory of the vision of beauty none other than a dream; that Venice lying anchored at her lagoons, and Mont Blanc, raising its dome as if it were the Great White Throne itself, are nought; shall I disbelieve what mine own eyes have seen? So men, who have not been able to find God, tell me that there is no God. But I place over against the negative that is in them, the positive that is in me, the revelation which this soul of mine, illuminated by the Spirit of God, has had of him; and I stand invincible in my faith upon him. You may reason the blue out of the heaven that is above us, you may untwist the strands of the ray of light as it comes to us from above, and prove it to be but darkness; you may dispute that there is any air to breathe, but not till then may you wrest from me the knowledge that has been vouchsafed me of this God of love and truth. Against this knowledge, the shaft of argument can not prevail, but falls shattered like the lance before the unyielding bronze.

The old Latins had a proverb which does most emphatically apply to all the words of these philosophers of negation: Vox, et præterea nihil.

The editor returned from the annual meeting of the Board of Missions yesterday, but too late to publish anything concerning what was done. We hope to give our readers a full account next week. In the meantime let everybody make preparations for the grandest year of missionary success we have ever had.

Notes.

The London Methodist Times says:

Sir Michael Connal related a very interesting fact in opening a bazaar at Glasgow the other day. He said that meetings for Christian fellowship—in fact, class meetings—had been held on the south side of Glasgow ever since the Revolution Settlement in 1688. The Methodist class meeting existed in Scotland before Methodism was born. Did Wesley know this when he met the first little company who desired to "flee from the wrath to come" at the foundry? Did he get his hint in Scotland?

We have seen somewhere, "St Peter's Chain" linked and welded together in this way: Faith may become feeble; therefore, add virtue. Virtue may become rash; therefore, add knowledge. Knowledge may become conceited; add temperance. Temperance may become ascetic; add patience. Patience may become stoical; add godliness. Godliness may become morose; add brotherly kindness. Brotherly kindness may become bigoted; add charity. This links faith, the foundation, with charity, the capstone.

The increase in the membership of our church last year was 32,537. The increase in foreign mission money was $5,207. If the new members contributed that increase to the missionary treasury, they must needs be taught a little in that line. The increase in domestic mission money was $12,046 75. That is a little better, but nothing to brag on. Question: If we increase at the rate of 32,000 members and $6,200 to the mission work abroad annually, how long will it take us to raise one dollar per member for missions, and how many members will we have when that point is reached?

Now that the Hymn Book is published at such a price as to put it in reach of every member of the church, our pastors will do all in their power to induce every member to procure it. If there are those anywhere who can not afford it, let those who are better off see that they have it anyhow. Let the pastors everywhere insist upon the banishment of every other hymn book from our public and social meetings and Sunday-schools, and train our people, young and old, to sing the tunes and hymns of the new book. It is as good as the best, and a great deal better than many we have been using. Let us again become what we once were—a singing church.

In all our reading we do not remember to have seen a paragraph which illustrates its own teaching as well as this one from the Detroit Free Press.

Does a man say that he can not write a book or an article with little words? Then he is very wrong. If he knew how many little words there are in the speech of this land he would not say that he can not find those small words. And it may be said that these small words have more force than the big words, because the soul of the tongue, or it would be more fit to say the speech, is to be found in the short words more than in the long. In this all the men who write on words think as one. They feel that the very life of the thing is shown in the short word. There is no long word that will take the place of buzz, soar, roar, splash, acid, scrape, sough, whiz, hang, rough, smooth, keen, blunt, thin. Each of these words is like the thing which it sets forth, and so it is more strong and helps the brain in its work. If one were to try to put a long word in the place of the short one in this sense, he would have to write more than one word to reach the same idea. Short words do not drain the strength of the mind. They leave it free to work in other ways. The mind is not able to cope with the thought and the mode of speech at the same time. Hence, when we try to use our mind on two themes we find that it loses much of its force. But the chief beauty of the short word, put side by side with the long word, is that the short word is known by every one that can read. The long word is not known. Only those who study can know the long words.

Personal and Otherwise.

We are requested to state that the post-office address of Mrs. R. P. Mitchell, the widow of Rev. R. P. Mitchell, late of North Mississippi Conference, is Aberdeen, Miss.

Daniel Dorchester, D. D., of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the well known author of "Problem of Religious Progress," and other works, has been appointed by President Harrison, Superintendent of Indian schools.

The cause of temperance suffered defeat in the late Massachusetts election because friends of the cause lacked backbone and energy. Over 70,000 of that sort of people failed to vote; while the whisky force were at the polls attending to their business. When the advocates of moral reform are as much in earnest as the followers of Satan, God's kingdom will be established.

A gracious revival is reported at the New Memorial Church, conducted by the pastor, Bro. Beard, with the assistance of city pastors. At the close of the second week there had been several conversions and accessions, and the good work still progressed.

Dr. J. H. Lakin, of Montgomery, Ala., writes: "We are now having the greatest revival ever known here. Our Culpeper is with us. Over one hundred accessions to our church thus far."

BOOKS.

SEAMSTRESS OF STETTIN. Adapted from the German. By Cornelia McFadden. Jennings & Stowe, Cincinnati. Price, $1.

This is a well-told story with a good moral, teaching that the hand of God is in the affairs of men, and working all things for the good of those who love him. It is written for the young, and will interest and profit them.

TO THE ANT. By John Wentworth Sanborn, A. M. Cranston & Stowe, Cincinnati. Price, sixty cents.

This book is written for the children, and we are sure it will greatly interest old folks too. It tells of the habits and manner of life of those little creatures whom Solomon has held up to the world as models of thrift and industry. Our young readers would do well to procure this book and read of the wonderful doings of the ants.

PERIODICALS.

—A new volume of The Century begins with the May number. The frontispiece of which is one of Mrs. Foote's pictures of the Far West, Clinching Up. Then follow two of Cole's engravings of the old Italian masters, with accompanying articles by W. J. Stillman and the engraver himself. The most timely papers in the number are a series on Samoa: The Isles of the Navigators. The first is by Dr. H. W. Whitaker, of the United States Navy, and is profusely illustrated. The second, also illustrated, is on Our Relations to Samoa, by Mr. George H. Bates, who was Commissioner of the United States in 1866, and who, since this article was written, has been reappointed Commissioner by the present administration. The third paper in this series is a brief one by Captain Erben, of the United States Navy, who commanded the "Tuscarora" when it took Steinberger to Samoa in 1875. Other papers of interest are found in this number. Century Company, New York. Price, $4.

—The American Agriculturist, for May, is a fine specimen of a good paper for farmers and dairymen and others. It is very cheap at $1 50. 751 Broadway, New York.

—The political articles in The Forum, for May, are The Republican Party and the Negro, by Mr. E. L. Godkin, editor of the New York Evening Post, who shows the impracticability of all plans to give special protection to the negro vote in the South, except the plan of allowing the Southern people to solve the problem themselves, citing evidence to show that the South is doing this as fast as possible; The Saloon as a Political Power, by Mr. Ernest H. Crosby, of the New York Legislature, who argues the necessity of destroying the political influence of the saloon before dividing public attention as to methods of temperance reform, and gives many striking instances of corrupt political work done by saloon keepers and brewers; and Prof. Emile de Lavoleye, of the University of Liege, writes a political article (in the large sense) on Perils of Democracy, reviewing the new dangers that beset free governments. Another article that has a religious as well as scientific bearing is Prof. St. George Mivart's second essay on Where Darwinism Fails, in which he points out the break in the Darwinian theory. President William DeW. Hyde, of Bowdoin College, shows the ill effects of school examinations as they are usually conducted, and points out the proper part for examinations to play in rational education. The Forum Publishing Company, New York. Fifty cents a copy; $5 a year.

Bishops McTyeire and Parker Memorial Tablets at Felicity Street Church.

Bro. J. G. Grant has headed the list with—

N. O. CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE...$10 00

The following brethren give amounts opposite their names:

B. Carradine	$2 50
J. M. Beard	2 50
D. L. Mitchel	2 50
Jno. T. Sawyer	2 50
	$10 00

And now it is in order for any brother or sister who sees this to send us a small amount for this good cause. We would like to have all the preachers represented on the list. The tablets are intended to be handsome testimonials, and a small amount from each reader will accomplish that object. Please send your contribution either to me or to Rev. Dr. Carter.

JOHN T. SAWYER,
178 Jackson Avenue.

A Criticism.

"Grace first contrived the way
To save rebellious man;
And all the steps that grace display
Which drew the wondrous plan."

The sense of the last two lines of this verse seems somewhat obscure.

1. What is the subject of the verb "display"? Answer: "Steps."

2. What is the object of the same verb? Answer: "Grace."

3. What is the antecedent of the relative pronoun "which"? Answer: "Grace."

Transpose the sentence and read as follows: "And all the steps (of the way) display that grace which drew the wondrous plan." That is put in italics to show it to be an adjective and not a conjunction: "that—which."

Notice.

From the nature of many recent inquiries about the Missionary Ship, I deem the following explanation advisable. The ship is an offering by the president of Louisiana Conference Woman's Missionary Society to the State work.

It is desired that the ship entertainments be the means of enriching our treasury; and every society, adult or juvenile, desiring an entertainment, can get the ships by paying the transportation from the place of the previous entertainment, each in turn holding the ship until desired by another society. All the net proceeds to be reported to Mrs. S. B. McCutchen, State treasurer, Shreveport, La., and also reporting an account of the entertainment to the president.

Full instructions go with the ship. For any additional information, address MRS. E. J. FULLILOVE.

KRACHIE, Louisiana.

The Seashore Camp Ground.

Dr. E. F. Griffin, chairman of the Executive Committee, states the preparations of camp ground for next camp meeting are progressing finely; the wharves and bath-houses are nearly finished, and the new rooms in the lunch-house are about completed.

Mr. J. W. Mauldin, with others of Water Valley, Miss., have bought Mrs. E. Bynum's two-story house, and will occupy it, together with fifteen or twenty of their friends, this season.

About one hundred persons are preparing to come from Tennessee.

The Birmingham, Ala., people are coming in force, and ere long will own a tent.

Mrs. Bruning, of New Orleans, is building on a lot west of the restaurant.

Mrs. D. Zahlo is getting ready to build on her lot.

Mrs. McChesney has moved over from New Orleans for the season.

Numerous inquiries are coming in as to rates of rent for tents, accommodation, etc., all of which information will be cheerfully given by any of the officers or trustees, but specially by J. W. Hearin, president, Mobile; J. H. Lakin, Montgomery, Ala.; Dr. E. F. Griffin, Moss Point; Hon. J. P. Carter, Hattiesburg, Miss.; J. G. Grant, recording secretary, or D. L. Mitchel, financial secretary, New Orleans.

As soon as railroad rates are known, they will be published.

The Mississippi Woman's Missionary Meeting.

Friends of the Woman's Missionary Society of the North Mississippi Conference should not forget that its annual meeting takes place at Greenville, Miss., June 6. A full representation from both the local woman's and juvenile societies from all parts of the State is expected. The Committee on Transportation expect, in a few days, to announce satisfactory railroad rates with all the roads terminating and connecting with those reaching Greenville.

Woodville District Conference.

The railroad fares of the members and delegates to this District Conference—which meets at Amite City, La., May 16—via the Illinois Central road, will be full fare going, one-third fare returning, provided the purchaser of tickets procure from the ticket agent a certificate authorized by the Southern Passenger Association. A like arrangement will probably be made for delegates via the Mississippi Valley road.

Notice.

I have transferred to Rev. F. D. Van Valkenburgh, 106 Camp street, the entire edition of Dr. Carradine's celebrated sermon—"The Louisiana State Lottery Company Examined and Exposed." All orders for the future should be addressed to him.

Our Young People.

THE FIRST TANGLE.

BY ANNA BURNHAM.

Once in an Eastern palace wide
A little child sat weaving.
So patiently her task she plied,
The men and women at her side
Flocked round her, almost grieving.

"How is it, little one," they said,
"You always work so cheerily?
You never seem to break your thread,
Or snarl and tangle it, instead
Of working smooth and clearly.

"Our weaving gets so worn and soiled,
Our silk so frayed and broken,
For all we've fretted, wept and toiled,
We know the lovely pattern's spoiled
Before the King has spoken."

The little girl looked in their eyes,
So full of care and trouble;
And pity chased the sweet surprise
That filled her own, as sometimes flies
The rainbow in a bubble.

"I only go and tell the King,"
She said abashed, and meekly,
"You know, he said, in everything"—
"Why, so do we!" they cried, "we bring Him all our troubles weekly!"

She turned her little head aside;
A moment let them wrangle.
"Ah, but," she softly then replied,
"I go and get the knot untied
At the first little tangle!"

O little children—weavers all!
Our broidery we spangle
With many a tear that need not fall,
If on our king we would but call
At the first little tangle!

A Risen Savior.

BY MRS. S. M. READ.

Anna was rocking her baby sister and singing—

"Hallelujah! He is risen!
Jesus has gone up on high."

Over again she sang the sweet hymn until the baby slept, and she could lay her in the basket cradle. Then she seated herself in a low chair beside her mother.

"Let me help you with the mending," she said: "I have my lessons so far prepared that I shall have no difficulty in doing the rest in school hours. "I know," said Anna, as she selected a garment to repair, "that Jesus is a risen, living Savior. Since I gave my heart to him I ask him every day to help me, and I know he does."

Her mother began to sing with a voice full of expression—

"I know that my Redeemer liveth."

Anna was soon singing the grand words with her mother, and when the song was ended she exclaimed, "Why! this seems like a meeting, and a very good one, too. Oh! how I wish everybody loved Jesus."

Then they sang—

"Oh! that my Savior were your Savior, too."

"I don't see," said Anna, "how anybody can help loving Jesus. When I first gave myself to him the way seemed so plain that I thought I could explain it to others so that it would be easy for them to become Christians, but I can't seem to do it. I wish I could. I wish Ella would come home, for we have always been so intimate and understood each other so well that I think I can influence her to become a Christian."

Why not write to her," said the mother? as she folded up the last of the garments, all of which had been mended.

"I will, this very evening."

She wrote:

"Dear Ella: I have been hoping that you would come home. I have something that I want very much to talk with you about. I thought that I would not wait any longer, but would tell you as well as I could in my letter. I have given my heart to Jesus, and am a Christian now, and I want you to be a Christian."

When she had read these words Ella threw down the letter.

"Does she think of me as a heathen, now she has these new notions in her head? I am a Christian just as much as she is. I was born and brought up in a Christian country, and if that does not make a Christian I should like to know what does.

"She asks me to come to Jesus," she said, when she had finished reading the letter, "and says she is sure I will love him with all my heart if I do. I have no idea of Jesus. How then can I come to him and believe on him and love him?"

Ella's answer was in accordance with her thoughts.

Anna read the letter to her mother.

"I can't understand why she should feel so. I am so sorry."

"While Jesus is the one altogether lovely to you," said her mother, "to her he is like a 'root out of dry ground, without form or comeliness.' Jesus said just before he went away, 'All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth.' We must pray for Ella."

After a few days, during which they had been praying for her, Anna received a second letter from Ella. She wrote:

"I wish that your Savior could be my Savior, but I am afraid it can never be, I am so sinful. I wish you would pray for me, and ask your father and mother too. Ask everybody who prays to pray for me."

She returned home in a few days, and soon after was rejoicing in that peace which comes only to those who believe in Jesus as one who died for their redemption and rose for their justification.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little boy twelve years old, and, like all the other cousins, very much enjoy reading the ADVOCATE, especially the poetry and the little letters. I have never written to you but once, and then my letter fell into that dreaded waste-basket, I presume, as I never saw it in print. I did not show it to mamma before I sent it, as I wanted to surprise her; but when it did not appear in the ADVOCATE, I told her about it, and she said, probably I had written carelessly, or on both sides of my paper; so I will try again and do better this time. I have neither father, brother, nor sister in this world; but they all, with my dear grandparents, are in Paradise, where I hope to meet them some day. I have never been to school, more than a few weeks, to anyone except my mamma, who is a school teacher. I study fifth reader, grammar, geography, arithmetic, physiology, spelling and writing. I also attend Sabbath-school and study intermediate quarterly. I joined the church about two years ago. Who of the little cousins can tell where in the New Testament is the command to "anoint the head and wash the face?"

Your little friend,
VERNER LOWRIE.
FAYETTE, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: As I have just seen my last letter in print, I thought I would write again. I am a member of the Methodist Church. I joined the church; last July was a year ago. I have five sisters and four brothers. We are going to have a protracted meeting the second Sunday in May. I am going to school now. Our teacher has given a prize to the one that gets the most head marks at the end of the school. I have thirty now. I will ask a few questions: Where in the Bible is "fire" and "vapour," "snow" and "hail" found? and which is the shortest verse in the Bible? I will close with many good wishes to you and the dear old ADVOCATE. I am,

Your little friend,
ALETHEA A. BARROW.
HOLLOWAY, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: I wrote to you several weeks ago, but I guess it was delayed and did not reach you in time to be published, and it found its way to the waste-basket. I will write again, hoping this time to see my letter in this week's ADVOCATE. I have two little pets—a dog and cat. I have a dear old grandmother living, but my dear old grandfather is dead. Our Savior called him away nearly three years ago. I will close by asking Eliza Hoffpauir a question: In what chapter in the Bible is "washpot" found?

Your little friend,
VERONICA M. PLEASANT.
LEESBURG, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: I thought I would write a few lines to the dear paper, as I have never written to it. I went to school last winter. I am not going now. I am twelve years old and a member of the Methodist Church. Mamma has been dead nearly ten years. Mr. M. L. White is our pastor. I will close by asking a question: Where was Moses buried?

Your little friend,
SUSIE HAVENS.
VANCLEAVE, Mississippi.

Household.

A Failure.

The other day a man "failed," failed with just enough in his pockets to pay up all his creditors and leave him square with the world. The creditors, of course, did not touch his wife and five daughters, nor was his household furniture sacrificed. The late spring of the passing year found him overstocked with goods manufactured for summer use, and this, with other unfavorable circumstances—being too honest, and not sharp enough to cope with rival dealers—compelled an assignment.

The wife and daughters, accustomed to all the refinements and elegances of urban life, find themselves no longer able to indulge in expensive luxuries. Servants have been discharged, and the scale of living contracted to meet the present income. A friend calling on them, a day or two ago, was welcomed by the mother, who had on a large working apron, and was just washing up the supper dishes. The eldest daughter, Mary, came in with her hands covered with flour, and said she was making her first batch of bread. Her mother had never made bread but once in her life, and mother and daughter had been consulting the cook book to see just how it should be done. The visitor suggested that she be invited into the kitchen and seated there, that the work might go on without interruption, and this was done.

"We have cleaned the whole house," said the mother, "Mary and I, and everything is in order. You know we used to keep two girls, and they were both so busy all the time that they never had time to sit down. I don't know how it was, but we get our work all done up by nine or ten o'clock, and have time to sit down to sew and read."

"Probably you plan your work better than your servants did," was suggested. Various methods of securing desirable results in housework were discussed. The care of the hands was a fruitful topic of talk, and while it went on the visitor made a dish-mop for Mary, and told her how to use it. When the dough was moulded into a smooth and uniform mass, and the dishes finished, the party adjourned to the sitting-room.

The value of the present condition of things was dwelt on at some length. Now the girls will have a chance to learn all about housework in all its details. It is next to impossible for them to do this when there are servants in the family. Those who have tried to train their children in kitchen work, when a servant for that work is hired, appreciate the difficulties in the way. The girls have a new object in life. They can be really useful in contributing to the family comfort. The elder daughters, who are accomplished musicians and good scholars, take charge of the education of the younger children, and save money that would otherwise go for tuition. Hitherto the elder daughters had been delicate, and often in ill health; now they are growing stronger. The cheerful, healthful, various activity, required for successful housekeeping, is making them better physically than they ever were before.

When the father comes home at night weary with the day's labor, he finds smiling faces to greet him, willing hands hasten to minister to his wants, willing feet run to do his bidding. There are no sighs for departed prosperity, but only hope that, with economy and industry on all sides, prosperity and abundance may again be theirs—Exchange.

"Consumption can be Cured."
Dr. J. S. COMBS, Owensville, Ohio, says: "I have given Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites to four patients with better results than seemed possible with any remedy. All were hereditary cases of Lung disease, and advanced to that stage when coughs, pain in the chest, frequent breathing, frequent pulse, fever and emaciation. All these cases have increased in weight from 16 to 28 lbs., and are not now needing any medicine."

The Safest
AND most powerful alterative is Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Young and old are alike benefited by its use. For the eruptive diseases peculiar to children nothing else is so effectual as this medicine, while its agreeable flavor makes it easy to administer.

"My little boy had large scrofulous ulcers on his neck and throat, from which he suffered terribly. Two physicians attended him, but he grew continually worse under their care, and everybody expected he would die. I had heard of the remarkable cures effected by Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and decided to have my boy try it. Shortly after he began to take this medicine, the ulcers commenced healing, and, after using several bottles, he was entirely cured. He is now as healthy and strong as any boy of his age."—William F. Doughty, Hampton, Va.

"In May last, my youngest child, a daughter fourteen months old, began to have sores on her father on its head and body. We applied various simple remedies without avail. The sores increased in number and discharged copiously. A physician was called, but the sores continued to multiply until in a few months nearly covered the child's head and body. At last we began the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. In a few days a marked change for the better was manifest. The sores assumed a more healthy condition, the discharges were gradually diminished, and finally ceased altogether. The child is livelier, its skin is fresher, and its appetite better than we have ever observed for months."—Frank M. Gray, Long Point, Texas.

"The formula of Ayer's Sarsaparilla presents, for chronic diseases of almost every kind, the best remedy known to the medical world."—D. M. Wiggs, M. D., Wiggs, Arkansas.

GALLOWAY—It is with painful re- et that we chrouicle the death of r lamented friend and brother, Dr. MES HERVEY GALLOWAY.

He sank under a slowly wasting sorder, known as diabetes, which s making its palpable and alarming roachments npon his system for ht long, tiresome years. The last ur years of his life he was a con- med invalid, though not continu- sly restricted to his bed. Now and en he would respond to an urgent ll, attended by his wife or one of s daughters, to the house of the lected From November 17, 1888, March 21, the day of his death, his fferings were for the most part in- nse, and at times excruciating and most unbearable. But never did artyr burn at the stake with more nsummate serenity of spirit. His lence excelled anything ever wi- ssed by this writer; and yet, at mes, he seemed to upbraid himself lacking in this Christian grace. he good Lord was with him, con- iously, all the while. Frequently he uld shout the praises of the Lord, d lament that he could not praise m more. He was an intelligent fferer. He did not charge God olishly; neither did he expect Chris- nity to exempt him either from fferlag or death. Bnt, with a cour- e that was manly and Christ-like, looked confidently for triumph er all infirmity and imperfection. few days before his death we ad- inistered to him the sacrament of e Lord's Supper, which was a feast his soul. His parents, Alfred Gal- way and Sophia Ann Betts, were de- ut Christians and earnest members the Methodist Episcopal Church, uth, which fact may, in some meas- re, account for the Christian con- tency and patient endurance of ir honored son.

He was born near Smithville, Bruns- ck county, N. C., on June 27, 1827. e family moved to the State of ississippi in the year 1840, and set- d at Madisonville, the original site Madison county. Here he spent e days of his buoyant youth, the ength of his manhood years, and, om here, on the twenty-first day of arch, 1889, he passed in through the tes into the city. In early life he ose the profession of medicine, to hich he consecrated every energy at s command. The faithful and self- rificing performance of the duties the profession, in all probability, tened the decline of his health, d precipitated the attack which used his death. He made every- ing subservient to duty. Pleasure d profit combined could not allure m from the performance of his pro- ssional duties. It will not be known re the extent of his beneficence to e poor and the unfortunate. He ined the church in early life at adisonville, and was ever faithful d true to his church. He was hap- ly married to Sarah J. Moore, Octo- r 26, 1851. Seven children blessed is union. All are here, save one ho went to heaven some years ago.

Dr. Galloway was an exemplary an with regard to the education of s children. He struggled heroically d successfully against the ravages war and, with a depleted fortune, ave them the superior advantage of collegiate education. Among his ys there was one after whom his art yearned with deep concern, he burning desire of his heart was at George might be a good and use- l minister of the gospel of the Son God.

May the fondly cherished hopes of e ascended father be more than alized by the fond mother! May e faithful wife, affectionate daugh- rs and worthy sons find abundant nsolation in trusting and serving at God, who so mightily sustained eir loved one by his grace!

WALTMAN—NANCY, widow of the te Levi Waltman, and daughter of e late Rev. William Cooper, L. D., as born March 16, 1828, in Lawrence unty, Miss., and was born again and nited with the Methodist Church hen about fourteen years of age. he was married July 28, 1858, and ied in Natchez, Miss., March 23, 889. Her husband and one child had ne before. There are five surviving hildren, four of whom are married, nd all five are members of the ethodist Church. They, with her enerable mother, are pressing to- ards their heavenly home. Sister altman was one of the first members Wesley Chapel, Natchez, and re- ained in its communion until the ay of her death. She was one of he Lord's poor—an earnest, zealous hristian, for whom the grave had no errors and death no sting.

T. L. MELLEN.

HANEY—Mrs. ELIZA H. HANEY has sweetly fallen on sleep. The de- ceased was born in Vicksburg, Miss., in 1827, in which place she spent the days of her childhood. In 1844 she was married to Dr. J. G. Parham, to whom seven children were born—four of whom still survive. After the death of Dr. Parham she was married to Hon. Martin Haney, by Rev. Wil- liam Chamberlain. To them only one child was born, who lived only two months.

Sister Haney joined the Methodist Church in Vicksburg when very young, and ever afterward lived a consistent Christian life. She was loving and devoted in all relations of life; ever gentle and affectionate. Next to the Lord, whom she wor- shiped with sincere, simple and un- affected piety, was her devotion to her husbands and children. Her greatest ambition in life was to train her children for the Lord, and it seemed to thrill the emotions of her soul with a sense of "joy unspeakable and full of glory" to be conscious of the fact that her children were all on their journey home. During her last illness she was confined to her bed more or less for sixteen months. She was willing to go, and was certain of a home in heaven. Hers was a "per- fect faith," and during her most in- tense suffering she would exclaim, "Oh, my God, I trust thee." As the end drew nearer a daughter asked her if she was happy. The answer came in a whisper: "So happy, so happy!" One of her daughters, in writing to me says: "Bro. Keen, our hearts are sad, but I would not have her back to suffer more." I commend this spirit of resignation to all her sorrowing relatives and friends. Some day there will be a reunion with loved ones, and what a gathering of the faithful that will be! FRANK M. KEEN.

ROBINSON—Our community was recently made sad by the death of an interesting young man, DICKSON R. ROBINSON, whose relations reside in Binnsville, Miss.

He was in business in Birming- ham, Ala., and died suddenly of pneumonia, and his remains brought to this place and buried. He was the only son of Mrs. S. L. Dudley. He joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, a few years since, and was lovingly devoted to his Christian mother and three sisters, and out of his salary was educating one of his sisters. The death of this only son and brother is a sad providence, and fills the hearts and home of the family with grief and desolation. But there springs amidst this gloom a sweet, cheering hope that in the "beautiful home of the soul" friends will meet again who have loved.

WM. B. HINES.

POOLE—ROBERT E. P. POOLE was born January 8, 1888, entered through the gates of the eternal city March 15, 1889. This bright, win- some, beautiful child made home full of sunbeams, and now that he has left his earthly home for the eternal, his loved ones are passing through the shadows. His stay was like the visit of an angel, full of light and joy, and his leaving was like the returning of an angel from a mission of peace to the courts of God. The dear ones are looking to the same place of rest. Childhood is the at- traction of this life and the beauty of heaven. I. W. COOPER.

BAIRD—The subject of this notice, Mrs. M. C. BAIRD, was born in Louisiana in 1810, and died March 29, 1889. Sister Baird lived in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, over forty years, and died in the faith. She was a faithful wife, a devoted mother, and lived a Christian life. Having lived over her three-score years and ten, she calmly awaited the summons of her Lord. Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord!

Some people are always late at church. They seem not to care for the whole service; the opening hymn, the introductory prayer, and even the Scripture lesson they practically repu- diate. They are great for the sermon, however; but how can the sermon be great for them—coming to them, un- der the circumstances, abruptly? A few minutes in silent, thoughtful med- itation, before the public services be- gin, so as to get into harmonious ac- cord with the occasion, is the requisite for profit and enjoyment.—Methodist Protestant.

What Is It Which Lights and Heats Us?

The following extract from a recent address of Dr. Henry Raymond Rogers, of Dunkirk, N. Y., before a Chautauqua So- ciety, is extremely interesting, though its suggestions cross the popular notions respecting the sources of heat and light. We quote from the New York Tri- bune:

The sun and earth are separa- ted by the distance of 93,000,000 miles, and this space in infinitely cold and dark. The sun's rays, as they pass through this infinity of distance and cold and dark- ness, are invisible. They reach out from the sun to our atmos- phere without in the slightest manner revealing their presence. They contain neither warmth nor brightness. In fact, the temper- ature of the universal space is estimated by Secchi at 18,000,000 degrees below zero (Fah). Yet, notwithstanding the infinity of the distance which separates the sun and earth, and the cold and darkness which pervade all space, the ice-lens is able to gather these invisible and inconceivably cold sun-rays and converge them to a focus and thereby set fire to combustibles, explode gunpow- der, and even to melt lead.

It may not consistently be claimed that actual heat can cross the void of space so cold, or that actual light penetrates such utter darkness. The ice- lens of Metius, therefore, fur nishes a practical demonstration of the fact that the sun need not be actually hot, in order to warm the earth, and that it need not be essentially bright, in order to supply its light. It most forci- bly teaches that there is a some- thing which incessantly comes from the sun which is not itself heat or light, but of which these are the direct effects. The legit- imate inference from these teach- ings is that the so-called sun- heat and sunlight are developed solely in our own atmosphere, and not in the sun itself, as sci- ence and superficial appearances have ever led us to believe. The little ice-lens, therefore, furnishes conclusive and even incontrovertible evidence against the so-called fire-ball theory of the sun, which is to-day, and ever has been, the theory accepted by science. The great signifi- cance and power of this wonder- ful invention lies, therefore, in the fact that if this evidence were accepted at its real value, it would alone, and unaided by corroborative facts, compel a new explanation of the sun and its phenomena ab initio. It would thus change the existing philosophy of the universe.

Making Glass for Mosaic Windows.

But the glass-worker has only begun his work when he has the molten "metal" simmering in his crucibles. It must undergo many subsequent manipulations before it is available for the pur- pose of art. Some of these, from a technical point of view, seem retrogressional. It has been found that the rich color effects in glass of the middle ages are largely due to the im- perfections in the material. Its lack of homogeneousness, its unequal thickness, and uneven surfaces contribute largely to its beauty. The modern product is too uniform to be brilliant; it transmits the light with too great regularity. Intentional imper- fections are, therefore, intro- duced into the process; and the products, in consequence, are much more satisfactory to the artist. This work of individual- izing the product has now been so far systematized that several special brands of art glass are recognized in the markets. The so-called antique glass in both white and colors, is made pre- cisely like the ordinary sheet window glass, except that the surface of the glass is made full of minute blow-holes, which pro- duce almost an aventurine effect, and add greatly to its brilliancy. In the cathedral glass the sur- face is rendered wavy and un- even, so that the transmission of light shall be correspondingly irregular. In the flash glass or- dinary sheets are covered with a thin plating of colored glass, a process which permits a very delicate color tone, and ma- terially decreases the expense, where a costly glass, such as ruby, is needed to give the color. But in mosaic work it is now gen- erally preferred that the glass shall not be at all transparent, since the effect is much richer. The most of the glass is, there- fore, cast, the process being a repetition in miniature of the casting of rough plate.—Popular Science Monthly.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

The formal opening of the new and sumptuously appointed home of the Southern Society, in New York City, took place on May 2. There was a grand banquet and reception. All the Southern people of prominence called to the city by the centennial celebration were present, in addition to a long list of New York officials and prominent men.

The Georgia Alliance has contracted with mills for 2,000,000 yards of cotton bagging, to be delivered August 1.

Experiments in growing and manufacturing sorghum will be continued this year under the auspices of the agricultural department.

What is known as the Australian election law, with some modifications to suit the locality, has been adopted by both houses of the Missouri Legislature and now awaits the governor's signature.

Secretary Tracy, on May 4, awarded to the Union Iron Works, of San Francisco, the contract for the construction of the great armored coast defense vessel at a cost of $1,628,000.

The battlefield of Chickamauga is to be enclosed and made a national park.

Capt. Daniel M. Taylor, who was directed by the Secretary of War to observe the movements of the militia assembled at New York on the occasion of the centennial celebration, with particular reference to the ability of the various commands to concentrate at a strategic point in a short time, is preparing his report. As the troop trains were detained by regular passenger trains, and were in cases side-tracked to permit other traffic to go on, Capt. Taylor regards the time made as highly favorable, and as demonstrating that 70,000 militia-men could be assembled in New York within fifteen hours.

General Merritt, last week, reported everything quiet in Oklahoma Territory, and anticipated no further trouble in the country from any cause.

The Pullman Company has control of the second-class sleeping and tourist car service of the Denver and Rio Grande railway. The transfer took place at Denver and practically completes the absorption by Pullman of this branch of railway traffic throughout the West.

FOREIGN.

The special commission appointed to consider the question has approved the new Siberian railway scheme. According to this plan, a railway is to be built from Zlatoonst to Vladivostock in six years, at a cost of 25,000 roubles per verst.

Advices from Massowah give details concerning the recent death of King John of Abyssinia. It is stated that on March 10 he made an attack on the dervishes in their stronghold at Netemmeh, but his forces were defeated, the King being badly wounded. Two days afterward the dervishes made an assault, and completely routed King John's army, killing the King and his generals—Ras Area and Ras Alula.

The court at Falcarragh has sentenced Mr. Charles Conyheare, member of Parliament, for the Camborne division of Cornwall, to three months' imprisonment without labor, for conspiring to oppose the law.

The Brazilian Parliament was opened by the Emperor on May 4. In his speech opening the session the Emperor congratulated Parliament on the good relations existing between Brazil and the other nations, and stated that the finances were in a satisfactory condition.

A committee of the Samoan conference has prepared the draft of a proposal to constitute a court to decide questions of land tenure in Samoa. The court to consist of a representative of each of the interested powers and two Samoese.

Gen. Von Werder, who was sent on a special mission to the Czar, for the purpose of arranging for the latter's visit to Berlin, failed to get his Majesty's assent to the proposal to make the visit the occasion for a display of military and naval pomp. The Emperor desired to meet the Czar at Swinemunde or Kiel, and to accompany him thence to Berlin, but the Czar refused to consent to anything beyond a quiet reception while passing through Berlin on his return from Copenhagen.

The proceedings of the Catholic Congress at Vienna have fixed the attention of the whole of Germany. The resolutions adopted by the congress have been accepted as the programme of the German Catholics. They include a declaration of the right to demand from the State ecclesiastical control of education, the restoration of papal sovereignty, the prohibition of Sunday trading, the endowing and fostering of the Catholic press and the formation of co-operative peasant communities.

A man named Perrin fired a blank cartridge at President Carnot, on May 5, as the latter was leaving the Elysee Palace for Versailles, to attend the centenary celebration of the founding of the republic. Perrin explained to the police that he had no desire to kill the President, but that he merely wished to expose the fact that he (Perrin) was the victim of injustice.

The great International Exposition in Paris, in celebration of the Centennial of the republic's birth, was opened on May 6. The unrepresented countries are Germany, Turkey and Montenegro.

That Tired Feeling

Season is here again, and nearly every one feels weak, languid, and exhausted. The blood, laden with impurities which have been accumulating for months, moves sluggishly through the veins, the mind fails to think quickly, and the body is still slower to respond. Hood's Sarsaparilla is just what is needed. It is, in a peculiar sense, the ideal spring medicine. It purifies, vitalizes and enriches the blood, makes the head clear, creates an appetite, overcomes that tired feeling, and imparts new strength and vigor to the whole body.

R. F. ALEXANDER, P. E.

To strengthen the hair, thicken the growth, stop its blanching and falling out, and where it is gray to restore the youthful color, use Hall's Hair Renewer.

A statement prepared at the Treasury Department shows that there has been a net increase of $7,68,683 in the circulation since April 1, and that there has been a net increase of $1,903,034 in the money and bullion in the Treasury during the same period.

Prof. C. F. E., A. M., President X Collegiate Institute, solicits correspondence with colleges and institutions desiring competent instructor. Aged thirty-five, married, sixteen years' experience in teaching, member Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Highest testimonials of capacity and executive ability.
Address above, care ADVOCATE.

CHEAPEST FURNITURE HOUSE IN NEW ORLEANS. This is the heading of the advertisement of Mr. J. G. Grant's, 50 and 52 Baronne street, New Orleans. Now, we would suggest to our readers to peruse it carefully, and they will be astonished at the low prices which Mr. Grant is selling furniture for. As this gentleman is thoroughly reliable, and guarantees the smallest article that leaves his store, we feel satisfied that those who may try him once will have further dealings with him. There is no store of this character in the South that keeps a larger or finer assortment than his, and as his expenses are less than others in the same line, he has informed us that he can sell lower. Try him.—N. O. Weekly Picayune, January 24.

To Whom It May Concern.

Wishing to give the widest possible circulation to Rev. Dr. Carradine's sermon on the Lottery, I called upon four daily papers of this city with an advertisement to the following effect, viz:

"Call and buy that terrific exposure of the Louisiana Lottery. Just out. 10 cents"
"P. D. VANVALKENBURGH, 106 Camp St."

The Times-Democrat, News, and States inserted it. The Picayune refused to do so. P. D. VANVALKENBURGH, 106 Camp Street.

The clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policy-holders. The Episcopal Diocese of New York has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and The Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to insure all the insurance to these worthy people.
A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

From Most Rev. Bishop Ryan, of Philadelphia.

I can testify to the efficacy of J. & C. Maguire's Cundurango, it having been my favorite medicine for several years past. I believe it to be the best Anti-Bilious Cathartic and Corrector of Liver, Blood and Kidney derangements that can be taken, and its general use in families would no doubt avert attacks of sickness.
P. J. RYAN.

EASTER HYMN.

BY CLARA B. DRAKE.

Rejoice! the morning breaks
Of that effulgent day
When Christ from death awakes
And takes its sting away.
A radiant angel from his throne
Flames forth and rolls away the stone.

His lightnings pierce the gloom;
The earth exultant rends
When from the open'd tomb
Omnipotence ascends—
The band of death asunder breaks,
And captive of the captor makes.

Rejoice! rejoice! rejoice!
Burst forth in loud acclaim!
Let millions, with one voice,
The risen Christ proclaim,
Till all earth's darkness melts away
In beams of Resurrection Day.

The Louisiana State Lottery Company Examined and Exposed.

BY REV. B. CARRADINE, D. D.

Still another charge I make against the Lottery is, that, in face of the repeated assertion that it is financially beneficial, it steadily impoverishing us.

This is an argument against the Lottery that has been advanced and sustained on many a legislative floor. Nation after nation has reiterated the truth. Speakers in Parliamentary halls, while admitting that it is a profitable source of revenue if run by the government, and invariably enriching the corporation itself; yet that it always leads to the destitution of the masses. In every country where it has been tried, it has been noticed to bring want people of moderate circumstances and to still further impoverish the poor.

We all know that the poor constitute the overwhelming majority of any country's population. If they suffer, then the greater part, if not all, the nation suffers. Where is the wisdom of tolerating an institution that helps the few and injures the many? Where is the patience of a people in permitting in its borders a corporation that inflicts the poor—the very class that can least afford to suffer?

The proof that the Lottery steadily drains people of humble means was beheld in the city of Paris the first year after its ejection from France. In less than twelve months after its abolishment scores of millions of francs were deposited by the poorer classes in the savings banks. Here was a fact—eloquent, indisputable and convincing. The same result would be beheld here should the Legislature would free us of this monstrous parasite that draws its life from us, and then blights us with the shadow of its huge proportions.

Many true lovers of our State are sighing—as they call it—the situation. They are trying to account for the financial distress and prostration. They have been locating the cause in almost everything but the right thing. They are just beginning to see that the great financial cancer on our municipal body is the Louisiana State Lottery. It is daily, steadily, continuously drawing the people's money from ten thousand proper channels, where it should have flowed for the comfort of family and for the prosecution and enlargement of business, and giving it not back, but gambling it in itself, has slowly, but certainly, hurt the entire city by a curse that has struck at twenty thousand homes, and cramped and weakened thousands of particular industries.

The Lottery makes two general assertions or promises. One is to the individual; that if he will invest in a ticket, he will draw a fortune. How about the fulfillment, the facts of the case? Don't you meet regiments of men every day who were enriched by this company? They are so thick on the streets as to occasion a blockade. I know of a gentleman who has been steadily patronizing this Lottery since the beginning. In that time he has drawn something like three thousand dollars—but, alas! over against that he has invested or, rather, dropped into the great incorporated rat hole of Louisiana not less than fifty thousand dollars!

But Rumor declares something more astoulshing, and that is, that the Lottery a few years ago actually paid a man to say that he had drawn one of the capital prizes.

Certainly on investigation the promise to the individual of a fortune is not very reassuring.

The other general assertion is, that it helps the community in which it is located. When asked how, we are pointed to a few brass band entertainments—a comparative pittance donated to public charity—and four or five handsome residences erected in our midst.

To all this I ask, Where is the great material good to a city to have a few tunes blown or scraped on instruments, or to have on our streets a half-dozen residences of fine pattern, if the whole community was financially stripped to bring it about? How much better that the earnings of a family, no matter how small, be expended towards the comfort and education and general good of that household circle, than to go into a pile of brick and mortar, which is without sensibility and life, and in which they are no wise interested.

Roll back these streams of Lottery ticket investments upon the families from which they proceeded; let them go toward the purchasing and beautifying of homes, toward the clothing and education of the family, and toward a provision for the dark and rainy day certain to come, and what a change we would witness! Instead of this, the money goes to the stockholders of the Louisiana State Lottery, and today we are, according to population, one of the poorest cities in the United States.

Is there a person here who will say that if the Lottery was abolished, that the people would spend their money in other ways, and that this company might as well have it as anyone else? To this I reply that such a speech is worthy of a man who is without conscience and soul, and furthermore, I would say that proof to the contrary is seen in the indisputable record of the savings banks in Paris.

In return for all the moneyed outlay of New Orleans to the Lottery we are regaled with the sound of a few tunes on a brass band, and the sight of a few fine buildings that do not belong to us. This is expected to gratify and satisfy the most carping as well as the most conscientious. We might faintly hint that the tunes were rather costly when we came to calculate—but O, just look at the houses!

I want you to see this matter clearly. Suppose that some individual should obtain from you your entire fortune, and that, too, in not the most honest or moral method. With your money he builds a beautiful house for himself. At this juncture you break out into murmuring. Immediately he calls upon you and tells you that you ought to be very thankful over what has happened. He appeals to your municipal pride as he recounts what he has done with your money in the erection of a beautiful home for himself, in the city. He invites you to educate and gratify your esthetic taste by looking upon the fine architectural proportions of his house. He does even more, and tells you that when you feel wearied you can sit on his door-step and rest; and that as you sit there, contemplating the beautiful home constructed by your money, you can sweetly reflect upon this proper and beautiful disposition of your finances.

How would you enjoy the situation? And yet this is just what we are doing in New Orleans to-day—sitting on door-steps watching the beautiful turnouts and palatial residences and sumptuous living of a few people who enjoy their material comforts through the possession of our money. The crowning exasperation in the matter being that we are exhorted by these beneficiaries and by the Press to rejoice over this state of affairs; to consider the largeness and beauty of these houses, the architectural tone they give to the street—and be happy!

I can not help being reminded here of a Chinese execution. When a man in that country is to suffer death, the executioner proceeds very deliberately; and carves and slices away into his body by sections. Different knives are used, and the quivering muscles laid bare in numerous places. As the official sees that the condemned is about to sink through pain and loss of blood, he lays aside the knife and sponges the wretch off with cool water, and revives him with fans. Then he again resumes the protracted murder. This is the exact treatment we receive at the hands of the stockholders of the Louisiana State Lottery. They are financially bleeding us to death; many are the knives they are plunging into the municipal body; every ticket office and vendor is an instrument of harm, and every ticket is a dagger drawing from us life itself. But now mark the tenderness of these stockholder executioners. Just as we, depleted, weakened, are ready to sink in despair, they cool us off with a few brass band tunes in the square, or sponge us off with a glittering entertainment in another part of the city, or revive us by permitting us to gaze at and admire their beautiful residences! The climax is reached when the newspapers, that fawn upon and lick the hoots of these stockholders, call upon poor, depleted, fainting, pocket-rifled, outraged New Orleans to be very grateful for all these things.

Another charge, or objection, I make to the Lottery is, that it benefits a few, while many are made to suffer.

This is not likely to be denied. Who are getting rich here in the city? Those who buy tickets, or those who issue and sell them? Everybody has the answer. A few are being enriched by the sufferings of the many. The spirit of the Bible is against such a thing; the spirit of republican institutions is equally antagonistic. The various Trusts that have been formed to crush multitudes of defenseless people are being crushed themselves by the laws of our land.

If you ever studied the Feudal System, you will notice it flourished on this dark, oppressive principle—the few to be benefited, enriched, uplifted, and the many ground down by a life of the bitterest servitude. Slavery was a social fabric cut after the same pattern. A few masters living in ease and plenty, while a multitude of slaves toiled and groaned and died in the fields of corn and cotton and cane. They both went down with a crash, just as this Lottery is bound to go down, because inimical to true liberty, and founded upon injustice.

I have often wondered at some things recorded in history. One amazing spectacle was the sight of a king, or a handful of the nobility, living in luxury, pampered, bloated with pride, insolent with riches, and yet remaining undisturbed by the multitude around them, numbering millions. By what power were they thus protected from the masses? Why did not the long-angered populace, like an angry and storm-driven flood, rush upon this handful of oppressors and sweep them away? We marvel at such a spectacle, and yet the identical thing is transpiring before our eyes. We, as a people, are laid under tribute to make opulent a few individuals. Willingly or unwillingly, consciously or unconsciously, by your own hand or by the hand of your clerk or servant, your money is being drained from you to bring about the wealth and influence of a few stockholders in a gambling company. We, whether we realize it or not, are nothing but the slaves of the Louisiana State Lottery Company. The few are in wealth and power—the many are made to suffer; and, wonder of wonders! we do the very thing we were amazed at in history—we submit to the same wrong and oppression!

I want to hold up before you one or two very remarkable scenes. One has been frequently beheld in the past. It is that of a king or nobleman or some man in authority, who has been enriched by the gifts, toll and taxes of the people, going forth in some kind of triumphal parade. As he passes along the ranks of the people whose money has made him opulent, or whose hands have uplifted him into power, he suddenly feels a spirit of liberality sweeping over him. In obedience to the generous instincts he puts his hand into his vest-pocket, and—O princely kindness!—O royal munificence!—takes out a handful of silver coin, and scatters the shining metal in the crowd. This was sickening enough of itself to behold; but the bitter, burning shame was in the sight of the crowd scrambling for the coin! What the people should have done was to have ignored the incarnated littleness before them, refused to notice the rattling coin, and, with folded arms, said: "Thy money perish with thee!"

History repeats itself. Here is an institution swollen with wealth that has been wrung from our homes and business. Our suffering and deprivations and losses have made it the bloated financial monster that it is to-day. The land has been made to mourn that a corporation might be made to rejoice. Horrible and unnatural sight! But this is not all. This State-created master of New Orleans gets in a liberal mood sometimes. This owner of countless millions of dollars taken from the citizens of the United States, in a sudden spasm of generosity, buys a few plasters to lay on some sick people at the Charity Hospital; bores a well, whose feeble trickle well represents the benevolence of the Lottery; pays for an evening's entertainment for the people; erects a building—in a word, throws out to the crowd it has plundered for years a handful of silver coin! O princely munificence!

This was hard enough to bear; but there is something far harder to endure; and that is, the sight of the New Orleans crowd scrambling for the silver. You went to hear the band play; you praised the gift that morally was not theirs to give, or yours to receive. You scrambled, in a word, for the money when you should have stood with folded arms, refusing to receive it, and looking the scorn you felt which your lips might have been powerless to speak.

I want to present to you another scene. Here before us stands a house built by money that the text calls gains of unrighteousness. It is a crystallization of Lottery money. What a beautiful home! How thick and soft the carpets! How handsome the pictures and statuary! How lustrous the heavy mahogany dining table! What glitter of silver and sparkle of cut glass! What orderly servants, and what sumptuous fare! The family are assembling for the evening meal, and have just seated themselves, when—O horror!—horror!—suddenly from the curtain-shrouded corners of the room a band of haggard-faced, bloodshot-eyed women rush forward with crying, ragged children clinging to their skirts. One of them, with a hand like a talon, snatches the bread from the table, crying out: "This is mine; my money paid for this!" And another, with a bony finger pointing at the glittering glass and silver, hissed: "My money paid for that!" And another, rushing upon the richly clad children of the family, began to tear off the soft, furry dresses, shrieking: "My money went to purchase these!" And still another, with hands locked above her head, in awful agony to see, wailed out: "I had such a home as this, and they took it away from me, and have left me to beggary and ruin!"

O the unutterable horror of that scene! And yet, if Truth could be enacted, that same dreadful spectacle would be beheld in twenty houses in this city to-day.

How would you like, my friends, to be in a business which, while it fed you, starved others; while it covered your table and filled your house, emptied the tables and houses of your fellow-beings; while it prospered you, it ruined countless thousands of others in body and soul?

May God have mercy on you if you are thus living, and send you repentance and grace to change your life from this very moment! All honor to the man that several years ago came out from the great iniquity, feeling that he could not save his soul and stay there.

God speaks to you to-day as he did to his people in the ages long ago. It is the same call; and the cry is uplifted because of great dangers in both periods. Come out from among them, O my people; "and he ye separate, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you."

Kentucky Correspondence.

BY JOS. R. COTTRELL, D. D.

This May day is one of cloud and shadow. The gentle showers that preceded the dawn of yesterday and to-day have seemed baptismal sprinklings upon the infant plants of the gardens, and upon the buildings of the flower borders and plats of ornamented yards. The æsthetical lies alongside the spiritual in our mental make-up; so that the smiting of the sense of the beautiful imparts, in some degree, vibrations to that highest element of our being. The passional, the affectional and the spiritual may be considered as the successive strata of our nature; and as the soil must have moisture, and as the water must be aerated, even so is there interdependence among the departments of our nature for production of word that is in soundness, freshness and nutritive power to those who hear or read what issues from us. As there is an extreme of carnality, inevitable, from one's ignoring what pertains to the spiritual, so that gluttony, lustfulness, and the like, are engendered to a degree enslaving to the soul, so may there be the opposite of this. The spirit-force, that is as organic in our compound nature as is the sensuous, may take an abnormal development, eventuating in fanatical dereeness or religionistic rigidity, destructive of the genial attractiveness and persuasive authoritativeness which alone constitute one "a living epistle," life-imparting and inspiring. From misapprehending Christ to mean that he had come that men might have religion, and that they might have it more enormously, when he declared that he came "that they might have life, and that they might have life more abundantly," what frigidities in personal phenomena have appeared upon the one extreme, counterpart to fiery flickerings and flashings upon the other!—men and women, through fatal perversions of the faith, constituting an obstruction, or operating disruptions, respectively, as they have thus frozen or ignited. David said, "The zeal of thine house hath eaten me up!" That is quite another outcome of zeal than that which prompt not a few to eat other people up, or to snap at and bite them. Ruskin, in discoursing on "the true, the beautiful, and the good," might have made criticism of the threefold distinction of the passional, the æsthetical, and the spiritual, in the unity of our nature, whereof there is to come, through their proper consolation and interplay, under ministries natural and supernatural, symmetrical manhood and womanhood, adapted to organic union in a kingdom "compacted by that which each (personal) joint supplies * * * making increase" according to the life-principle of growth. Matthew Arnold's plea for the "Religion of Culture" is by no means an insignificant or eccentric development of thought, in respect of a kingdom that is catholic. "All my springs are in thee!" "Man shall live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." Microcosm, as each one of us is, of all that is objective from us, to be alive to each and every is to generalize in our own experience the varied life of all, and thus have enrichment according to the measure of apostolic estimate, when he wrote, "All are yours!" All things become ours, as they become us, through genius of a recreative life!—through power of a transubstantiating life.

"Life is life that generates,
And many seeming life is one."

Then let the spring-tide bear in upon us through all this unfolding of forest grandeur; through blossoming garniture of orchard trees, and through flowers about our homes that vary the expression of the beautiful intents and colorings as delicate to the view as is their fragrance to our breathing. Our souls, smitten by the wand wielded by the hand of Spring, whose magic touch each form of nature feels and glows responsive, leap to receive a renewing baptism of that ever-enriching, might-imparting, hope-confirming life, which is one with truth and holiness and heaven.

The just and powerful portrayal of the iniquitous Louisiana Lottery scheme by Dr. Carradine, as it appears in the ADVOCATE, will certainly make a concussion upon the popular mind favorable to a reformation in respect of oblique gambling. The principle of seeking gain by ticket drawing in a lottery is the same as that involved in betting upon cards or upon horse racing. The best definition of a dishonest man that I've ever been able to frame is this: One who seeks something for nothing, or anything at less than its legitimate cost.

Yesterday I had service at the Methodist Church, in commemoration of Washington's inauguration as first President of the United States, one hundred years ago. Suitable Scripture lessons (the twenty-fourth Psalm, the thirteenth chapter of Paul's letter to the Romans, some verses at the beginning of the third chapter of the Epistle to Titus, and some verses beginning with the thirteenth of the second chapter of First Peter), and music appropriate to the occasion, by my choir, whose superior is not in the State, were preliminary to a talk by the pastor, and a capital one from Mr. Thomas Goodnight, of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. Emphasis was given to the good fortune that befell the colonies, in having a man to lead them who was the embodiment of noblest principles, and to the government, at its genesis, in having an Executive of highest type of manhood. Also was there a plea from each of the speakers on the importance of considering more carefully, in all our elections, the personal character of candidates.

A man of faith has a basis of courage, and so of heroism, that no man who lacks faith can be possessed of. Physical courage is necessarily limited by one's personal limitations. Self-reliance can not extend beyond the bound of self. But he who has faith in him who is omnipotent, and realizes that he stands for him, has no limit that omnipotence has not. He is sufficient unto all things.—Sunday-School Times.

NIGHT THOUGHTS.

BY MARIA TAYLOR PIPKIN.

Could we but read the stars aright
That gem the broad breast of the night,
What rapture'd hold spell-bound our souls,
As every dark-clasped hour unrolls
The glitt'ring pageant of the sky,
Itself enough to defy
The Master-hand that holds it there,
Suspended in the ambient air,
In all its glorious majesty,
In all its wondrous harmony;
Each ray a sparkling mystery,
Woven in shining tapestry
Of silv'ry web of golden woof
Beneath the heav'ns' impillared roof,
After God's breath, effulgent, bright,
Took voice and said, "Let there be light."
'Tis he alone who holds the key
To all this heav'n-born mystery,
Whose touch, through Christ, can fan the fire
That draws our souls up higher, higher,
Until within the "gates ajar,"
We solve the mystery of each star.

A Note of Warning.

The so-called "Holiness Association" was held at Waterford, in the Holly Springs district, March 28–31. The Rev. W. B. Godbey seemed to be the ruling spirit of the occasion, and preached many things in his exhortations, and strange things, if reports be true—some statements about Sam Jones' inefficiency before his sanctification and his professing the second blessing, which sound in strange contrast with what I have heard Sam Jones preach. But as I did not hear him, I shall say no more now of what Madam Rumor says, but give you a sample of the spirit and manner of Bro. Godbey's preaching by quoting his own language as recorded in his last work on the subject of holiness, called "Victory." I do this that our brethren may have some idea of what their people are to hear before they send for Bro. Godbey to do their preaching. Hear him on the Methodist Church, to which he professes to belong (pages 20 and 21):

God raised up Wesley, and founded Methodism on the Everlasting Rock. Satan offered his bait, and long she bravely resisted. Of latter days she has nibbled it till she is already drunk with the venom of hell. Let us all rally, and save the dear old ship if we can. If not, she must go down in the wreck with her predecessors. Glory to God she is raising up the Free Methodists and the Salvation Army to prosecute the war!

But hear him again as he pours his venom on our church and self-sacrificing missionaries who are giving up all for Christ (pages 24 and 25):

The reason we have spent 1,800 years trying to save the world, and have more heathens now than when we began, is because we have not had victory in our own hearts. A man must get his own garden clean before he goes out to help his neighbors. While America was in that awful Civil War, she could not have done much against a foreign foe. The poor, stingy home-church has been drained to send off dead-beat missionaries. And what has been accomplished? Christianity has been a hiss and by-word among the heathens.

This is the language of one who is continually professing that he has been sanctified for twenty years, who claims a large degree of that charity which "vaunteth not itself," "which is not puffed up, which thinketh no evil, but hopeth all things, and endureth all things." A large portion of what he says is a disconnected repetition of what Methodists have always preached against—living in sin—presented as if it was only preached now by the advocates of the "second-blessing theory." If language is to be taken in its ordinary sense, there is in this little pamphlet of twenty-eight pages more pessimism, egotism, self-laudation, fault-finding and false interpretation of plain texts of Scripture than I ever saw before from the pen of a Methodist preacher. He does not condescend to quote from our version of the Bible, or from the late revision, but gives us Godbey's version of the original text that we may have it in its purity, exhibiting a spirit of conscious infallibility which would embarrass the Pope of Rome. He never seems to entertain the thought for a moment that he might possibly be mistaken.

Such are the absurd extremes to which Methodists are liable to go when they seek a place in some organization which claims to be higher and holier than the Methodist Church, which was organized to spread holiness everywhere, and certainly furnishes every necessary means to preach and practice that for which she has a being in the world. And every effort to promote the cause in some other way is liable to lead to extremes, wild fanaticism, dissension and division, as is now the case in many places in our church. And my advice to the young preachers of the North Mississippi Conference is, to shun everything of the kind, and do their preaching and seeking of holiness in the Methodist Church. I have nothing to say against the doctrine of instantaneous sanctification by faith, nor against those who profess to enjoy it. Many of them are among the best people of this section—first in every good work; and if let alone by imported teachers, are in no danger: but we are nearing the danger line, and it is all important to call a halt, or fearful are going to be the results. I believe that Bro. Boland is on one extreme and Bro. Godbey on the other, and in either direction there is danger. I regret the necessity of having anything to say on this subject, for many of these brethren consider everything which is not in keeping with their ideas of holiness as opposition to holiness. But I say unto all, Seek this high degree in the divine life which Wesley called "perfect love:" and whether you reach it by sudden leaps or gradual growth does not concern me: for thousands, whose testimony we can not doubt, have attained it in either way. But that we are to seek every opportunity to profess this high attainment can not be supported by the Word of God, nor by the example of Wesley himself, who seldom made any such profession, and then in modest terms—in strange contrast with some who profess the blessing now. St. John, the disciple whom Jesus loved, and who lived and preached holiness as few other men have ever done, never professed it at all; and there is not as much of the professing of holiness in all the New Testament as you would hear at one of these holiness meetings in one hour. This is undoubtedly a great mistake, and does more to bring the doctrine of holiness into disrepute, and works more evil than it will ever do good.

Woman's Work.

The Woman's Department of Church Extension weeps over the loss of our dear Sister T. J. Davis, of Enterprise Parsonage Society. A fragrant memory will linger lovingly in the hearts of those who knew her. Her crown is radiant with sparkling jewels. Was she not wise in placing treasures in the home prepared by the dear Savior by laboring for homes for God's messengers? Are we not fortunate in having secured her in our great work?

Let the broken thread be immediately taken up, that the weaving may go on.

Miss Carrie Arrington stands alone as worker at Pawhuska, Ind. Ter., because our department could not give help to build a parsonage for the sacrificing minister who labored there.

Not a parsonage immediately on the Coast between New Orleans and Mobile.

A flourishing Aid Society has recently been converted into a Church Extension Parsonage Society, now numbering twenty-eight members. They hope to build unaided a parsonage for themselves, and will send dues and mite-box collections to the regular fund. The corresponding secretary wrote for three dozen mite-boxes. Such loyalty and consecration will surely reap a recompense. Oh, that the blessedness of giving was more generally appreciated!

Send to Mrs. E. D. Jones, Carlisle, Miss., for Constitution and literature. Send money to Mrs. O. S. Robbins, Vicksburg, Miss.

The Mississippi Methodist College Again.

That Mississippi is to have a Methodist Male College is a fixed fact. When one man gives $50,000—and others with smaller means are equally as liberal in their donations—it certainly means business; but the tug of war will be the location of said college. One brother says where he lives is the place, and another the same. Only two of the brethren thus far have agreed as to the location, and I will come in for the third in agreement with those two.

Bro. Abbey says if the geographical center is of the greatest import, the location should be at Kosciusko; that it had all the advantages except one, and that one the greatest boon on earth to man; and that is, health, health. Bro. Abbey claims that the Gulf Coast has the advantage of all others, if we make health of the greatest import. Now, Bro. Abbey is much older than I am, and I have no doubt that the sea breeze has been beneficial to him; but I must beg to differ with him as to its being the healthiest portion of the State. The Coast is the only portion of the State that I am not more or less acquainted with. I know of places—more than one—that certainly are as healthy as heart could wish, or as could be found in the State, or United States. I do not think that any place can excel Brandon for health, which place I have known almost as long as I have known any. As for accessibility, some others might claim the advantage; for instance, Jackson and Meridian, they being railroad centers; but, so far as accessibility is concerned, there can be no complaint made against Brandon. Knowing what I do, were I living on the Coast or any of the utmost bounds of the State, I would say, Give it to Brandon, and by no means locate the college any farther from the capital of the State. Now, why Bro. Galloway would suggest the little out-of-the-way and isolated place, Columbia, I can not conceive, unless it be because Bro. Featherston said Centenary was sick, and she caught her sickness at Brandon. Centenary was only sick for the want of cents, and she, no doubt, caught her sickness at her present location. I have the good fortune to be acquainted with Bro. Galloway's country he speaks so highly of. There are some most excellent people in that country; and about some as fine reservoirs for swamp and malarial fevers as I have ever seen, unless it be in the valley of the Mississippi river. I know of no such near Brandon.

Now, if Bro. Galloway should read this, he will set me down at once as another boomer for Brandon. Maybe he will be right; but I do not think that the boomers of Columbia will likely ever die by electricity, if they never receive a shock, until they are electrified by the college being located at Columbia; for to locate it there, or on the Coast, or near any of the boundary lines of the State, would give it a worse chill than Brandon or Jackson, for the people of the State are sick and tired of these one-sided public institutions.

F. A. LANE, L. P.

The Church.

The church is the only divine institution on earth. It, therefore, is the only organization that God has authorized to teach and enforce moral precept. It is the great reservoir of moral influence. Whatever of moral force there is in the world, the church of God makes it. It can not be generated anywhere else. By and through the church every will is to be conveted, and every benevolence bestowed. It is to save and bless the world, and when it fails no organization on earth can do it. Every effort to improve the moral, intellectual, social and material interests of man, outside the church, is a departure from the divine plan. It nibbles the church, and will fail because it is human. There is no blessing, temporal or spiritual, that is not secured to us by the church of God, if faithful. Said Christ: "All these things shall be added unto you." Can men do more for us than is promised in the church by the Giver of all good? Are there any obligations that embrace more, or that are more binding than hers? It seems so from the hundred and one fraternities that exist, and the number of members and punctual attendance and prompt payment of dues. Has God left the church, and are we, by our brotherhoods, to take care of ourselves? No. Said he who gave his life: "Lo, I am with you always." And there is no brotherhood on earth higher and better, or more binding than that of the church. A man that will not keep his church obligations will not keep any other.

The Protestant Church is accused of not being benevolent or charitable; and, in part, it is true. But if the money that is paid by professed Christians to those fraternities for charities was paid in the name of their respective churches, it would be giving honor to whom honor is due. There is great complaint of meager support of the church, and we are spending more money for the support of these than for the furtherance of the kingdom of Christ at home and abroad.

There are scores of men in the church that think $5 a year all they can give for the support of her institutions, and pay $20 to the society; then go to church Sunday, and sing, "I love thy church, O God!" It is possible that the Catholics, Wesleyan Methodists and Hard-shell Baptists are nearer right, in their extreme, than we. Oh, we are so divided up we can hardly tell where or what we are; and when we are dead there are so many claims for a part in the burial that, if each did its part, we could hardly be buried. The time has come when we must let the world feel and know that the church is of God, and that if men meet their church obligations, the highest end of their being will be reached; and to be buried by her ritual is the highest honor to be conferred upon the dead.

Country Stewards.

MR. EDITOR: I was most wonderfully impressed with the statement made at the New Orleans District Conference, that fourteen dollars and twelve cents per member had been paid to the cause of Christ during the past year, while the Alexandria district paid only three dollars and twenty-six cents for all purposes; and for missions, only ten cents. Such a pittance makes me blush with shame, knowing that it is a fact. I have a desire to look into this matter, and, if possible, see where the fault is. I am a member of this Alexandria district; was born and raised in it. My father was born, lived and died in this district, and I have keenly felt that it has been made the butt of ridicule, since my earliest recollection, on account of its contributions to the cause of Christ and his church. Why is this? Now, sir, I am not going to whine out in dolorous tones that old word "poverty," nor am I going to hurl contemptuously the word "stingy," but am going to say what I believe to be the cause of this meagre pittance brought up from this district. I do not want to screen any man or set of men; but I desire to expose a time-honored custom which has always crippled and suppressed our financial work on this district, and let the blame fall where it justly belongs. This financial question in the rural districts has always been considered doubtful; consequently all parties are by common consent supposed to look after and busy themselves in settling it. While it is made the special duty of the Board of Stewards, by the law of the church, to transact the temporal business of the church, it is also made the duty of the presiding elder to oversee the spiritual and temporal affairs of the church; and the error which so often results is manifest in the authority of these two officers. The one assuming that it is his special business, and the others feeling that it is theirs, meet in combat with the result of the Kilkenny cats. I have joined, with a feeling of mortification, for two and three hours this strife between steward and presiding elder, with invariably the same result.

Now, I speak plainly what I think should be done in this matter. Let each officer know and attend to his own business. I have heard, somewhere, that it is a step in the direction of success for every man to attend to his own, and let another's business alone. When a presiding elder comes, with an eye so keenly fixed upon the financial work of the church that he keeps the Conference seated for two, three and sometimes four hours, trying to show his adaptability to squirm out of them the last possible cent in accordance with his views as to how it should be done, and constitutes himself the Board of Stewards, chairman, secretary, as well as the president of the Quarterly Conference, asking the disciplinary questions, and then answering them himself, we may expect the stewards to do their work in a half-hearted way; and not only so, but they are made to feel that they are too poor, stingy or ignorant to do what duty demands and the church requires. And as David in Saul's armor, they are sent out hindered and hurt, feeling no personal responsibility. While your city stewards are organized, trusted and made to feel responsible, our country stewards are not. I think this is just why our country circuits do so little. Our good laymen are held in check by not being encouraged to organize for duty and trusted, encouraged and educated to do duty. Now, should anyone feel curious to know whether there is anything in this or not, let them ask, Have you a Board of Stewards properly organized, with chairman, secretary and treasurer? If not, how can we expect a disconnected mass systematically to do anything? Bring our intelligent laymen to the front, and let them bravely fight this financial battle for the church as for their own personal interest, and we will soon see the result.

COUNTRY STEWARD.

Our Worn-Out Preachers.

Our people are giving money to enlighten the heathen at home and abroad. That is right. They are also enlarging and improving our educational facilities. That is right. But I will venture to ask if they are doing their duty in providing for the worn-out preachers and the widows and children of preachers. I think not. On the contrary, the word is: "Missions to the heathen, colleges for the boys, and money to build churches"—all of which is good enough; but it is wrong to neglect making adequate provision for the worn-out preachers, the widows and orphans.

A man who has worked his faithful horse year after year, and, when enfeebled by age, the old horse is no longer able to earn his feed and is turned out on the commons to starve, is not held in very high esteem by his neighbors.

What of a church of religious people who do not provide for these faithful ministers after they have worn themselves out in their service? The church needs to be stirred up on this question. Less "culture" among the young ministers, and more bread for the old worn-out ones, would be better.

OLD FOGY.

Mississippi State Sunday-School Convention.

The next annual meeting of this body will be held at Starkville, on July 23 and 24, 1889. A program will be published at an early date, and arrangements will be made for reduced rates over the various railroads. Prominent workers from this and other States will be present, and all who attend will be edified and instructed. This convention is inter-denominational, and, therefore, Sunday-school workers of all denominations are especially requested to attend. The people of Starkville will provide for all who come. Each Sunday-school is entitled to one delegate, and each county convention to two. As the Baptist State Convention meets at West Point on July 25, all who wish to do so can attend both meetings for one fare.

It is earnestly desired that a convention be organized in every county in this State (where none now exists), previous to the meeting of the State Convention.

MYRTLE CIRCUIT, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: At the last session of the North Mississippi Conference I was sent as a supply to the Myrtle circuit, successor to Bro. J. H. Smith. Of course, I came on the work an entire stranger; but, thank the Lord! (as Methodist preachers always do) I found many warm-hearted friends, who gave me a cordial welcome. My predecessor (Bro. Smith) has many friends on this charge. I am told he did some good preaching. I am under the jurisdiction of Rev. J. W. Honnoll, P. E., an excellent man and a real preacher. I could not have been better pleased in an elder.

We have just closed our second Quarterly Conference. My elder said we had the largest audience on Saturday at eleven o'clock he has seen for many years at a country church. We had a delightful time; the church revived, and a good impression all along the line. The elder's sermon on Sunday was one of the best I have ever heard. It was a missionary sermon, and a very effectual one. He administered the sacrament to a number of communicants. We took up a collection at the close of the service, and raised $27—more than one-fourth of the collections ordered by the Annual Conference. We expect to collect the full amount during the year.

We are in the midst of a kind and hospitable people. Several different denominations—Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterians and a few Campbellites; but all are courteous to a Methodist preacher. Our salary is about one-third paid. We believe the assessment will be paid in full on this circuit. I am praying and working for a gracious revival of Holy Ghost religion. I feel that it is greatly needed. May the Lord hasten its dawn! Some of our people seem to be stirred on the evangelist question, and seem to think we can not have a revival without one. Now, I have no doubt in my mind they (the evangelists) do great good and reach the heart of sinners whom other preachers have no effect upon; however, to suppose that God is altogether dependent upon an evangelist to proclaim the gospel in an effectual manner is a sad mistake, and also inconsistent with Bible faith. We must not come to the conclusion that it is absolutely necessary that we have an evangelist in order to enjoy religion. No; the fields are white already to the harvest, and the charge comes to each and everyone: "Go work in my vineyard;" and we must, as preacher and people, obey the divine mandate. If we are dependent altogether on a traveling evangelist to get up a religious sentiment among the people, we are sure to die spiritually; and, as a matter of course, perish eternally for want of spiritual bread, because many of our people will never have an opportunity of hearing one; and unless they rally around the blood-stained cross, independent of an evangelist, with earnest zeal and untiring energy, the great emissary—the devil—will drive us from the field. I have no objections to an evangelist; but to say we are solely dependent on such to spread holiness in our land is fallacy beyond dispute. May the Lord help us all to remember that there is a work assigned to each follower of the Savior of souls! And the sooner we get about it, the greater the harvest will be in time and eternity.

W. A. MANLEY.

BELZONA, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: The first quarterly meeting was held on April 28 and 29. I feel like the meeting was quite a success in every way. The stewards of every church were present on Saturday, and we had a large crowd for the place and time. The presiding elder, Dr. J. J. Wheat, was with us, and preached three sermons full of truth and grace. His words are aglow with the divine fire and Christian zeal and earnestness. His manner is gentle and impressive, and his words fall and sink deep into the hearts of his hearers. It is surely a feast to hear the old man. The people of Belzona love the old man very much, and will be glad to see and hear him again. He gave us a send-off that will last for some time.

On Sunday we took up a collection that was encouraging to the elder and myself. I can say that the spiritual condition of the church has improved very much since I came on this work, but not as much as it will later in the year. This people love to go to preaching in this swamp, and they need much and good preaching. A good many of the preachers think this swamp is nothing but a graveyard and a den of Arabs. Not a word of this is so. The health of the people is just as good, as far as I can see, as it is in the hills. As for myself, I have better health than ever before in my life at this season of the year. The people generally are more intelligent than in a great many places in the hills. As for kindness, they can not be surpassed.

I am looking forward to and expecting something great from the presence of the Lord this year. Our next Quarterly Conference will be held at Ashton, on Tchula Lake, at the head of Honey Island, the last Saturday and Sunday in June.

W. H. SANDERS, P. C.

SABINE MISSION, LA.

MR. EDITOR: We are supplying the Sabine mission. During the last month we traveled over two hundred miles and were warmly welcomed by [illegible] hearts everywhere. We found the good people anxious for the gospel, and had good congregations at all our appointments, at some of which families walked from four to seven miles to hear the gospel. Our good wife accompanied us on the round, and was a valuable co-worker. God bless our labors to the organization of two churches and three Sabbath-schools, and the promised organization of the fourth Sabbath-school yesterday. Bibles and Methodist literature are very scarce, and much needed on this mission. Many of our people are very poor, and not able to supply themselves with Bibles and Christian papers. I pray God to open up a channel through which they may be supplied. Send us sample copies of the ADVOCATE, that we may work for visits in every family. Pray for me and our work. May God bless the ADVOCATE to the multiplying of its usefulness! is my prayer.

G. W. WALL.

Why Is It?

There is "an open secret" that many refuse to read, and it contains glaring truths which should be impressed upon every mind. There are persons, not a few, who are ever looking out into the distance with an eager, strained gaze for the help that lies within themselves; for the resources that they could command with a small effort; for wiser heads to work out problems they could solve themselves with a few minutes' thought or toil; and for strong hands to remove impediments that they might, with but little difficulty, surmount themselves if they would but use their strength.

We are too slow in learning what forces lie within us, which, if we would employ, would clear the way for any successful experiment we might wish to make; but will not believe it possible that we could of ourselves accomplish all this unaided and untaught.

We see in every lane of life men and women waiting, hoping, expecting that there will presently be some great unfolding or revelation, that will usher into life a new set of forces or potentialities for some mighty achievement that will shock the world like peals of living thunder. They must have an earthquake heave and startle before they will believe they can and should bestir themselves to prompt and steady action. They will not believe that the very force that is to put them in the path to success is within themselves, and the very path in which they are now walking will lead to that success if they will keep in it and use their powers to the best possible advantage.

Every successful man is besieged with applications from those who seem to be willing to work; every vacant post is crowded with those who would gladly fill it; editors are annoyed with manuscript from every quarter; yet with all this ado about filling positions and a strongly manifested desire for literary work, the world has its quota of loafers and idlers, for so few are capable of giving satisfaction in the various departments of business.

Most people are not content with small beginnings; their ambition runs ahead of their capacity, and when they succeed in securing a position they fail to keep it because the necessary qualifications are wanting—they have aimed too high, and by scorning small beginnings have failed to succeed. "Hasten slowly; do it well," is a motto which should be engraved within every nature, forming part and parcel of itself all through life.

In all the trades and professions men must expect to attain to eminence only by slow and regular gradations, for it is not often that one mad leap secures success. Instead of waiting, Micawber-like, "for something to turn up," it were far nobler, as well as more profitable, to be pressing actively and earnestly on toward the goal of our wishes and expectations, remembering that "God helps those who help themselves."—Baltimorean.

Life should be conceived as, first of all, a serious thing. Look into some faces and you will feel that their possessors regard pleasure as the great aim and object of life, and serious pursuits as of secondary importance, to be engaged in only so far as is absolutely necessary. Look upon others and you will feel that they regard pleasure as legitimate only secondary, and as conducive to keeping mind and body in fit condition for the attainment of ends that are serious, lofty and permanent. Reader, to which of these classes do you belong?—Morning Star.

Sunday-School Lesson.

(Hurlburt and Simpson's Lesson Commentary, Phillips & Hunt, New York.)

LESSON VIII.—May 26.

JESUS BETRAYED.

Mark xiv, 43-54.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Betrayest thou the Son of man with a kiss?—Luke xxii, 48.

TIME.—A. D. 29. Very early in the morning the crucifixion.

PLACE.—The garden of Gethsemane.

PARALLEL PASSAGES.—Matt. xxvi, 47-56; Luke xxii, 47-54; John xviii, 2-15.

43. Immediately, while he yet spake—denotes a close succession of events. He had probably roused the three disciples from their slumbers, and retired the remaining eight, possibly saying similar words to them; but immediately comes the betrayer. Judas, one of the twelve—There is a solemn significance in the fact that the three synoptists all note that the betrayer was "one of the twelve." A great multitude—John says, that he had received a band of men and officers from the chief priests, etc. Josephus says that at the festival of the passover, when a great multitude of people came to observe the feast, lest there should be any disorder a band of men was commanded to keep watch at the porches of the temple to repress a tumult, if any should be excited. This band, or guard, was, at the disposal of the chief priests. It was composed of Roman soldiers, and was stationed chiefly at the tower of Antonia, at the northwest side of the temple. In addition to this, they had constant guards stationed around the temple composed of Levites. Staves—In the original, "wood;" used here in the plural number. It means, rather, clubs or sticks, not spears. It does not mean staves. Probably it means any weapon at hand, such as a mob can conveniently collect. John says that they had lanterns and torches. The passover was celebrated at the full moon. But this night might have been cloudy. The place to which they were going was also shaded with trees, and lights, therefore, might be necessary.

44. He that betrayed—Judas. Had given them a token—The sign was agreed on with the Roman soldiers, who probably did not personally know Him, and who besides would have had their orders from the city to take whom Judas would kiss. Whomsoever I shall kiss—The kiss among the ancients was a sign of affectionate and cordial intimacy, and particularly a token of fidelity. Lead him away safely—This fear of a rescue affords a singular evidence of the moral incapacity of Judas to understand the character of Jesus. The guards evidently shared his apprehensions, or they would not have bound Jesus.

45. Master, Master—"Rabbi" appears to have been the usual form in which Judas addressed our Lord. Kissed him—(Kissed him tenderly.) The verb here is a compound of the one translated kiss in the preceding verse, and denotes that he not only gave the sign, but also that the act was performed in a tender and affectionate manner, thus adding to his guilt the sin of affectation and hypocrisy. Wouldest thou know what Satan can do and God can suffer—what the basest of mankind can commit and the best of mankind can bear? Behold the lips of Judas who kisses, and the cheek of Jesus who receives the kiss.

47. One of them—This, we know from St. John, was Simon Peter, displaying his characteristic impetuosity to the end. Drew a sword—The apostles were not commonly armed. On this occasion they had provided two swords, in seasons of danger, when traveling through the country, they were under a necessity of providing means of defending themselves against the robbers who infested the country. This will account for their having any swords in their possession. Smote a servant—This we are told by St. John was Malchus. St. John was an acquaintance of the high-priest's, and probably a frequenter of his house; hence he knew the name of his servant.

48. Jesus answered—We are told by St. Luke that Jesus healed the servant's ear at once. Thus the last act of those hands before they were bound as a work of mercy and of peace in healing that slight wound, the only one ever inflicted for his sake. As against a thief—Why was so formidable a body sent to apprehend a single individual? Doubtless they feared his miraculous powers, and had a sort of vague notion that a mighty force was necessary to overcome him. When they felt his miraculous repressive influences, and saw his last miracle of healing, they were probably alarmed. But when they saw him still submit, they imagined themselves too strong for him.

49. In the temple—Within the courts of the sacred inclosure. The Scriptures must be fulfilled—So far as man is concerned, he is really and truly under no compulsion, but lays down his life of himself. But there is a higher law by which he is most perfectly bound. The counsel of God is that he shall pursue a certain course of duty, and that course has been predicted in the Scripture.

50. They all forsook him, and fled—We may be perfectly assured that they would not invent a falsehood on purpose to perpetuate their own disgrace. We have, therefore, in this incident a demonstrative proof that our Lord's prophecy was actually fulfilled, and that the evangelists were men of the strictest veracity and integrity, who were determined to sacrifice everything, even their own reputation, to the sacred cause of truth. But Peter, and probably John, only for a little way. Finding they were not pursued, they turned and followed the band to the high priest's house.

51. A certain young man—The incident of this young man occurs very briefly, and is narrated apparently for no purpose whatever. The only solution, certainly the best, is the supposition that it was no other than Mark himself. Mark was at this time a young man, living probably in Jerusalem with his mother; and was more or less a follower of Jesus, and very likely to be present, from his interest in our Lord, during these awful transactions. That he should not name himself is very naturally explained on the same principle of personal delicacy as induced the Evangelist John to allude to himself in the third person. A linen cloth—He was roused from sleep, and probably threw around him what was most convenient. They slept in linen bedclothes commonly, and he seized a part of the clothes and hastily threw it round him. The young men laid hold on him—The Roman soldiers. They were called young men because they were made up chiefly of youth originally. This use of the word to signify soldiers is common both in Greek and Latin.

52. Naked—it need not imply that he was absolutely naked. It may mean, like the Latin nudus, "with only the under robe on."

53. They led Jesus away to the high-priest—Jesus was now absolutely alone in the power of his enemies. At the command of the tribune his hands were tied behind his back, and, forming a close array around him, the Roman soldiers, followed and surrounded by the Jewish servants, led him once more through the night over the Kedron, and up the steep city slope beyond it, to the palace of the high-priest. Two persons are spoken of as high-priests, whereas we know that there could not be more than one holding the office at any given time. We find that Annas had been high-priest some time before, but for political reasons had been deposed by the Roman governor. The man actually in legal possession of the office at this time—"the high-priest of the year," as he was significantly spoken of—was Caiaphas, and when the Jews designate him "high-priest," it is only as we should say, under protest, because the state, which they were afraid openly to disobey, compelled them to do so. Thus we see in the eyes of the Jews, by whose laws the office was inalienable and for life, Annas was regarded as their rightful high-priest, while Caiaphas was legally in possession of the dignity and title. All the chief priests and the elders and the scribes—They were simply acting as a self-constituted body; partisans of established ecclesiastical order, and defenders of their own vested rights; gathered at the summons of the high-priest, in the blind excitement of fanaticism and passion, without rules of judicial proceeding or legal standing as a court. It was before a mob of dignitaries, not a "court," that Jesus was brought. The present gathering was, therefore, an informal one—probably a packed meeting of those who were parties to the plot.

54. Peter followed him afar off—Unknown, and a Galilean, he had been stopped at the door by the youthful portress. Better, far better, had his exclusion been final. For it was a night of tumult, of terror, of suspicion; and Peter was weak, and his intense love was mixed with fear, and yet he was venturing into the very thick of his most dangerous enemies. Even into the palace—(Into the court, as Revised Version.) Not the palace, but the open court-yard around which the palace was built. The court in the interior of a great house was used on public occasions for meetings of guests and for the reception of attendants. With the servants—With bold imprudence, and concealing the better motives which had brought him thither, Peter, warned though he had been, but warned in vain, walked into the court-yard and sat down in the very middle of the servants of the very men before whom at that moment his Lord was being arraigned on a charge of death. Often a fall is incurred more easily in the presence of such as servants, who are less feared, than among their masters. Warming himself—John says, it being cold, they had made a fire of coals, and warmed themselves. It was then probably not far from midnight. The place where they were was uncovered, and travelers say that though the days are warm in Judea at that season of the year, yet that the nights are often uncomfortably cold. At the fire—The Revised Version has it, "in the light of the fire." The fire was an open hearth which lights and warms the hall at the same time. The designation is employed to explain the circumstance that Peter was recognized by the light of the fire. Appropriately light is the expression used instead of fire; Peter was recognized by the light, when under other circumstances he might have been safer.

Missionary.

Results of Missionary Operations.

We often hear adverse criticisms on missionary operations by men who have never taken pains to investigate the subject, and sometimes by those who have studied it with hostile feelings. It is interesting and profitable to read the testimony of intelligent men who have spent years in missionary fields, and whose position has afforded them opportunity to form a correct judgment.

On Dec. 10, 1888, the Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces of India laid the corner-stone of the Methodist Episcopal Mission Building at Jubulpur, and delivered an address. In the course of his remarks he mentioned the fact that in his experience those who deprecate mission work are generally people who know nothing about it, and among those who had taken pains to inform themselves he had detected a one-sidedness and absence of sympathy which in any other sphere would disqualify them for the exercise of the critical function. The commissioner then declared his own opinion. "After making due allowance for all exaggerated reports, he could still see strong ground for encouragement in mission work in the number and character of actual converts. But this statistical view presents only a superficial idea of the real progress of missions. Commissioner Mackenzie then said: 'I have often given it as my opinion that ere many years are over we shall have in India a great religious upheaval. The leaven of Western thought and the leaven of Christianity together are working on the inert heap of dead and fetid superstitions, and by processes which can not always be closely traced are spreading a regenerating ferment through the mass, which must in time burst open the cerements that now enshroud the Indian mind."

This view of the effect of missionary operations is valuable, first because it is the result of the careful observation of an intelligent and cultivated gentleman who has had ample time and opportunity to form a correct notion, and also because it is a sensible representation of the real progress of Christianity in heathen countries. Some cold calculating folks ask only for statistics. They wish to know the amount of money expended, and the number of baptisms recorded, and the number of conversions reported. They figure with nice exactness the proportion between the conversions thus far secured and the millions yet remaining in darkness, and soon figure themselves into darkness.

One is reminded of those precise geologists who first find how many inches of the rock are eaten away by the cataract of Niagara in a year, and then calculate how many millions of years it will take to wear away Goat Island. They forget that the rocks under Goat Island are being honeycombed by the waters which work out of sight, and some day the entire island may tumble into the gorge below in an hour. So the work of the gospel among pagan systems and institutions is not altogether nor chiefly on the surface. "The leaven of Christianity is working on the inert heap of dead and fetid superstitions." Some day there will be a mighty religious upheaval. By upheavals and cataclysms the Almighty sometimes works his grand designs. In grace as well as in nature. The preparation for these stupendous transformations is slow and mysterious, and often imperceptible in its progress; but when the way of the Lord is prepared, a nation shall be born in a day. —New York Christian Advocate.

Rum and the Sabbath.

It goes without saying that every man who is a Christian must be opposed to the rum traffic, and can not cast his vote for it without stultifying himself. If he feels in his heart that great spirit of human brotherhood that is the cardinal doctrine of the "lowly One of Nazareth," he must of necessity be the active, unrelenting, tireless enemy of the rum power. The saloon interest is the one great evil of our land, the one thing that is doing more than all others to retard the march of the gospel. The saloons of every city are filled all day long on Sunday with men who should be in our churches, with young men and large boys who should be in Sunday-schools. Rum is the great enemy of the Fourth Commandment, and its votaries are doing more than all other influences to profane the day of rest, to destroy the Christian Sabbath, to break down the bulwarks of Christian civilization, and to drag down mankind to a lower level, wherein appetite shall rule, and men's passions and selfish instincts be their rule of action, rather than the "new commandments" given unto us by our Savior, and the Golden Rule, which he declared to be man's highest rule of personal conduct. So long as rum shall reign and the saloon flourish, so long will the Christian church lack prosperity. Every Christian man should take up arms against the rum power, and never cease his warfare on this giant evil. Every Christian pulpit should labor to intimate the zeal of the congregation against the giant curse of our day, this three armed foe of Christianity, this potent enemy of the highest and best type of civilization. There are too many people who yet look upon this subject of prohibition with indifferent eyes. There are far too many who think it something which does not concern them personally. They must be roused from their indifference; they must be brought to see that it is something which is of vital interest to their own homes, their business, their prosperity, their duty to their fellow-men. They must be compelled to abandon their non-committal attitude. They must be brought to recognize the magnitude of the overshadowing evil of this age and generation. They must be brought to realize the grave dangers with which it threatens the nation, the unmitigated curse it is to humanity. They must be roused to an active realization that it is their duty as parents, as business men, as Christians, as honest, moral, upright citizens, to work and vote for prohibition.—Toledo Blade.

That tired feeling, so subtle and yet so overpowering, is entirely overcome by Hood's Sarsaparilla, which tones and strengthens the system and gives a good appetite. Be sure to get Hood's Sarsaparilla. "100 Doses One Dollar" is true only of this peculiar medicine

E. B. Dretrick, in discussing the question, "How may public schools be improved?" says: "A certain lady announced her intention of giving $25,000 for a home for incurables. 'Oh!' exclaimed a bright woman experienced in kindergarten work, 'do give half of it, at least, to the curables. Are we not expending on incurables—adult paupers—much that might more wisely be used for curables, in free kindergarten work amongst the children of those paupers? Thirty thousand dollars annually has been thrown away under pretense of cleaning one city jail, by a city government which does not think it worth while to support the free public kindergarten, or to give its young children any form of industrial training.'"

Dyspepsia

Makes many lives miserable, and often leads to self destruction. Distress after eating, sick headache, heartburn, sour stomach, mental depression, etc., are caused by this very common and increasing disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla tones the stomach, creates an appetite, promotes healthy digestion, relieves sick headache, clears the mind, and cures the most obstinate cases of dyspepsia. Read the following:

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. In an hour after eating I would experience a faintness or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. Hood's Sarsaparilla did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced. It relieved me of that faint, tired, all-gone feeling. I have felt so much better since I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, that I am happy to recommend it." G. A. PAGE, Watertown, Mass.

The Board of Missions.

ANNUAL MEETING.

The Board of Missions of our church began its last annual session in Nashville, Tenn., May 3, and finished its work May 6. The Board is composed of ministers and laymen, representing every section of the church from Baltimore to California, and from Kentucky to Texas; men who are imbued with the true missionary spirit, and who "know what Israel ought to do" in extending the kingdom of our Lord over the earth; men, many of whom have experienced the difficulties of missionary labor, and can, therefore, sympathize with those who are to-day working on mission ground, and thus make the best and most judicious plans and arrangements for carrying on the work in the most advantageous manner. While sitting in this Board, and taking cognizance of its work, it occurred to us that if, by some sort of process, the whole church could be present at one of these meetings, we would never have any more trouble about raising all the money needed to do the mission work of our church. The popular idea that the Board meets simply to make assessments on the church and the appropriations to carry on the work would be completely dissipated by witnessing one session of the annual meeting.

We have never seen a more painstaking and careful and thoughtful and prayerful body than our Board of Missions. Every part of the field is minutely surveyed, its wants looked into, its possibilities for development carefully studied, the successful work done in it truly stated, and even the failures of success are not covered up. The missionaries and their families and their work—their prospects and their hopes, their success and their failures, their adaptation to meet the necessities of their fields or their lack of adaptation—all come under the prayerful review of the Board. There seemed to be no favorites with the Board, either in respect to men or places. There was a general feeling that God had opened the various fields in which we are trying to spread the gospel, and that he had vindicated the wisdom of the church in her selection of missionaries for those opened fields; and there was a general desire to maintain the work begun to the extreme limit of the full strength of the missionary treasury. The Board could have very advantageously appropriated $500,000. The work actually demands that much now; and it is not to the credit of the church that she only had half that amount to be distributed for preaching the gospel among the heathen. After a careful consideration of every field upon which we have entered, the Board resolved to take no step backward, but reposing an implicit trust in God, who has called us to these fields, and exercising a firm faith in the growing liberality of our growing church, and having a strong confidence in the men and women who are at the front of the battle against heathenism, the Board resolved not only to maintain the present lines, but to extend them. The Board acted upon the idea that a growing church ought to have a growing domain. While the appropriations for the work for the year have been somewhat increased, the assessments upon the Annual Conference remain as they were last year. In view of this action of the Board, there must needs be a stirring activity among preachers and people to maintain our position in the mission fields. The command to the church to day is the same that she heard when she was encamped upon the shore of the Red Sea awaiting the opening of Providence. Then the Lord said to his hosts, "Go forward;" and that is the word to-day. Our Bishops are the field-marshals, our presiding elders are generals of divisions, our pastors are brigadiers, and our members are the rank and file of the army of God; and what may not twelve hundred thousand soldiers accomplish under such leadership and inspired with loyalty to their Lord and Savior Jesus Christ? We expect to see the grandest success this year in missionary work. That the Board expects it and made provision for its accomplishment may be seen by the following resolutions:

Resolved, That our Bishops are respectfully requested to preach at the Sunday morning service at the next sessions of the various Conferences on the missionary work of our church.

Resolved, That they are requested to prepare an address to the church on the subject of missions, and publish the same simultaneously in all our church papers, not later than the second issue in July.

Resolved, That we request our pastors throughout the church to prepare and preach to their several congregations one or more discourses on our several mission fields, thus affording our people the fullest information possible on the work we are doing.

The Board appointed the week beginning the first Sunday in August as a week of prayer and self-denial for missions. This yielded a large revenue last year, and if properly kept, will yield a larger one this year. We feel certain that if these resolutions are carefully and prayerfully carried out, we shall make great advances in mission work to the glory and honor of our Lord and Savior. Let every reader of the ADVOCATE pray, "Thy kingdom come," and then contribute every dollar possible to secure an answer to the prayer; and may God have mercy on us all!

Sunday-School Anniversary.

Last Sunday was observed as the forty-second anniversary of the Sunday-school Union of our church in this city. The growth of our Sunday-schools since the Union was inaugurated has been slow, but steady, through all these years. There are yet a few persons who are still engaged in this work with the zeal and earnestness which characterized their work forty years ago. Notable among these is Capt. Robertson, who, though in the nineties, takes a lively interest in Sunday-school work. He expects to finish his course in this work. The president of the Union—J. G. Grant, superintendent of Carondelet Street Sunday-school—had prepared a fine programme for the occasion. The large audience of Sunday-school scholars and teachers and parents and friends, that completely filled Carondelet's audience-room and galleries, was a sight to be remembered as one of the great occasions of a lifetime. The singing, assisted by organ, cornet and violin, was thrilling, the recitations were generally well rendered, and the whole affair left the impression of good work done for God among the children. The secretary, Allan Godat, read his report, which showed: Fifteen schools belonging to the Union, 1,526 scholars, 198 teachers; collected for general expenses, $1,630 88; collected for missions, $576 54. The best general average for attendance and for collections was made by the Algiers School, and to it was awarded a handsome banner as a reward.

The Winona District Conference.

The Winona District Conference, of the North Mississippi Conference, held its twentieth annual meeting at Pickens, Miss., on May 9-13. Bishop C. B. Galloway, D. D., presided. Bro. J. B. Streater was elected secretary, and J. R. Bingham his assistant.

Rev. W. B. Murrah, vice-president of Whitworth College; Rev. T. J. Newell, principal of Grenada Collegiate Institute, and the representative of NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE were introduced to the body and cordially welcomed.

Reports from each charge of the district showed spiritual condition excellent; congregations, large and increasing; prayer meetings generally well maintained; church literature is being more largely read; family prayers in many circuits and stations are held in nearly one-half of the families. The assessments and collections show the charges to be meeting their obligations promptly.

The following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Whereas, We have within the territory represented by this Conference a large negro population, and since we are admonished by the gravest considerations of the importance of elevating this race to a higher plane of moral and religious life; And, whereas, These people show a willingness to receive gratefully such help as we may give them in the way of instruction and financial aid; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we will avail ourselves of such opportunities as may present themselves from time to time to help this class of our citizens in all proper ways.

The Committee on Books and Periodicals stated an increasing interest in the purest and best literature. It commended the books of our Publishing House, both as to character and cheapness and variety of choice reading matter. Kind and encouraging words were said about the Nashville Advocate and the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. The following resolution, presented by this committee, was adopted:

Resolved, That we hail with delight our new hymn book, and that we will use our utmost diligence to put it at once into the hands of our people, and into all our churches, to be used to the exclusion of all others in the church services.

The Committee on Memoirs presented an appropriate, pathetic and commemorative resolution on the death of the lamented Rev. T. A. S. Adams, D. D., and Rev. R. P. Mitchell.

The Committee on Education made the following report:

There is no subject now before the church which demands a more careful consideration, or that calls for more vigorous and prompt action on our part, as a people and as a church, than that of Christian education. It requires only a casual glance at the people in our respective charges to see that ignorance and illiteracy prevail to an alarming extent. About the only chance many children have to acquire an education is during the free school terms, and many not so much as that. We, as a church, must move up along this line and support the schools we now have, and establish others as the necessity requires. We need not say we are too poor to do this, because we are well able. A due appreciation of this subject is the thing necessary to arouse us to action. We are in hearty sympathy with the movement now on foot to establish in our State a college for the education of our boys and young men. We can not, as a church, afford to fail in this matter; and we have no idea of failing. That big-hearted layman of Jackson, Miss., Maj. R. W. Millsaps, has set the tune to this enterprise by his liberal offer of $50,000—if the church in the State will raise another $50,000. The responses already made afford grounds to believe that the college will be established.

The Black Hawk District High School, under the principalship of Prof. A. B. Abel, demands a liberal support at our hands. This institution is doing much for Christian education.

The Grenada Collegiate Institute, presided over by Rev. T. J. Newell, is doing good work, and we urge upon the Conference to give it their support. We are glad to have seen among us Rev. W. B. Murrah, vice-president of Whitworth College, and to have heard such a favorable report of said school. We commend it to our people as worthy of their support.

The following resolutions, which closed the report, were adopted:

Resolved, That we, as a District Conference, will do all in our power to establish and maintain the proposed Methodist college in our State, and approve the action of the commission in requesting Bishop Galloway to canvass the State in behalf of the college, and that we invite him to visit our charges in this interest.

Resolved, That we will give to the Winona District High School, at Black Hawk, and to Grenada Collegiate Institute our prayers and support.

Resolved, That we hereby express our appreciation of the Christian liberality of Bro. R. W. Millsaps in behalf of education.

An Education Mass Meeting was held Friday night, when Bishop Galloway and Dr. Wheat made eloquent and effective addresses. Result of meeting, over $2,100 subscribed. About $14,000 thus far has been secured in response to the proposition of Major Millsaps, of Jackson. And Bishop Galloway said "that he feels quite confident of securing for this purpose not less than $75,000 by December, 1889."

Bro. Newell addressed the Conference on the subject of Christian education, and we fully endorse his position on the education of the negro.

Vaiden was selected as the place for holding the next District Conference, notwithstanding Lexington, Winona and Durant made earnest efforts to secure it.

J. R. Bingham, J. B. Streater, A. H. George and F. M. Glass were elected delegates to the Annual Conference, with W. P. Ratliff and O. J. Moore as alternates.

Resolution of thanks to people of Pickens for hospitality, etc., were adopted.

The Shreveport Revival.

We have been blessed with a great revival in Shreveport. The Presbyterian, Baptist and Methodist Churches united their forces, and one of the largest buildings in the town, a cotton compress, was secured and fitted up for the accommodation of the people. Seats enough for fifteen hundred or two thousand people were put in; and for nearly three weeks, twice a day, the evangelist, Rev. R. G. Pearson, gave Bible readings at the morning services, and preached to great gatherings in the evening.

Thorough preparation preceded the revival. For two months it was the topic of conversation all over the town. The sermons in all the pulpits were preparatory to the work. Committees were busy arranging for the building and the music. Three weeks before the appointed time our weekly prayer meetings were united. We went from church to church. The fire began to burn. The Holy Ghost came upon the people. They sang, talked and prayed in the power of the Spirit. One week in advance services were conducted every night in the building of the Young Men's Christian Association. The evangelist arrived on the night of April 5, and on the evening of the seventh, at eight o'clock, he opened the meeting in the great compress building with a sermon from Galatians vi, 7: "Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." His preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power. The impression was profound. The great audience retired deeply impressed, and anxious to be present at the next service.

The Bible reading the next morning was a scene worthy of the great occasion. Hundreds were there with the Word of God in hand. How they did respond to the call of the evangelist! They read right through the subject, hanging upon every word of explanation as it fell with unction from the lips of God's chosen messenger. These Bible readings were a vital part of the great work. God's Word did its own preaching to the people. Vitalized by the power of the Spirit, it took immediate effect. Christian people were brought to understand that a religious life must be a consistent life—a life of simple, strong faith in the Son of God, demonstrated each day by good works as the fruits of that faith. To this must be added the witnessing Spirit bearing witness with our spirits that we are the children of God.

These morning services prepared the church for the evening work, so that when the eight o'clock sermon was over, and the enquiry meeting began, it would have done your soul good to have seen the Christian people, of all denominations, move out in that vast throng and talk to the unconverted. Men, women—the aged and the young—turned out in full force to help those who were under deep conviction and desired peace and pardon through Jesus Christ. At each service the interest deepened and widened. The seats were packed with eager listeners, and the evangelist made full proof of his ministry, for out of the Word of God he brought things both new and old. His use of the Scriptures in preaching is marvelous. No other book—no other field of information. What God's Word says is enough for him, and he makes other people, saints and sinners, believe it is enough for them before he is done.

The move among the unconverted began with the young people. It was not long confined to that class. The tide rose and swept out and up until the strongest men and women in this city felt and acknowledged its power. It is impossible to tell how many are converted in such a meeting. No one can estimate its power over a community. About two hundred have united with the churches in this city, and still they come, and will continue to come in for months. Our Methodist Church has received seventy-four within three Sabbaths. Very few of this number are children. A large per cent. are heads of families, strong men of good business qualifications, who will put their common sense into their religious profession.

Last Sabbath was our regular monthly communion service. Such a scene I never witnessed, unless it was on a Conference occasion. Three-fourths of the great congregation, I suppose, were communicants. Hundreds participated in the solemn, yet delightful service. The same was true at other churches.

The Rev. R. G. Pearson is a man called of God to the work of an evangelist. His methods are simple, straightforward and scriptural in an eminent degree. With him the Word of God is the sword of the Spirit, and with it he cuts through every objection. Infidelity and worldliness are assaulted, brought before this bar, condemned and cast out as offensive to God and destructive to the best interest of men.

Mrs. Pearson, with her Bible readings for women only, is a strong factor in this great work. She understands the best methods for conducting these services. At the outset the closest attention is secured, and she moves forward with great earnestness and simplicity, carrying everything before her.

Our churches have entered with zeal upon the work of organizing societies and Bible meetings for the training of these young converts. Our Young Men's Christian Association is rendering efficient service. That organization has a fine building and a strong membership in this city.

JNO. H. SCRUGGS.

Notes.

We are glad to see that the Sugar Bowl and Farm Journal, of this city, is republishing, for the benefit of its readers, Dr. Carradine's sermon on the Lottery. If our other papers would do likewise, they would show themselves working in the interests of the poor, as well as the interests of morality.

"Merchandising Methodists," is the way a Kansas City writer describes those Methodists who favor fairs, bazaars, festivals, etc., to raise money for the Lord's cause. He says they are doing precisely the same thing as those people did in the olden time, when our Lord drove them from the temple and their merchandise with them. "Straight-out giving," without hope or expectation of a return in any way, is the only way to raise the Lord's money.

If your preacher is a studious man, it is probable that he needs a book which he has not the money to buy. It is also probable that you have money enough to buy him the book he needs. Buy it and send it to him anonymously, and then see if you don't have some new, fresh, inspiring thoughts from his pulpit that will do your soul good. A good book is the best gift to a thoughtful preacher. It beats overcoats and silk hats all to pieces.

Speaking of episcopal residences, the Pacific Methodist says:

They evidently should be dispersed over the entire field, and Western Methodism ought not to be neglected in the distribution. Let a residence be built somewhere in California, Oregon or Arizona; wherever it will be the most pleasant home for the Bishop's family and the most convenient; and then let us tell the Bishops that the house is empty, swept and garnished: that it remains for them to say who of their number is most worthy to fill it.

Bishop Keener's talk in the Board of Missions was another of his awful talks on the responsibility of rich Christians. It made more than one hearer feel that he would not be rich for any consideration. And yet what grand opportunities and grander possibilities lie out before the rich Christian; but, if unused and unrealized, what a dreadful condition he will find himself in when his account is rendered to the Judge! Reader, are you "rich in this world's goods?" Take care that you be not classed at last with the "rich fools."

The preacher gave us a prayer-meeting talk on that passage in the seventy-third Psalm: "Thou wilt guide me with thy counsel and afterward receive me to glory." He showed the absolute necessity of following God's counsel before we could hope to enter his glory. How many people there are in the church who expect transportation to heaven by a sort of spiritual legerdemain. They do not follow God's counsel nor keep his commands, yet expect when they arrive at the gate of glory, it will open of its own accord for their entrance. Almost the last words of the Book are: "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life and may enter in through the gates into the city."

It is a significant fact that the revisers of the hymn book have prefixed to it the one hundred and fiftieth Psalm. The Psalmist calls upon us, not only to praise the Lord with our mouths, but to bring into the service of praise every known instrument of music. The Psalm names the stringed instruments, the wind instruments and the instruments of percussion, and these are all the instruments we have to-day. By placing this Psalm on the fly-leaf of the book, did our Bishops and the committee mean to say that they favored having these instruments used in our church services? If so, then there are some who will object to the book on that account. For our part, we hope that they meant just that thing! The devil has had the instruments long enough.

Judge A. G. Mayers writes to us: "Dr. Carradine's 'sermon' on the Louisiana State Lottery was timely, able and exhaustive. It should be extensively circulated. Much good will come of that terrific arraignment of that monster evil."

Personal and Otherwise.

Prof. Emory has our thanks for an invitation to the commencement exercises of his popular school, the Norvilla Collegiate Institute, at Greensburg, La. Dr. Black, of Jackson, Miss., is to preach the sermon, June 9; and the annual address will be made, June 11, by Hon. J. A. Breaux.

Bishop Hargrove has been elected President of the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University.

The program of the commencement exercises of Huntsville Female College, of Huntsville, Ala., is gotten up in the finest style. Our thanks are due Dr. Jones, the president, for an invitation to be present.

Rev. W. C. Black, D. D., will deliver the address before the graduating class of Kavanaugh College on commencement day, June 11. Rev. H. B. Singleton will address the Kavanaugh Christian Association on Sunday evening, June 9, and Hon. D. H. Watkins, of Columbia, Miss., the alumni on the afternoon of commencement day. Rev. R. W. Merrill (Baptist), of New Orleans, is to preach the sermon on the ninth, at 11 A. M.

Remember that the Topisaw Camp Meeting begins Saturday before the second Sunday in August.

Bro. Randle, presiding elder of Homer district, writes: "The work is moving on smoothly, and the ADVOCATE grows on us, and we think, has improved much over past years."

Rev. Dr. Joseph M. Trimble, of the Ohio Conference, recently celebrated his eighty-second birthday. He has been a member of the Ohio Conference sixty-one years, and a member of twelve successive General Conferences!

Dr. Daniel Dorchester, of Boston, has been appointed by President Harrison, superintendent of Indian schools.

The Vanderbilt system have stopped all freight trains on Sunday except such as carry live stock and perishable articles.

We have received resolutions purporting to be from Lindale circuit, Tyler district, East Texas Conference, condemnatory of the acts of one W. W. Webb, local preacher, and warning the church against him.

We again say that we will not publish anonymous contributions, though written at the request of the pastor. Is that plain enough?

The authorities of the Seashore Camp Ground request us to say that the coming meeting in July, the new hymn book will be used exclusively. So everybody bring that book.

The fact that our Board of Missions is the only one among all the churches that made advance in collections last year is significant and encouraging.

A note from Dr. Black, of Jackson, Miss., informs us that Sam Jones will begin a meeting at that place, June 4.

Bishop C. B. Galloway said at the recent Winona District Conference "that the condition of the Mississippi Methodists as to spiritual health and aggressiveness is remarkable. The preachers are active, the women are well organized, the laity are intelligent, liberal and loyal, and the work moves on rapidly and satisfactorily."

Rev. E. T. Boyett was ordained deacon by Bishop Galloway at the late meeting of the Winona District Conference.

Postal Card Reports.

—Rev. I. W. Cooper writes from Hamilton, Miss.: "Bolton is receiving a greater blessing than ever known before. The work is inspiring and glorious. The church has been converted. Twelve up to date have united with the church, and others will join. There have been thirty conversions. The good work continues. Bro. Jones is doing a grand work. We are pressing the battle to the gates of the enemy."

—Rev. R. A. Burroughs writes: "The Black Hawk circuit moves on well. Conference collections have been taken. Assessments $257 50. Have in cash and subscription, all told, $320; and, perhaps, will get more. Sunday-schools good. Three good prayer meetings and two good women's missionary societies. The sacrament of the Lord's Supper well attended. We are expecting great revivals. Pray for us. A large number of our people take the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE."

—Rev. Dr. Black writes: "On April 1 I had the pleasure of dedicating a new church at Gallman. Methodism took organic form at this place a little more than two years since under the pastorate of Bro. J. N. Tucker. Subsequently, under the leadership of Bro. George Bancroft, a house of worship was erected and a parsonage provided. The itinerant wheel placed the finishing up of this enterprise in the hands of Rev. M. L. Burton. Methodism is now firmly planted in the new field, and has encouraging aspects."

—Rev. C. R. Godfrey writes from Melville, La.: "Mrs. Landrum and Mrs. Payton, both of Melville Church, requested me to say to you that we had a high day in Melville on Sunday, April 28, 1889. We had a large attendance at Sabbath-school in the morning. Large congregation at eleven o'clock; three added to the church at the close of the service. At four o'clock P. M. large audience at the Woman's Foreign Missionary meeting. Six joined; one a Jewish lady, the wife of a merchant of that place; several copies of the Woman's Missionary Advocate subscribed for. At night a crowded house; one added to the church. Finances well up at that church. Monday evening a nice meeting of the Juvenile Missionary Society. Tuesday morning, at nine o'clock, centennial meeting, which was fine."

—Rev. J. M. Cowan writes from Topisaw circuit: "All's well at present, spiritually. The good people of this charge are responding to the calls of the Master. Conference collections about up—that is, in cash and subscriptions, and, of course, the pastor is feeling much better. Please announce in your good paper that the Topisaw Camp Meeting will commence at its usual time—Saturday before the second Sunday in August. Your face at our camp meeting would be very welcome. All preachers are cordially invited, and conveyances will meet them in Summit."

—Rev. W. W. Hopper writes as follows: "I am just from South Vicksburg. Been helping Bro. N. B. Harmon. Twenty-two conversions and nineteen accessions up to yesterday. Roman Catholicism is being stirred; some of them being saved, and the priesthood is aroused. Harmon is indefatigable in labors. Bro. L. S. Jones had a great meeting at Bolton."

—Dr. T. C. Wier writes of a day at Okolona, thus: "Easter Sunday was a bright, beautiful day. Large congregations, morning and evening, heard attentively two good sermons from a former pastor, Bro. S. D. Long, who is held in high esteem by his old parishioners. At the close of the morning service I presented briefly the different objects for which we are to take up collections, as ordered by the Conference, and asked the congregation for the whole amount assessed to Okolona—$185. It was all provided for, and in a comparatively short time, and we left the church with glad hearts. There were eight different counts: Foreign missions, domestic missions, Conference claimants, church extension, Bishops' fund, Christian education, expenses of delegates to the General Conference, and for publishing the Minutes. We have already forwarded the amount for foreign missions to Nashville, and that for Christian education to Grenada. Take up your collections early in the year, brethren. Talk with your official and other leading members and get them interested in the matter and committed to help by liberal responses, and so give you a good spring, and on the first night or day thereafter, when you have a good congregation, take up your collections. Ask for the whole amount; go before your congregation hopefully; hold up your head; present each item plainly and briefly; keep in a good humor, and hold on perseveringly until some good brother shall pay you the last few dollars to get rid of you."

—Rev. J. G. Sibley writes: "I am glad and thankful to say that my health is improving. If it continues to improve another month as rapidly as it has been for the past week, I believe I shall be able to do some work. And, oh! how anxious I am to return to that labor of love—preaching the blessed gospel of peace. I want to say to my brethren and friends that I do most profoundly appreciate the interest you have manifested in me. I am very thankful, indeed, for the many kind letters and the material aid that have been sent me. May God's richest blessings abide with you all! And though I have been idle now for a month, not being able, till very recently, to read my usual daily Scripture lesson, I am happy to say the witnessing Spirit still abides with me. My love for Jesus and the lost is not abated, and my purpose abides the same. I am not vexed at my affliction, for plainly and unmistakably do I see in it the hand of God. Pray for me, dear brethren, that I may soon regain my health."

—Rev. R. W. Tucker writes: "We are getting along nicely on the East Baton Rouge charge. It is a compact and well-arranged circuit; a kind, intelligent and appreciative people, who look well to the support of their preacher. We have six Sabbath-schools and about as many weekly prayer meetings. The attendance at public worship is large, while the attention is good. I think God was in my appointment to this work, for which I thank him and take courage. I expect to make a good report at Conference this fall. I have commenced work for the ADVOCATE, having some success."

—Rev. J. J. Levett writes from Satartia, Miss.: "We are doing a good work here. The collections ordered by the Conference are nearly all secured. The ladies of Satartia raised $500 and bought a parsonage in town, which is worth about $800, and we are well quartered in it. The people are intelligent, kind and appreciative. Many nice things find their way to the parsonage daily. Pray for us, Doctor, that, with all other things, we may have a sweeping revival."

—Rev. W. W. Hopper writes from Jackson, Miss.: "We closed a meeting at our church in West Jackson on Sunday night, April 28, of twenty-two days' duration. There were twenty-four accessions to the church, and quite a number converted and restored. I am unable to say how many. The Lord is keeping the count. The ministerial help consisted of Bishop Galloway, Dr. Black, Bros. Little, L. S. Jones, N. B. Harmon, and myself. We have a live, working church in West Jackson: big Sunday-school, prayer meeting, class meeting, ladies' aid society, Board of Stewards, neat house of worship, and a band of consecrated workers. Praise the Lord, we are on the up grade, and looking up higher. Bishop Galloway will dedicate our church the third Sabbath in May."

—Rev. J. E. Buck writes from Rome, Miss.: "We are moving on quietly. From the present indications a glorious time is just ahead. An interesting Sunday-school in every congregation; congregations large and attention good. God bless the Kosciusko circuit with a sweeping revival this year! We are praying and working for it."

Three Reasonable Requests.

1. Let every subscriber carefully read this issue of the ADVOCATE, and then show the paper to some neighbor who does not take it, and ask him to subscribe.

2. Let every minister arrange for a complete canvass of his circuit, so that every family of every Methodist congregation may have the paper offered to them. Where the minister can not do this personally, let him appoint some suitable person to do it.

3. Let the benefit and duty of subscribing for our church paper be mentioned in every congregation, and all reasonable efforts put forth to obtain new subscribers, and secure the renewal of old ones.

"How do you do, little boy?" "Got a cold in my head." "O, I guess not. What makes you think so, little boy?" "'Cause my eyes leak and my nose don't go!"

"I spend $5,000 a week in advertising, and pay a skillful man—a former newspaper editor, and a good one—$1,000 a month to do it for me. I make money by it. Advertising is the leverage with which this store has been raised up. I do not see how any large and successful retail business can be done without liberal advertising. Continuous advertising, like continuous work, is the most effective."—John Wanamaker.

Next to your subscription the greatest favor you can extend the ADVOCATE, in a business point, is to mention the paper in writing to advertisers.

THE CHILD'S PRAYER.

Into her chamber went
A little girl, one day,
And by her chair she knelt,
And thus began to pray:
"Jesus, my eyes I close—
Thy form I can not see;
If thou art near me, Lord,
I pray thee speak to me."
A still small voice she heard within her soul—
"What is it, child? I hear thee; tell the whole."

"I pray thee, Lord," she said,
"That thou wilt condescend
To tarry in my heart,
And ever be my friend.
The path of life is dark—
I would not go astray;
Oh, let me have thy hand
To lead me in the way."
"Fear not! I will not leave thee, child, alone."
She thought she felt a soft hand press her own.

"They tell me, Lord, that all
The living pass away;
The aged soon must die,
And even children may.
Oh, let my parents live
Till I a woman grow.
For, if they die, what can
A little orphan do?"
"Fear not, my child! Whatever ill may come,
I'll not forsake thee till I bring thee home."

Her little prayer was said,
And from her chamber now
She passed forth with the light
Of heaven upon her brow,
"Mother, I've seen the Lord!
His hand in mine I've felt—
And oh, I heard him say,
"Fear not, my child! Whatever ill may come,
I'll not forsake thee till I bring thee home."

The Bewitched Hen.

In the first quarter of this century a party of travelers was journeying down the Missouri on a flatboat. The river was covered with floating ice, and provisions were scarce, but the men were young, possessed of much more wit than money, and able to extract plenty of fun out of the danger and privation.

One evening two of them, a school-teacher and a Frenchman, whose occupation nobody could discover, went ashore to buy provisions at a farm-house. The teacher offered half a dollar to the farmer's wife for a motherly old hen that was scratching about the yard. She refused with a torrent of abuse.

His comrade, who was lounging over the gate, whispered, "Offer another bit."

"Five bits!" said the teacher.

The woman hesitated, when, to her amazement, the hen squeaked out:

"I'm not worth it! I'm four years old! I'm not worth it!"

The teacher started back in dismay; the farmer's wife, regaining her courage, chased the hen, and caught it up in her arms.

"Take two bits! It's all I'm worth!" it said, flapping wildly in her arms.

She ran, pale with terror, to the Frenchman, and put it in his hands, screaming out: "Take it away! It's bewitched!"

The young men threw the money back to her, and carried off the hen.

Many years afterward, among the crowd in the east room of the White House which attended one of the receptions of President Fillmore, was the kindly old Signor Blitz, well known to all the children of the Eastern States as a ventriloquist. When he was introduced to the President, the two men looked at each other a moment, and then burst into a laugh.

"You never thought to see me here," said Mr. Fillmore. "Now, for the first time, I understand the mystery of the old hen!"—Youth's Companion.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little boy ten years old. As I have seen so many letters from the little cousins in your valuable paper, I thought I would write one. I like to read your paper, especially the little cousins' letters. I go to Sunday-school nearly every Sunday. Our class learn a hymn to recite at Sunday-school to our teacher. I go to day-school, too, and study histories of United States, England and Louisiana, geography, grammar, philosophy, arithmetic and dictionary. I will ask a question: In what verse of the book of Ezra are all the letters of the alphabet except "j" found? As this is my first letter, I hope it will not reach the waste-basket. I will close with best wishes to you and all of the little cousins.

Your little friend,

JAMES E. HENDERSON.

KEITHVILLE, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: You kindly published two letters for me about three years since. I also sent another, which never appeared in your columns. You know its fate. My motto shall ever be, "Try, try again," etc.; and, perhaps, I may get in this time. Brother and I are enjoying a visit from our cousin, Flossie Fox. After we learn and say our lessons to mother, get our Sunday-school lessons and questions our good pastor, Bro. Harmon, gives us at each appointment, we are free and have our own fun. Please tell Vena Powers the word "which" is found seventy-five times in Luke iii, from the twenty-fourth to the thirty-eighth verse instead of to the twenty-eighth verse, as published in this week's issue. Will the little cousins please tell me what king had eighty-eight children? Mr. Editor, remember my motto, and reward me this time, and I will feel wonderfully encouraged. Wishing our ADVOCATE much success, I am,

Your little friend,

T. G. BRABSTON.

HOVINA, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl fourteen years old. I am going to school and love my teacher dearly. Her name is Miss Delia Gunby. We have a very nice garden and over a hundred little chickens. Mr. Editor, I wish you could be with us to eat fried chicken. It would be so nice. We also have two pet pigs. They are very dear little pets to me. We have no Sunday-school now; but I wish we did have. I enjoy going so much. I think little girls and boys that attend Sunday-school ought to be very happy indeed. I have three brothers and three sisters. I love them all very dearly. My father and mother are both living. I appreciate them very much. Mr. Editor, as this is my first letter to the dear ADVOCATE, I hope it will not fall into the waste-basket. I will ask a Bible question: Where does the word "wealth" first appear in the Bible? What book, chapter and verse?

LULA HENRY.

DOWNSVILLE, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: I have been thinking for some time of writing to your good paper, but have put it off from time to time. I am a little girl seven years old. I go to Sunday-school nearly every Sunday. Cousin Florence Smith is my teacher. Mr. Henry Stout is our superintendent. We all like him very much. Rev. W. T. Jones is our preacher. We all are very much pleased with him. I go to school every day when the weather is good. My teacher's name is Miss Laura Blackwell. We all love her. My studies are grammar, geography, arithmetic, third reader, spelling and writing. I hope to see this in print.

From your little friend,

SARAH B. FERGUSON.

VICKSBURG, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl twelve years old. A letter from me may be a surprise to you, but papa takes the dear ADVOCATE, and I like to read the little cousins' letters so much. I have a good papa and mamma. I have four brothers and one little baby sister. I don't go to school now. I am staying at home to help mamma. Bro. Collier is our preacher this year. For fear this will go into the waste-basket, I will close by asking the little folks a question: What king is mentioned in the Bible as having an iron bedstead?

Your little friend,

ADDIE BATT.

DOWNSVILLE, Louisiana.

MR. C. W. POLLY, of Horlsuff, Mich., pays Peruna a very high compliment. His wife suffered with Heart Trouble and General Debility. Seeing Pe-ru-na advertised as a remedy for these, he sent for it. He now writes: "It is really what it was said to be."

Willie Perkins, a blind boy of Owensboro, Ky., has invented a writing-machine for the blind, by which the ordinary characters used in writing by persons who have lost their sight can be produced as readily as the letters upon a type writer. The invention is extremely simple, being on the type-writing prineiple.

Household.

If you are the head of the household or mistress of the house, read carefully these clippings from the Congregationalist:

The young husband who exclaimed, half in jest and half in earnest, "If we only had a few less curtains and a few more comforts!" struck the key-note of unhappiness in many a home. It is on the basis of what others expect of us, instead of what will really contribute most to the enjoyment of the family, that we furnish our houses, and spread our tables, and clothe our children, and entertain our friends. This clouds our vision as to the relative value of things. We forget that a woman of sunny temper and unruffled nerves, presiding over a table of the plainest fare, gives a charm to the meal which the most delicate viands and the costliest china can not furnish if they be provided at the expense of worry and fatigue on the part of a nervous, overtaxed mistress. Contentment, repose, cheerfulness, freedom from petty anxieties—these are some of the essential elements in a happy home. Let us beware of sacrificing them to artificial standards as to dress and equipage.

Is there not danger, asks a mother, in these days when school examinations, piano and drawing lessons, painting and fancy work, absorb the attention of young people, lest other important interests be overlooked? Among these are the children's birthdays, which, she urges, ought to be commemorated in a way to make them among the pleasantest memories of life. If the child's tastes be kept simple, as they should be, he is just as well pleased with an unpretending entertainment for a few friends, as with an elaborate one for many. Extravagance is not a child's idea of enjoyment. Let the invitations be given out for an early hour and for a specified time. The guests will then have no awkwardness about the proper hour for leaving, and time will still be left, before retiring, for a special talk with the child whose birthday is being observed. This opportunity for impressing moral and religious truths, especially in the early years of childhood, is one that parents can not afford to slight. Let the boys and girls understand that they are expected to begin a new career in character as well as in age and bodily stature.

TURPENTINE.—After a housekeeper fully realizes the worth of turpentine in the household, she is never willing to be without a supply of it. It gives quick relief to burns; it is an excellent application for corns; it is good for rheumatism and sore throats, and it is the quickest remedy for convulsions or fits. Then it is a sure preventive against moths; by just dropping a trifle in the bottom of drawers, chests and cupboards, it will render the garments secure from injury during the summer. It will keep ants and bugs from closets and storerooms, by putting a few drops in the corners and upon the shelves: it is a sure destruction to bedbugs, and will effectually drive them away from their haunts, if thoroughly applied to the joints of the bedstead in the spring-cleaning time; and injures neither furniture nor clothing. A spoonful of it added to a pail of warm water is excellent for cleaning paint. A little in the suds on washing day lightens laundry labor.

Is it not possible to re-establish the home partly on its old basis, partly on the new? By simpler living, simpler dressing, a more equal division of the interests without with the interests within, a more sensible training of the girls, aye, and the boys, too, in requiring the daily performance of certain light household duties. This, while it lightens the labors of the often severely taxed one or two servants, makes the later young man or woman practically independent of the insolent presumption of the kitchen goddess when aware of the helpless ignorance of a timid mistress, or of the non-interference of an easy master to whom the resources of club or hotel are readily accessible when the domestic machinery moves unsteadily. How many men and women pledged to love and cherish each other have drifted apart through lack of just such training.—The Home Maker.

Sufferers

FROM Stomach and Liver derangements—Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Sick-Headache, and Constipation—find a safe and certain relief in Ayer's Pills. In all cases where a cathartic is needed, these Pills are recommended by leading physicians.

Dr. T. E. Hastings, of Baltimore, says: "Ayer's Pills are the best cathartic and aperient within the reach of my profession."

Dr. John W. Brown, of Occana, W. Va., writes: "I have prescribed Ayer's Pills in my practice, and find them excellent. I urge their general use in families."

"For a number of years I was afflicted with biliousness which almost destroyed my health. I tried various remedies, but nothing afforded me any relief until I began to take Ayer's Pills."—G. S. Wunderlich, Scranton, Pa.

"I have used Ayer's Pills for the past thirty years, and am satisfied I should not be alive to-day if it had not been for them. They cured me of dyspepsia when all other remedies failed, and their occasional use has kept me in a healthy condition ever since."—T. P. Brown, Chester, Pa.

"Having been subject, for years, to constipation, without being able to find much relief, I at last tried Ayer's Pills, and deem it both a duty and a pleasure to testify that I have derived great benefit from their use. For over two years past I have taken one of these Pills every night before retiring. I would not willingly be without them."—G. W. Bowman, 26 East Main st., Carlisle, Pa.

"Ayer's Pills have been used in my family upwards of twenty years, and have completely verified all that is claimed for them. In attacks of piles, from which I suffered many years, they afforded me greater relief than any medicine I ever tried."—Thomas P. Adams, Holly Springs, Texas.

McDANIEL.—MARY L., daughter of Rev. N. R. and Margrete Bramlett, was born in South Carolina, July 7, 1837; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Wesley Chapel, in Chickasaw county, Miss., when about sixteen years old; was happily married to Josiah McDaniel, February 1, 1855, and died, April 24, 1889. The present and former pastors of Buena Vista circuit, alone, can fully appreciate the great loss which the church has sustained in the death of this devoted handmaid of the Lord. Entirely unobtrusive, and utterly devoid of ostentation, the Christian graces shone with unmistakable brilliancy. There was nothing complex nor enigmatical in her beautifully moulded character. Her loyalty to God and her fealty and love for the church deeply impressed all under the influence of her associations. She was the good Samaritan of the neighborhood in which she lived, and is now held in gratified remembrance by her many acquaintances. A large concourse of sorrowing friends attended her funeral at Friendship, where we buried the earthly tabernacle to await the archangel's trump and the resurrection unto life.

Sorrowing husband and children: I know thine heart is sorely grieved, the home is dreary and desolate, the daughter whom she gave to the itinerancy was denied the dying benediction of a mother's love; but severed ones shall meet again, in nearer, dearer relationship.

HOLLIDAY—Mrs. MARGARET J. HOLLIDAY was born Nov. 18, 1833, and was married to Frances B. Merett, September 2, 1856, and departed this life, April 24, 1889, in perfect peace with God and all mankind, at her home near Sunny Hill, La. She leaves a true and noble husband, and sons and daughters, with grandchildren, that blessed their union, to mourn her death. She was a faithful wife and an affectionate and indulgent mother. Her last illness was long and painful, and she felt that it was unto death. Through all this suffering her submission was unswerved, and her cheerfulness a subject of remark and a source of consolation to her loved ones and friends, to whom she repeatedly stated that she had no fears of death, that all was bright, and that she was ready for the summons. Yea, in the midst of the shadow of death our sister was more than conqueror through him that loved her and gave himself for her. She told the doctor that she was happy, called her children and friends to her bedside and asked them to meet her in heaven. The writer preached her funeral at the graveyard near Sunny Hill, La., to a large assembly. Text, John xiv, 1-3. J. H. EVANS.

TALLEY—At West Pearl, St. Tammany parish, La., on Monday, April 22, 1889, at 4:10 A. M., Bro. ENOCH TALLEY, aged seventy-eight years, seven months and five days.

Death, as a general thing, is a time of mourning; but when we see an aged servant in Christ, who for more than forty years has been a faithful and practical believer in and on the Lord Jesus Christ, drawing near his end, waiting patiently for his crown, we can not, should not, weep; for this is not death, but the beginning of life. Such was Bro. Talley. He had lived to see his children become followers of the meek and lowly Jesus, and almost his last words were: "I am waiting for my crown, for I know there's one for me." His death, as his life, was peaceful, and, without a struggle, he fell asleep in Jesus. He was buried in the old family burying ground, by the side of his faithful wife, who preceded him some eighteen years ago. L. W. WOOD.

COWART—On October 23, 1888, near Howell, Miss., there passed from earth to heaven the spirit of my precious mother, Mrs. NANCY H. COWART. She was born January 8, 8, 1819, and was married, September 20, 1838, to James G. Cowart, deceased. With declining years her health gradually failed and for several months she was confined to a bed of suffering. In early years she joined the Methodist Church, and through a long life, in her own quiet, unassuming way, served the Master faithfully. She was a woman of prayer and faith, and thus she was given grace to bear, patiently, many afflictions. She bore her sufferings with that fortitude and meekness which only a true Christian can; was perfectly resigned to the will of God, and anxiously waited "the summons to welcome her home." How sad and lonely the days are without her! and how inexpressibly sad the thought that we will never have her gentle, thoughtful, helpful presence with us again! Her tender compassion and sympathy made her many friends, and to her children the memory of her character and life is an inspiration, and she "being dead, yet speaketh."

MANGUM—PAGE A. MANGUM, son of William E. and Mary E. Mangum, was born in Smith county, Miss., July 5, 1855; died very suddenly, February 2, 1889, in his thirty-fifth year; was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in a revival meeting held by this writer, August, 1872. In consequence of his father and mother joining the Lutheran Church in 1873, he also became a Lutheran, remaining a faithful and consistent member of said church up to his death. He was married to Clara May Sibley, in Trenton, Miss., October, 1876. He leaves a widow, six small children, father, mother, brothers and sisters, with many friends, to mourn their loss. He was a devoted husband, kind father, good neighbor, a useful church member, good citizen, useful in his community. But he is gone, and can not come to us again; but we can go to his glorious beyond "over there." Adieu, dear son, husband, father, for awhile. We'll meet again.

R. A. SIBLEY.

PATTERSON—CATHARINE R., daughter of Archibald and Mary Patterson, was born in Elizabethtown, N. C., September 28, 1810, and died, at the residence of her niece, Mrs. J. V. Dodd, April 13, 1889. Having been reared by pious parents, she was early impressed with the necessity of salvation through Christ. At the age of twelve years she professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, under the ministry of of William B. Morse. Her studious habits in early life resulted in a well-developed intellect which eminently fitted her for a position of usefulness in the most refined society. She delighted in Sabbath-schools and mission work, and, until prevented by the infirmities of age, was a busy worker. She has left a large number of friends to mourn her loss. But we sorrow not as those who have no hope.

HER SISTER.

Alabama Advocate please copy.

STRAIN—At Claiborne station, near Covington, La., February 27, 1889, at 7:30 A. M., Sister SARAH E. LUCAS, wife of Bro. Zach. Strain, aged forty-two years.

Sister Strain was an earnest, zealous, consistent Christian, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and, until prevented by her long and painful illness, was a loved and efficient teacher in the Sabbath-school. When the summons came she was prepared to meet her God; and her soul winged its way to the land of eternal rest. Her funeral took place from the Covington Methodist Episcopal Church, and the large concourse of sorrowing relatives and friends which followed her body to its last resting-place testified to the high place which she held in the affections of all. L. W. W.

Surely, there is unequaled recommendation of piety in the proper exhibition of piety. This moral loveliness is the strongest attraction to virtue and religion that this world affords. It was this beauty of holiness which enabled the primitive church to so fully realize the prophetic description. "Who is she that looketh forth as the morning, fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners." And this moral beauty is still potent in the church, attracting multitudes to its privileges, and leading them to honor its ordinances. Herein is the secret of its influence upon numerous hearts. Let the church increasingly cultivate this attractiveness, putting on its beautiful garments, and it will not only silence and confound its foes, but mightily grow in numbers, power and effectiveness, until it becomes "an eternal excellency, a joy of many generations."

A Proxy.

In our more exacting moods, when anything is presented for personal investigation we seem to expect our neighbors to try it first: and are willing to trust to the effect the trial has upon them. Gaining experience by proxy, this is, safe and selfish, but it often answers.

Since you demand a proxy, observe please, the subjoined testimony of a neighbor in regard to Drs. Starkey & Palen's treatment by inhalation.

"I hardly dare tell you how wonderfully I have been blessed this fall and winter, thus far, and how much I have been enabled to perform through God's blessing, attending the use of Compound Oxygen. I surprise myself almost every day in the amount of labor I perform in comparison to last summer; it seems almost a miracle to me. I have exceeded all my hopes of one year ago. I remain your grateful patient," MRS. LYDIA B. CHACE.

We publish a brochure of 200 pages, regarding the effect of Compound Oxygen on invalids suffering from consumption, asthma, bronchitis, dyspepsia, catarrh, hay fever, headache, debility, rheumatism, neuralgia; all chronic and nervous disorders. Who Made Alcohol.

It is a surprising fact that many men of brains and general intelligence are as hopelessly ignorant of everything connected with the controversy between sobriety and drunkenness, between virtue and vice, as are the Indians of the desert.

Quite recently a well-informed, genial, worthy editor, a teacher and reader of his fellow-men, said he used wine and beer and all the good things that God had made and given us for our food and drink. And he insisted most positively to the last, that God had put alcohol into every grain and fruit and everything that contains cellulose, so that it can be extracted from even a dry old fence pole.

If that were true—if the Creator had done this—had made our grains and fruits and vegetables part alcohol—if he had put four gallons of whisky into every bushel of corn or wheat or rye—there would be no room for argument, and we ought to go to bed every night devoutly drunk.

Our friend, well posted in general information, did not know as our Band of Hope children know, that not a drop of alcohol ever existed in any of the works or products of the Creator, nor was ever produced save by man's art and the total destruction of some article of food of man or beast—by its corruption and decay, arrested at a point where the elements of the sugar in the article employed, have been separated and have combined in new forms and produced two of the most deadly poisons known—alcohol and carbonic acid gas.

Were fermentation not stopped then by art the alcohol, which is now beer, would rapidly become vinegar, and if not then interfered with would result finally in clear water, the other substances having escaped in gases or become a sediment at the bottom of the water.

The whole system of fermentation is one of death and corruption, decay, putrescence after death. It is the same death and decay which happens to fish and flesh and fowl—the return of the created thing to the elements of dust from which it was made.

The grain and fruits from whose dead, useless, rotting remains alcohol is produced are, in their natural state, until subjected by wicked men to a diabolical chemical process, the choicest blessings and comforts and sustenance of mankind. If left to decay as nature allows them to, they would never have generated a drop of alcohol.—Censor.

SCIENCE AND FACT.—In these days, science, or what passes for it, is very apt to appropriate to itself the designation of "exact," and to contemptuously assign to Christianity a very large portion of the domain of fiction—a domain for which science has no use whatever. Its professed masters are not conspicuous for their blushes, and their claim of infallibility is not abated when the "facts" established by one generation of "scientists" are declared by another to be fables. For nearly a century science has claimed, and has furnished innumerable tables of figures to prove, that vaccination is a sure protection against smallpox. But now comes a scientist of the present day, Dr. Creighton, in the New Edinburgh Cyclopædia, who claims to prove by figures that the century-old fact of scientists is one of the delusions of the nineteenth century! Perhaps, after all, Christianity may have a broader basis of solid fact than science. It certainly need not be afraid to ask science, before condemning Christianity, to agree in answering Pilate's question, a little modified, What is scientific truth?—Evangelist.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Colored men from different parts of the country are discussing the question of holding a conference in Washington in the fall to consider matters of interest to the race and the political situation in particular.

There have already been certified to the clerk of the House sixteen contested election cases, all except three being from the South. The three exceptod are from Indiana, Connecticut and Maryland.

The Bellaire Goblet Works at Findlay, Ohio, burned to the ground on May 9. The loss will foot up $155,000; insured for $65,000. Three hundred men are thrown out of employment. The works were the largest of tho kind in the world.

St. Joseph's Polish Cathulic Church, Milwaukee, Wis, was destroyed hy fire on May 12. The church was ono of the largest in the city, and was erected only last summer. The loss is between $30.000 and $40,000.

The eleventh annual exhibition of the Society of American Artists was opened on May 13, at the Fifth Avenue Art Galleries, New York. It will remain open until June 15.

A speoial from Terre Hauto, Ind., says: The oil excitement here increases. The flow shows no diminishment. There are demands for contractors who can sink wells. Many local companies are being formed. The oil is a high grade of lubricating.

In a riot between the races in Gretna, La., on May 11 and 12, several negroes were killed. Several houses, among them a church, occupied by the negroes, were burned.

The famous Gaines case has been decided at last in the United States Supreme Court. Judgment was rendered against the city of New Orleans for $576,000. The previous verdict of $1,300,000 is not concurred in.

The United States Supremo Court, on May 13, affirmed the validity of tho Chinese Exclusion Act. It holds that Congress has the power to abrogate a treaty, and in support of that view cites the authorities of the courts on the subject, holding that the propriety of such action is not a matter for judicial cognizance, but that it is a matter for the political department. Congress, it says, has the power to exclude aliens from the country when their presence is deemed inimical to our interests.

FOREIGN.

The Paris Liberte advises President Carnot to signalize the centenary of the revolution hy repealing the exile laws and granting a general amnesty. Such an act, it says, would prove the strength of France, and show that she does not fear her enemies, and it would also tend to destroy Boulangism.

In response to the message of the Committee on Invitation of the Texas Spring Palace at Fort Worth, President Diaz of Mexico has requested the Mexican Congress to pass an act enabling him to accept the invitation and visit Fort Worth during the exhibition.

In accordance with a royal decree, the fortieth anniversary of the accession of King William III. to the throne of Holland will be celebrated on May 23. Grand fetes are being arranged for the occasion.

It is stated that the Samoan Conference will decide that a foreign adviser to the Samoan king shall be appointed yearly to represent in rotation the countries interested.

There is much dissatisfaction among the operatives in the lace factories at Nottingham, and a general strike is impending.

The miners' strike in Germany is assuming great dimensions, there being fresh accessions of strikers every day. It is now estimated that there are 100,000 hands out of work throughout the Rhenish Westphalia district.

In an interview General Boulanger said that if the French government intended to prolong the sitting of the Chamber of Deputies until next year its action would be equivalent to a coup d' etat against universal suffrage, and it would be the duty of every citizen to rise in opposition.

The Samoan Conference held a sitting on May 11. In their report the committee on the government of Samoa agreed upon a constitutional council composed of native chiefs elected by the natives, the council to be dominated by a ministry, in which each treaty power shall have one representative.

The Temps says the Cabinet has decided to submit to Parliament its new scheme in aid of the Panama Canal Company.

Walter T. Griffin, commercial agent at Limoges, calls attention to the fact that France stands second to the United States as a wheat growing country. France being discouraged with the vine, is turning more and more attention to the production of her own food supply.

A number of English and American visitors to the Paris Exposition held a meeting on May 12, and resolved to ask the exhibitors at the exhibition to relieve their attendants from duty on Sundays.

The police of London made a raid on the gambling clubs in that city on May 12, and arrested all the players, among whom were English, French and Belgian noblemen.

A conspiracy has been discovered among the military officers stationed in St. Petersburg. A large number of the conspirators have been arrested. In their possession were found papers which proved that they intended to make an attempt to assassinate the Czar. A number of bombs were also found.

If Sufferers from Consumption,
Scrofula, Bronchitis, and General Debility will try Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites, they will find immediate relief and permanent benefit. The Medical Profession universally declare it a remedy of the greatest value and very palatable. Read: "I have used Scott's Emulsion in several cases of Scrofula and Debility in children. Results most gratifying. My little patients take it with pleasure."—W. A. HULBERT, M. D., Salisbury, Ill.

UNDER THE THAMES BY ELECTRICITY.—All kinds of locomotion have been tried in London, but in the course of the next six weeks a novel method of traveling will be introduced to the public. A person living in South London will be able to take a ticket near the Monument for his home in Kennington or Stockwell. He will be lowered down to a subterranean station and be taken in a tram car under the Thames to his destination. The tram-line will be worked by electricity, and the time occupied in conveying him to Kennington Oval—a distance of over two miles—will be ten minutes.—St. James' Gazette.

New York State had, in 1886, savings banks deposits amounting to $469,622,000; while all the savings banks deposits of England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales represented only $436,000,000, or $33,000,000 less than the single State of New York. The laborers of New York, for that year, who almost wholly represent the depositors in savings banks, numbered 1,844,000; while those of Great Britain numbered 15,181,000.

To mail flower buds, cut a potato into two pieces and bore holes into them, and insert the stems of the buds with cotton to support them. There is a sufficient moisture in a good-sized potato to support a flower for two weeks in a moderately cool temperature. Flowers from bouquets or baskets may be preserved in the same way. The potatoes can be hidden by leaves or moss.

The increase of paper circulation during the month of March, mainly silver certificates, was $2,275,280, and the decrease of coin and bullion was $368,059. The total circulation April 1 is stated at $1,406,481,676, and the total cash and bullion in the Treasury at the same date was $857,815,286.

Captain Platt, of the United States Fish Commission steamer, at Charlotte Harbor, Florida, has successfully hatched 3,500,000 eggs of sheepshead. This is said to be the first successful hatching of that important food fish.

Carriage manufacturers are predicting that in the not distant future wooden wheels will be done away with, and steel wheels substituted on account of the increasing scarcity of lumber for wheels.

The clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policy-holders.
The Episcopal Diocese of New York has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and The Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,600,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.
A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

CHEAPEST FURNITURE HOUSE IN NEW ORLEANS.—This is the heading of the advertisement of Mr. J. G. Grant's, 50 and 52 Baronne street, New Orleans. Now, we would suggest to our readers to peruse it carefully, and they will be astonished at the low prices which Mr. Grant is selling furniture for. As this gentleman is thoroughly reliable, and guarantees the smallest article that leaves his store, we feel satisfied that those who may try him once will have further dealings with him. There is no store of this character in the South that keeps a larger or finer assortment than his, and as his expenses are less than others in the same line, he has informed us that he can sell lower. Try him.—N. O. Weekly Picayune, January 24.

McTyeire Memorial Service.

ermon preached by Bishop KEENER in the pel of Vanderbilt University, May 5, 1889, in ry of Bishop HOLLAND N. MCTYEIRE.]

e last time I preached in this pel was upon that memorable occa-, the funeral of Dr. T. O. Summers. as during the session of the Gen- Conference in this city. What an trions throng then filled this house! that noble company taking part in services but few remain. The ngement for the hour was: "Bishop Tyeire will receive the corpse; Dr. M. Shipp will read the Psalm; Dr. R. Bine, of Alabama, will read the stle; Dr. J. S. Martin, of Baltimore, read the 678th hymn; Bishop snaugh will read the prayer; hop Keener will deliver the memo- sermon; Bishop Pierce will read 716th hymn; Dr. J. B. McFerrin Dr. D. C. Kelley will read the ke at the grave." Those of us survive and are present could rely receive a more impressive re- der of our mortality than is this. He that is the first on it is first our thoughts to-day—the principal on in every group, and the princi- hearer in every audience of this ersity during all its history. And s difficult, even to-day, to realize he is not in this hall. It is at his uest that I find myself performing se offices of respect and love, which ld always thought he would do for

But we all stand at this moment the halo of a divine hope; and if we ow, it will be only as the tears of Savior when about to revive his nd.

he text to which we call your erful attention will be found in Paul's Epistle to the Hebrews, ter xii., verses 22, 23: "But ye are e unto mount Zion, and unto the city the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, to an innumerable company of angels, the general assembly and church of the -born, which are written in heaven." his passage is the summary of a k which is itself a summary of the w Testament, written by St. Paul at ne, about the end of his career as an stle of the Lord Jesus Christ. It is of those bursts of inspiration oc- ring in nearly every one of his stles, when his soul is at white t under the breath of the Spirit, in ich he has thrown open by a single vement the gate that leads to the of God, and through it guides the ch into the citadel of glory, thence the presence-chamber and throne of , and introduces her to "the Judge ll," and to Jesus, the Mediator of new covenant.

he wealth of this entire passage is great for the discourse of an hour, we take from it only so much as enrich our thoughts and enable us ontemplate those noble spirits who e but just passed on, and have al- ly become one with the illustrious pany enrolled in heaven.

The church of the Son as compared the church in the wilderness. The kground which the Holy Spirit e gives to Mount Zion is that mag- ent event in the Old Testament pensation, the giving of the law on l. For forty days the divine Pres- rested on the top of the mount, held in its folds of amber and flame law giver, who was in awful con- with Jehovah, and received from "by the disposition of angels" the syllables of God for the guidance of the nations. It would seem to have been at too great a remove of time to be brought forward at the conclusion of the New Testament. But its blackness, its cloud, its terrors, its trumpet, its voice, its words, were the inheritance of the church for ages, and hung over the fortunes of humanity as the most intelligible expression of the divine mind, searching the consciences of men as the sword of God. It was in itself "a ministration of condemnation" and death. To displace it by "a ministration of righteousness" of surpassing, unveiled, abiding, transforming glory, was the sublime end of the dispensation of the Son. At no point of their history could the two dispensations so enhance and explain each other as at that presented in this passage: "At Sinai men drew near only to shrink back. Now Christians draw near, not to the desert mountain, but to the city of the living God—'the perfection of beauty.'"

Here they meet ten thousand angels, not in war chariots, circling the mount with scythe-like flames, but in festal union, "who had mournfully watched over Israel's latest history;" now they hold "joyous festival, celebrating the victory of divine love achieved by him at whose birth they had sung, whose ascension they had gazed on with admiring wonder, whose redeeming work they study with deepest reverence. Now their names are enrolled—not as at the base of the mount, after any human pedigree—but as heirs of heaven. Now they are judged by the God of all, their spirits are justified, made perfect, through a covenant not mediated by man merely, and broken by him before it was confirmed, but by the divine Savior himself, who ratified it with his own atoning blood, whose pleadings could be heard far back and down the ages quieting the consciences of the guilty. Seeing, then, that we receive such a kingdom, which can not be shaken, let us stand firm, and not fall back from the grace of God."

II. This kingdom is the church of the Son—"the first-born of every creature." The Word, by whom God has in these last days spoken to us, the Son and heir of all things, by whom the worlds were made, being irrespective of time, in his essential nature, the brightness of the eternal glory, the exact image of his person, bearing along all things in their courses by the power of his word; who, when he had by himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high. "Sit thou at my right hand until I make thine enemies thy footstool. .... Thou hast loved righteousness and hated iniquity; therefore God, thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows." Such language could not be spoken of angels. They are commanded to "worship him" when he bringeth in the first-begotten into the world.

We are not surprised, therefore, that the church of God should find in the Son its corner-stone, its beginning, its center, its cap-stone; nor that it should spring from him, be predestinated of him, and be bought by him, or that its name should inhere in his name.

"The first man is of the earth, earthy; the second man is the Lord from heaven: as is the earthy, such are they also that are earthy; and as is the heavenly, such are they also that are heavenly." It was the introduction of this "Lord from heaven" into the tribes of earth that constituted the one great event in the flow of humanity. It was the beginning of a new race from a fresh source. Henceforth the tides of life were to flow from a higher point of being. A divine nature was to be let into the generations of man by the power of the Holy Ghost—the uncreated Son of God to be welded amid the fires of the Godhead in eternal unity with the Son of man—God and man in the eternal person of one Christ.

This is that "grace of God" which began the correction of "sin." He came by no law of descent, but is "the gift of God"—"the only begotten Son which is in the bosom of the Father, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth."

This is the "one man" by whom righteousness was to abound, many sins and many sinners to be forgiven; by whom there was to be a reign of life as all-controlling and as universal as had been the reign of sin, and a reign of grace through righteousness unto eternal life "by Jesus Christ our Lord."

It is this manhood of the Son of man that was used to glorify God in the passages of death. It showed forth the holiness of God by honoring the demands of his law against the sinner. It drained the cup which the Father gave the Son. In that hour of desolation, in that solitary agony of the mysterious Sufferer, there could be seen the fearful nature of sin, when for the while it threw its eclipse over the fortunes of the Son, and its shadow passed over heaven. Then was declared the utmost terrors of a soul abandoned of God, as perceived by the infinite Son, and uttered in that exceeding bitter cry: "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?"

In this deep travail, this conjoint labor, when it "pleased the Lord to bruise him, and put him to grief," the moral universe found its remedy for sin.

While the world is ready to accept the doctrine that Jesus is the Son of God, that he was the Maker of worlds, the Creator, and that in the Man of Nazareth, the divine Person who made all things, and dwelt for thirty-three years among men, it is not willing to accept the truth that he was among us as a sufferer, that "he was crucified, dead, and buried." Such a history of the divine One would, it is held, contradict all reasonable conceptions of the Godhead, and be unworthy of the Prince of Life.

But is it so? Is it not of the highest conceivable wisdom that he should suspend upon himself by a single act the whole moral universe, to show forth the integrity of his holiness and the majesty of his law in the same instant and by the same act that he provides for the law breaker the deepest sympathy and the fullest pardon? "He, by the grace of God, tasted death for every man." He by death delivers every human soul from death, yet so as to preserve intact the freedom of every man, and set before him life and death, to be determined at his own option, upon the one condition of "repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ." Surely it is worthy of him to be the Redeemer of his people, and thereby to bind to himself forever the love of every redeemed person. "For he hath made him to be sin for us who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him."

III. And yet there was a lower deep which the Son entered, and from which he emerged the Head of the church, the first-born from the dead.

When the Savior was laid in the tomb of Joseph of Arimathea, never had there fallen so deep a shadow on the fortunes of humanity. Him whom they thought held all the elements of immortal hope, of Sonship, of beauty, of divine charity, and divine wisdom, was now in the vault, cold, pallid, food for worms. The Sabbath that stretched its silence over him was now a mockery, for had he not declared himself as its Lord? What "rest" now remained for the people of God? All during the Sabbath he was in the grave; only their love for him as the noblest of earth remained.

But the morning came, and he lived. He had come out of the sepulcher, for it was not possible for death to hold him. It was a travail of the womb of death, which St. Peter said could not be arrested—the "pains" of death could end only in its "first-born."

It was a new life from the second nativity of a second Adam. It was a new nativity; from the shadow and silence of the sepulcher there springs forth eternal life in a human form, and by the same power, "the spirit of holiness," all are to be quickened. The spirit of life in Christ was henceforth to be the first fruits of the harvest of multitudinous sons and heirs of God. The power was that of a birth; mankind was "begotten again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead"—a birth with race-continuance stamped upon it, a process which was of the essence of life, producing a new and divine physiology of being. Life, having resisted and triumphed over the corrosion of the grave, having defeated the universal victor, is a new life, which, having tasted death, and having drained the chalice, lives.

Jesus Christ is in this sense the author, not of life anew, but of a new life, and is "the first-born from the dead," the head of a new line. Birth implies a tribal expression, and this birth implies a regenerative power which God the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ has given to the race—"begotten us again"—by the resurrection of Christ unto a new and living hope, which is "laid up in heaven for you." Hence he that was first-born had a vital connection with all the sons of God that should come after. "They were to be of the adoption of sons." For God did "predestinate them to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the first-born among many brethren."

He was now declared to be the Son of God with power. Now all who were dead in trespasses and sins were to be "quickened together with him, to be raised together, and made to sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus; that in ages to come he might show the exceeding riches of his grace in his kindness toward us through Christ Jesus." By this same power the church is being now created. The Spirit convicts the world of sin, and by processes of repentance and faith, that is of the operation of God, men are translated from the power of darkness into the kingdom of God's dear Son. It is by this unwasted power of his life that humanity has been lifted into the heights of the Godhead.

IV. The Church of the Son, as the first born written in heaven. It was in the last act of the drama at his last dying cry that the Son of God asserted his Sonship and dismissed his human spirit into the hands of his Father. It was then that the hope of humanity was cast within the veil. There it found a firm anchorage. In the sublime shelter of the divine bosom it found a refuge sure as the throne of God. The paternal love of God for his only begotten Son became the ultimate refuge of man. Therefore conformity to the image of the Son and the glory of the Son is the measure of our future life. "I looked, and lo, a lamb stood on Mount Zion, and with him an hundred and forty and four thousand, having his Father's name written in their foreheads, and a great multitude which no man could number, of all nations and kindred and people and tongues." This is heaven, and this is the church of the first-born enrolled in heaven.

The solitary heights to which the Son of God ascended, "that in all things he might have the pre-eminence," is the measure of "the exceeding greatness of his power to usward who believe," for the Holy Spirit will pursue all these attitudes of his ascent, and conform us to him.

In his Epistle to the Ephesians the apostle opens up the grandeur of these possibilities as a new revelation from the "Father of glory." It is "the hope of his calling," the "riches of the glory of his inheritance," as realized and displayed "in the saints," the dream of all that wealth which lies within the portals of glory. As the Son became the "first-born of every creature," and thereby gave to the creation of God a new luster; as he became the "first-born from the dead," thereby filling the universe with the power of his resurrection, so now, when he enters heaven and becomes the "first-born" in glory, he thereby constitutes it "the inheritance of the saints in light" by virtue of their unity with him. Until his entrance no man had ever passed into those highest realms sublime. It was upon the appearance of the King of glory, whom the princes of this world knew not, at the gate omnipotent, that the challenge sounded forth, "Lift up your heads, O ye gates, and the King of glory shall come in!" But neither the princes of earth nor the angels of God recognized him who was in the form of the Son of man. "Who is this King of glory?" "The Lord of hosts, he is the King of glory." His entrance brings with it by eternal right into heaven myriads of his own race who have been washed in his own blood.

It was "the working of a mighty power" by which God set him at his own right hand in the heavenly places far above all principalities, and put all things under his feet. When the Son entered heaven, and the first-born from the dead became the first-born in glory, the church of the first-born became the ultimate realization of the power of his resurrection. That everlasting life which came forth from his tomb could only find room enough for display in the heights of the Godhead and in the roll of the ages.

The waves of resurrection power followed the form of Christ into those awful altitudes far above all things. They have the same tribal force there which they had on earth, the law of race-continuance, a conforming power of vitality which conforms to the first of the line, to him who is the Head of the body—the church. All that enter those heavenly places are changed "from glory to glory," as they are united to him by a law of race-existence. They have entered into a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. They are not "unclothed," but "clothed upon." Their bodies are of the nature of light, like those of Moses and Elijah on the holy mount, and are conformed to his glory—even as by the Spirit of the Lord.

He who is "the beginning," the Head of the church, the "first-born of every creature," the "first-born from the dead," is surrounded by martyrs of whom the world was not worthy, and of whom the apostle has just spoken, and by those of the New Testament who have "come out of great tribulation, and have made their robes white in the blood of the Lamb." They have now together received "the promise." The King of glory is at the head of a line of kings, apostles, prophets, martyrs, conquerors, grander than the hoary dynasty of the Seleucidæ. This noble company, worthy to sit on thrones, have come out of deep shadows; they have "suffered with him," and his glory is now revealed in them; they are the fullness of his own expression; a glorious company of first-born sons, "heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Jesus Christ."

Among them it is not difficult to imagine those noble persons who have been our leaders, and have entered into glory. What a galaxy! "They that turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars forever and ever."

That grand military spirit at the head of the column, who in the hour of disruption chose the fortunes of the weaker party, upon whose shoulders rested the mantle of an Asbury—Joshua Soule.

And William Capers, the Chrysostom of our church, he now knows the meaning of "the voice of the bird that cries, Eternity, eternity, eternity!"

And Henry B. Bascom—great in council, and in the pulpit sublime as the trump of God. There were left none like him.

And John Early—courteous, patriotic, the soul of Virginia Methodism, who at the time of his death knew more persons in heaven from Virginia than any one in the State.

And James O. Andrew, upon whom in 1844 there centered as on a pivot the very existence of Southern Methodism. I heard, I only, the last whisper of his great spirit—my ear was close to his lips—"Victory! victory!"

And Robert Paine, whose manhood, mind, and heart were for thirty-six years the joy and strength of the episcopacy; who brought down to us intact the broad statesmanship of the wise and venerable McKendree.

And Enoch M. Marvin, whose ministry and personal friendship were as a benediction from Heaven. His memory fills the church as the precious ointment filled the house at Bethany.

And William M. Wightman, full of Wesleyan doctrine and scholarship, in speech fervid, chaste, spiritual—for fourteen years continuously he held the defenses of our Zion by the strength and polish of his pen.

And David S. Doggett, whose classic oratory was perfected by the unction of the Holy One. He is now on the Areopagus of glory talking with St. Paul.

And the dear old man of Kentucky, Hubbard H. Kavanaugh, full of rhythmic speech and heavenly rapture: "My brother, when I get to heaven, I don't expect to get down to any serious work for a thousand years."

And George F. Pierce, who was all nobility, generosity, transparency, heroism, and harmony. "I am so happy!" said he, when dying, and holding his brother's hand. The peerless son of a peerless preacher, and greater than his father.

And the beloved Linus Parker.—I knew him from his conversion, who to the ripeness of his intellect added the ingenuousness and gentleness of a Melanchthon. In the pulpit he had the finish of Atterbury, and with his pen the charm of an Addison. He, too, has struggled into the immortal Sonship.

And my dear brother and fellow-laborer, Holland N. McTyeire, whose whole life was as the bow of a strong man; strength in his pen, strength in his tongue, strength in his will; and he was strong in the integrity of his character. We had run in our lives for years in lines parallel to each other, and to this day have never been far apart. He, too, has passed over, a little in advance.

All these have I known intimately. Delightful fellowship—only less than heaven.

"My company before is gone,
And I am left alone with thee."

Texas Notes.

BY REV. R. W. WILLIAMS.

As your readers are, doubtless, aware, the Texas Chautauqua Assembly has been permanently located at Georgetown, after long and careful consideration as to the requirements of such an institution. This place is centrally located, easily accessible, surrounded by attractive scenery, has a cultured and refined people, and offers many superior advantages. About two hundred acres of ground have been secured, which is now in course of preparation. The session for 1889 will open July 2, and continue to the twentieth. An interesting programme has been arranged, and a number of good lecturers have been secured. Every effort will be made to render the occasion entertaining, instructive, and profitable.

The Southwestern University, at Georgetown, a few weeks since enjoyed a most gracious revival of religion among the students. The meeting lasted several weeks, and resulted in the salvation of many precious and immortal souls. The members of the faculty heartily co-operated with the pastor, and adjusted the order and details of the college duties, so that all who desired could attend. There were more than fifty conversions, a number of reclamations, and twenty-nine additions to our church. Thus, while the faculty labor for things temporal, they do not neglect those things which are eternal. And while the students strive for intellectual learning, they also acquire that higher and better knowledge that will make them wise unto salvation.

The State Sunday-school Convention of Texas met at Dallas, April 23, and continued in session several days. Delegates, representing the various religious denominations, were present to the number of about one hundred. Rev. Dr. Paxton, of St. Louis, and a Mr. Reynolds, of Illinois, were present, and participated in the discussions. Among the topics discussed were, preparation, home study, normal class exercises, school organization, furnishing the room, and the duty of officers and teachers to make the Sunday-school attractive. One day was spent chiefly in hearing reports and arranging for the next year's work. Pledges were taken, to the amount of $661 10, to meet contingent expenses. In the election of officers for the ensuing year, E. L. Dennis, of Houston, was chosen president, and John C. McCoy, of Dallas, vice-president.

About twenty years ago a temperance society, known as the "United Friends of Temperance," was organized in Texas. For a number of years it grew and flourished, but finally began to decline. Recently it has been somewhat revived, and is now making a forward movement. Rev. C. H. Ellis, State grand lecturer for the Order, has delivered gospel temperance lectures in many of our towns, and has organized about thirty councils since the first of January. This Order relies solely upon moral suasion for the advancement of the temperance cause. I believe that the drunkard is to be saved by moral suasion; but the saloon can be closed only by the aid of law. Hence the necessity for influencing the action of those political parties that administer the law.

The sixth Annual Convention of the Texas W. C. T. U. was held at Denison, May 1-3. The attendance was larger than had been anticipated, and much interest was manifested. Miss Willard, president of the National Union, arrived at noon the first day, and her presence during the session was a benediction to those around her. She has endeared herself to our Texas sisters by her queenly, graceful, womanly bearing. Much good was accomplished, in awakening interest, arousing enthusiasm, and imparting information concerning the aims and methods of the Order. These good sisters seem unbounded in their purposes, and are confident of the success and final triumph of their cause.

"Their faith is fixed in living laws
Which move the centuries along,
And plant the triumph of a cause
Upon the right and not the strong."

There has been much excitement concerning the Oklahoma country, and a mad rush was made to obtain lands the moment it was declared open for settlement. But, after all, it is a small territory, only about fifty miles square, and contains less than two million acres. It may not be generally known, but it is nevertheless true, according to the statement of Land Commissioner Hall, that Texas has thirty-four million acres of cheap land that will be sold to actual settlers on very liberal terms. These public lands are situated chiefly in the Panhandle, and are held in trust by the State for educational purposes. They are offered for sale in tracts of not less than 160, nor more than 640 acres, at from two dollars to three dollars per acre, on forty years' time, at five per cent. interest.

SONG OF THE ANGEL OF DEATH.

(From the German.)

BY A. W. GOULD.

The evening comes, the day has fled,
Its web the twilight weaves,
Its dusky mantle, far outspread,
Thy life in shadow leaves;
And soft the darkness gathers deep
O'er field and forest, vale and steep—
Sleep, weary mortal, sleep!

And joy and grief, those comrades known,
Their last farewell must say,
And all that thou hast called thine own
Fades into air away;
No more the toil day's pain to weep,
While kind the stars their vigil keep—
Sleep, weary mortal, sleep!

The latest glow flames in the sky
And dies in gloom away;
The waters moan, the breezes sigh;
Gone is thy life's brief day.
The floods of night around them sweep;
Rocked on its waves, in slumber deep,
Sleep, weary mortal, sleep!

Bishop McTyeire—In Memoriam.

BY BISHOP J. C. KEENER.

In estimating human character, we wait upon the last hours of men to see how they round up. The unrelenting force of a great spirit will bear it firmly to the end. "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day, and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." As he approaches the hour, his confidence rather increases; he touches his mantle that he may arrange its folds; when, in an instant, lo! the Savior has come!

Bishop McTyeire died at home in his own bed, and in his own family circle, and in his right mind. Happy privilege to the itinerant servant of God! One may live as a minister, or as a magistrate, but he dies as a man. His son held his hand, and caught the last words of the dying father. The life which had widened to take in Conferences, territories, missions—well-nigh a world—had now narrowed to the chamber where the cares and finishing touches of parental solicitude had often mingled with the breathings of a higher fellowship. It was not easy for the still vigorous mind to pass from that large outer to this innermost circle of thought. But the time had come. He must needs transfer those labors and plans which had so long rested upon his heart. "The time has come for me to let go, and let some one else take hold."

The care of God's house had become his fortune, and it was not easy to part with it. Only twenty-four hours remained, but happily the yet more momentous affairs of his own eternal being had not been neglected. The evening of this very day he was feeling out toward those vast realities into which he was so soon to be introduced. Doubtless there was a holy instinct which guided him to the means of grace the Savior had instituted upon the eve preceding his own death. With "desire" he approached the Passover, and gave the cup to his people, that ever after they might pledge him in his sorrow, and find in his death the shelter of the atonement. So the dying servant of his Lord said to the dear ones about him: "I have long desired to take this sacrament with you, having been cut off for months from the privilege of the sanctuary." Having received it, he repeated the Lord's Prayer, and pronounced the benediction himself. Doubtless he found "the cup" to be a cordial to his spirit. It was of this "peace" he whispered, when dying, "made through the blood of the cross, by which God has reconciled all things unto himself," and of which the Holy Spirit gave him so precious an experience. By the Passover the Lord Jehovah was pleased to institute all his people into distinct families, and to bring annually to every separate household the sacred symbol of a lamb slain, to be offered by the head of the house, so that God might be forever known as the God of the families of the earth.

It was soon after this that death set in; but he was conscious to the last, though much with God. By and by, in the early morning, about the time that Jesus stood on the shore, he disappeared, as did Simon Peter, in company with his Lord.

So that at the time of his death he had made the full circle of life, as an arctic sun in midsummer, returning in the integrity of his soul to the original purpose and covenant of his youth. He that was the author was now also the finisher of his faith. The talents he had received from the Master he now returned with the demanded increase.

It was when but a boy he was sent to Cokesbury. There he found a new conscious personality, and pardon for his sins. His conversion was in his early manhood again greatly revived at Randolph-Macon College, and of the latter experience he usually spoke. He could not tell, he used to say, exactly, "but within two miles of the place, and two weeks of the time," when he was converted. The time and the space were none too much for one who was marking well the bulwarks and palaces of Zion, "that he might tell it to the generations following."

When he returned home from Cokesbury, he found his father removed to Alabama. There, to use his own words, he "was dug up again by another Methodist preacher and sent to college;" and he attributed the good fortune of his early education not so much to parental ambition as to the urgency of the preachers that he should be sent to Methodist schools.

He was singularly fortunate in his preceptors. The chancellor of this University gave him his first diploma, and has lived to see him graduate for the skies. Of his distinguished scholarship it may be said that, if he ever had better material, he never did better work. There was a thoroughness and steadiness of application in all the after-life of the student that must have reflected the teacher. The "Methodist Latin and the Methodist Greek" of Randolph-Macon, as well as the Methodist preaching, left its impress upon all the habits of his mind until the day of his death.—Who can fail to see it in the very trees and walks about this campus?

Of His Ministry. He was licensed to preach in Virginia. He joined the Virginia Conference in 1845, and was appointed to Williamsburg. In 1846 he was at the session of the General Conference—looking down from the gallery—then being held at Petersburg—"The most impressive sight I ever looked upon." I may add, by way of passing, that I too, as a visitor, was there from Alabama to receive its inspiration. He was transferred at the end of the year and appointed to Mobile. Afterward he was appointed to Demopolis and Columbus. He remained, in all, three years and a half in Alabama. Then he was sent to the Louisiana Conference, where he remained ten years. Then in 1858 he was transferred to Tennessee, where he continued to reside until now, excepting some four years—from 1862 to 1866—when he was stationed at Montgomery. The detail of his time and work has been so frequently stated that it need not be repeated. He had filled out at his death forty-four years of consistent ministerial labor.

In New Orleans. It was at his own suggestion made to me, and by the appointment of Bishop Paine, that he was sent to New Orleans and stationed at the "Elijah Steele" charge. The various reverses which Methodism had up to this time suffered in New Orleans, and the frequency of the epidemics of that city, one would have thought, constituted by no means an attractive field for a young preacher, then filling one of the best appointments in the Alabama Conference. But it so was—the Lord had turned his mind that way, which, as events showed afterward, was in the line of his whole subsequent career.

Providence arranges long in advance for answers to prayer, and did we know how long, we should not doubt that before the words of prayer were formed, oftentimes, as St. John says, the answer is ready. So the Lord was preparing two young people for blessing the world long before either knew the other. But by and by they were united in that sacred covenant which in its strength reaches to the foundations of the earth, and in its joy and beauty to the paradise of God. This "golden link" united intimately the fortunes of Southern Methodism with the princely Vanderbilts, father and sons, and gave to our church the largest foundation for Methodist educational training and culture now in the world.

Henceforth, by the way of New Orleans, this design was to be developed. The steps of it were the pulpit of Felicity Street Church, the charge of the colored churches there, and the editing of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. Directly after the General Conference at St. Louis, its delegates from Arkansas, Mississippi, Alabama and Louisiana Conferences appointed a committee, of which Dr. Hamilton was chairman, to publish an Advocate in New Orleans. This was done only so far as a specimen number. The publication failed for want of subscribers. Six months afterward Bishop McTyeire and a colleague started the publication of the present paper on their own financial responsibility, and offered it and its profits to the Conferences of the Southwest, but only the Alabama and Louisiana consented to recognize it as a Conference paper. Six years after several other Conferences adopted it as their organ. This he continued to edit for eight years. It proved to be the foundation of his connectional influence and position. He developed at a very early period in his ministry to the full proportion of his ability. His first sermons were nearly as good as his last. So it may be said of his editing. As a writer, he was one in a thousand. He could say exactly what was proper and demanded by the times, and he had the courage to say it. His style was full of thought, of facts, clear, sparkling, yet quiet and cumulative to the very last sentence. This period of the church was itself formative. The providential disruption of Methodism had ended a few years before in two Methodisms, North and South, but we were yet in the courts resisting the action of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church of 1848. Without knowing it, both Methodisms were being firmly crystallized, so as to hold harmless at the North and at the South all that had been secured by the devoted labor of Asbury, Coke, McKendree, Soule, and their noble coadjutors in the valleys of the West and on the slopes of the Atlantic. The country, too, was drifting steadily by the pressure of fanaticism, native and imported, into the terrible vortex of war. Constitutional checks and legislative methods were being borne down and swept away by the irresistible forces of passion, until presently the country stood helpless on the edge of the greatest conceivable folly—the killing of a million of her best citizens in order to effect negro emancipation. The South was at first comparatively helpless, but became strong in the righteousness of defending her altars and firesides. This was the atmosphere in which the young editor was perfected. Everything and person toward the last became more or less martial, but many were prayerful. We can not be surprised that his style was crisp, that he spoke straight on and out. Then words told when the gloves of courtesy were the gauges of battle.

The war was not the death of Southern Methodism. When it was all over, there were at least "seven thousand," who still abode. His years of editing were poorly remunerative—ranging from $250 to $800 per annum. His pastorate yielded, in those days of building and unifying, barely food and shelter. The several societies in his charge were at last harmonized into the one effective congregation of Felicity Street Church. The nine years that succeeded in which he was in New Orleans were remarkable for the perfect harmony which prevailed among our members and between the preachers. The fruit of peace was sown in peace, and Methodism grew stronger daily, as results show, for no city in all our Zion has sent out so large a number of men into the Southern itinerant ministry.

While he was building up a character for the paper, the ADVOCATE in turn was giving emphasis and breadth to its editor throughout Southern Methodism, until in 1858 he was elected to the Christian Advocate in this city of Nashville.

During these years of pastorate New Orleans was visited by epidemics of cholera and yellow fever, but the pastor and editor stood firm, and passed the terrible ordeal, both he and his family. The pastor who preceded him had died of the fever. At that time his ministry was highly instructive and spiritual. His sermons were fresh, and of excellent quality—a sound exegesis of the Word, and of faithful application to the hearer. None could more tenderly comfort the afflicted or guide the feeble; no one could track the sinner through all the windings of his heart, or lay open the depth of the carnal mind to its own consciousness more convincingly. He was greatly admired and loved by his people. The young were specially drawn to him.

As a speaker he seemed slow, but made fine progress in thought. He never allowed his words to get in advance of his ideas, no matter what time it took. He was remarkable for appositeness of illustration, for the exact word, and at times for a rare nicety of expression. Often there was deep pathos in the turn of his periods, and sometimes a quiet humor for which the hearer learned to wait.

In all attitudes in public he was never off guard. He always said and did the fit thing. His sense of propriety was the most uniformly correct and the most uniformly satisfactory of that of any public speaker I ever knew. He seemed always to be himself. Once only I remember an exception. It was at the Louisville General Conference, when the Report on Fraternity was recommitted. Even then few discovered it. His mind was extraordinary in its analytical power, and as much so in its power of arrangement. It worked at times with great rapidity. His power of gathering up for new position and for reply is seldom surpassed. To carry his first line was by no means the assurance of victory; there was always a second line of defense, and after that a citadel from which he was hard to dislodge; so that in debate, right or wrong, he was a very formidable opponent. But he was as seldom wrong in judgment as most men.

His memory for words was exact, his power for grasping and managing details remarkable. He carried the affairs of Conferences, circuits, and preachers in mind without seeming effort, and was rarely at loss for a name. His convictions were strong. It troubled him sorely to see that those whose opinions he valued differed from him, though not so sorely to differ from them. He was always cautious, often politic, at times insolvable. Yet he not unfrequently turned out of the path to give room rather than engage in conflict. Probably no one man suffered more, gained more, or lost more from reticence. It had at an early period of life become a habit of his mind; afterward, like William of Orange, he learned the value of silence in all great campaigns.

At the General Conference of 1866, held in New Orleans, the world was thought to have about come to an end, and that our church could only be maintained by being taken down and reconstructed. Dr. Green, of Tennessee; Dr. Myers, of Georgia, and Dr. McTyeire, of Alabama, came to the Conference with much harmony of view on this subject, which contemplated the election of twelve or more Bishops, the introduction of the laity into the Annual and General Conferences, the veto power of the episcopacy on constitutional questions, the doing away all limits to the pastorate and all probation to membership, all disciplinary obligation to attend class, the turning over all property held for our colored members to the A. M. E. Church, the introduction of District and Church Conferences. The name itself of the church was to be changed, the Discipline was to be revised, and a Wesleyan liturgy to be prepared for church service. It would seem as if only the Articles of Religion were to remain intact.

Hitherto the government of the church had been wholly in the hands of the traveling elders and deacons represented quadrennially in a General Conference. Now it was proposed to transfer a large part of this power to other departments of the church. Bishop McTyeire was in favor of most, if not all, of these changes. They were not all made, but some of them were, which showed that the Bishop was not excessively conservative. The great reverence felt for the men and the things of our Methodism, which had been so severely tested at New York in 1844, and which yet remained to us, was held in abeyance for the while by the majority of the General Conference. His advocacy of these proposed changes was indorsed by his election to the episcopacy at that Conference—one of a notable company, Bishops Doggett, Wightman, Marvin, and McTyeire, the beauty of our Zion—all of whom are now "fallen on sleep."

No man seemed better fitted for filling out all the lines of an ideal Methodist general superintendency, and he did fill them out as if especially designed for this difficult, delicate, and responsible office. I think this is well-nigh the universal verdict of the Connection. He maintained its honor and purity, its reputation for pulpit and administrative ability. He conserved its strength and enlarged its responsibility. While he did some things in all the many things of a superlative tendency of twenty-three years which to be done over aright possibly he done better, yet who could have done better? He leaves Methodism as strong and as united as he found it. What more could be required of her servants? Let us thank God for every man that lives and dies as well.

His Writings. His labor in formulating the disciplinary methods of the church in the "Manual" have done its membership and ministry a valuable service. No man endeavored more to institute faithfulness and system in guarding its purity.

His "History of Methodism" was a valuable contribution to Methodism on both sides of the Atlantic. It at least speaks for our Southern people; it puts to the record in a fair historical spirit a statement of the triumph of our Christianity in having raised in a single century barbarians of the dullest type to seats of honor among a civilized nation, and in having given them an experimental knowledge of spiritual things. It claims for our people the great achievement in all the centuries of rescuing two millions of negroes now living, besides the millions dead, from their degrading superstitions by the self-denying toil of hundreds of missionaries, who for a century preached on Southern plantations, circuits, and stations—a success never as yet surpassed in the missionary field.

We needed a writer capable of stating this great truth and of giving it a permanent setting—the labors of Southern Methodism among Southern slaves. This he was well able to do, having had charge for several years of more than two thousand colored members of our church in New Orleans. Other productions of his pen have been equally valuable and permanent.

Vanderbilt University. As an administrator of this responsible trust, he stands forth pre-eminent for the unchallenged integrity of his administration. A country lad, trained in a Methodist school and college, never having handled $5,000 at any one time in his life, having only passed through the financial training of an itinerant preacher, is entrusted with one and a half million of dollars! Let us consider this sight. Where, ye merchants, bankers and lawyers, where are you, that have not failed in forty years? And ye office-holders of the last hundred years, yourselves so hard to hold, though aided by so many checks, personal and other, where have you seen so much clear cash passing through the fingers of a man, and none of it, no, not a dollar sticking to them? Not this only, but none wasted, none wanting. Other great foundations have been watched by the wisest, but have crumbled under the reverses, the earthquake of the stock-market, and the general disturbance of financial centers, or have been insured to their downfall. But here is at least one example of financial integrity, centering in the absolute will and honesty of one man. We are not called to apologize for any lack of experience, or any other lack in our noble brother; he has done better than the best. Handling more money and controlling more patronage than Mr. Wesley, he has left behind him as conspicuous honesty and as faithful a record. Our people are fond of contemplating men who die poor, if they be in the ministry; and we may thank God for so excellent a treatise on covetousness as we find in the rounded life of Bishop McTyeire.

But in the founding of this University the church was singularly fortunate in the conjunction of three such persons as the Commodore, the Bishop and our venerable Chancellor, and in the concurrence of their several abilities to its accomplishment. Usually the larger the projection, and the more ample the funds, the slower the progress to completion; but in this instance the purposes of Commodore Vanderbilt were realized in a very few years, and the University was rapidly brought to its full working completeness. As Bishop McTyeire says in his will: "In a decade has been done what we hardly looked for in a century; it is of the Lord I verily believe." In which I am sure we all concur this day.

It is largely due to the wisdom of the founder that it is so. In his selecting the right man, and in his giving him full power, securing to him almost an absolute control of the whole scheme—the capacity of the Bishop for this large and delicate responsibility, now universally admitted, vindicates the excellent judgment of the Commodore. When we consider how much this University has already accomplished, and see its graduates in all departments of honorable pursuit in the Church and in the State; when we see more especially the men it has sent out into the circuits, stations and missions of our Southern Methodism in all parts of the country and in foreign fields, we feel that it must have had its rise in the good providence of God.

The noble patriotism of its founder should be held up for honorable recognition by all people in all parts of the Union—so well stated in his last communication to the Board of Trust, in which he approves the organization of the University with its six departments: "And if it shall through its influence contribute even in the smallest degree to strengthen the ties which should exist between all geographical sections of our common country, I shall feel that it has accomplished one of the objects that led me to take an interest in it." These words are as noble as they are modest. And they doubtless awaken an approving response in all our hearts. Did we need any additional stimulant to our duty in conserving this trust, we shall find it in the last wish expressed by Bishop McTyeire in his "Suggestions Concerning Vanderbilt University: 1. That all the Bishops exercise steadily and constantly their charter rights as members of the Board of Trust, directing and controlling. 2. That the religious character of the University be emphasized always. Insist on this. The institution is in care of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.....I hope for grace in my dying hour to give up the church and the University. May it please the Master for my place in each to provide a wiser, stronger, holier, more useful servant than I have been. Amen!" Now, by the blessing of God, I speak for myself and colleagues. We shall indeed be mindful of these impressive words of the Bishop, coming, as they do, from his dying chamber; we shall conserve the Vanderbilt University to Methodism, and we will rally our beloved Methodism to the Vanderbilt University; and this we will continue to do by all proper means at our command. May it ever have as wise and faithful a president, chancellor, and Board of Trust as it has had during all its history to the present hour.

The End. The full, well-rounded life of Bishop McTyeire ends where it began—a faithful servant of his Lord. Let us thank God for this able and pure man. "More and more I thank the Lord," he writes to a friend, "for casting my lot with Methodist preachers, and making their work my work. Only one wish remains, and it is best expressed by the Wesleyan hymn which Dr. Summers used at the funeral of Bishop Wightman:

"Ready for all thy perfect will,
My acts of faith and love repeat,
Till death thy endless mercies seal,
And make the sacrifice complete."

Thank God that he died in full possession of his faculties, and among those he loved best; that he died with the Church and this University on his heart, and only consigned it to God and his brethren when his feet touched the Jordan.

Let us commend those who were so dear to him to the watchful love of the church. Above all, let us expect to greet him in heaven in the unabated strength of a redeemed manhood.

If one asks for his monument, like the epitaph of Sir Christopher Wren, in the crypt of St. Paul's Cathedral, might not inaptly be chiseled upon the granite monument in this campus, where the honored dust of our brother sleeps—

Si monumentum requiris, circumspice.

"The Lord buries his workmen and carries on his work."

From the Work.

INDIANOLA, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: You, as all the other preachers, know what the first year in the itinerancy means. This is my first year, and it seems that God has made me one of his favorites in putting me in one of the broadest, best fields, laden with the wealth of nature, to take for his people and his ever-growing kingdom. Bro. Grant has told you of our District Conference and the zeal of our preachers in this part of the great delta; so we will speak of what Indianola is doing. We have collected more than $800 for church purposes this year, and expect to complete one of the nicest churches in the district before next Conference. We have received into the church twenty-three, and expect to receive twice as many more. The Rev. Jee Jones has been with us a week, and, like his brother Sam, preaches with wonderful power and simplicity. Before he came to us it seemed that every mind was turned toward Jesus. Our town will soon be able to live without whisky, dancing, gambling and cursing. The people are growing up into Christ, and we are working to get higher every day.

Bros. J. H. Shumaker and O. L. Savage also gave valuable aid in our meeting, and endeared themselves to us and our people by their consecrated work.

With such a leader as Bro. R. B. Standifer and the seventeen preachers we have in this district, you may expect to hear something at next annual Conference. The ADVOCATE is one of our most intelligent and efficient helpers.

Let all the church pray one prayer for the preacher and people of Indianola circuit.

ROBELINE, LA.

MR. EDITOR: I am now with Bro. McVoy, at Robeline, preaching and working in a meeting. The Holy Ghost is honoring our work. The altar was filled on last night with men and women seeking Christ. Blessed be God, some have found him. One good indication of the meeting is that the most prominent citizens are moved and are coming to God. Our people have a beautiful church here, which was erected and paid for by the efforts of the indefatigable workor, Rev. R. S. Isbell. May he live to build many more like it. Bro. McVoy has hold of the people's hearts and sinners, old and young—and the outlook for a great ingathering of this work is good.

By the way, Mr. Editor, I have met a young lady here who has offered herself to the foreign mission work, and she was brought to Christ by your preaching—Miss Sallie Phillips is the young lady. She is consecrated, intelligent and pre-eminently qualified for that glorious work. You should feel proud of being a Doctor. No doubt you do.

Oriental Justice.

Dr. Henry M. Scudder relates a case of Oriental justice that can not be outdone for sharp and subtle discriminations even by a Philadelphia jurist:

"Four men, partners in business, bought some cotton bales. That the ruts might not destroy the cotton they purchased a cat. They agreed that each of the four should own a particular leg of the cat; and each adorned with beads and other ornaments the leg thus apportioned to him. The cat, by an accident, injured one of its legs. The owner of that member wound about it a rag soaked in oil. The cat, going too near the fire set the rag on fire, and, being in great pain, rushed in among the cotton bales where she was accustomed to hunt rats. The cotton thereby took fire and was burned up. It was a total loss. The three other partners brought a suit to recover the value of the cotton against the fourth partner who owned that particular leg of the cat.

"The judge examined the case, and decided thus: 'The leg that had the oil rag on it was hurt: the cat could not use that leg, in fact, it held up that leg, and ran with the other three legs. The three unhurt legs, therefore, carried the fire to the cotton, and are alone culpable. The injured leg is not to be blamed. The three partners who owned the three legs with which the cat ran to the cotton will pay the whole value of the bales to the partner who was the proprietor of the injured leg.'"—Miss. Review.
